Mr. SMOOT. I should very much prefer, only I will say to the Senator, to conclude my speech, and then I shall answer any question that any Senator may desire to ask.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the subject which I am discussing is of sufficient importance to be stated and discussed in consecutive order, for until the administrative features of the bill are really understood it seems to me that we had better not discuss the rates which are proposed to be imposed by the bill.

II.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THESE PROPOSALS.

Senators will, no doubt, have asked themselves whether or not it is constitutional to grant these powers to the President. Many statutes and decisions bear upon the question whether authority conferred by Congress upon the President to suspend or fix rates of import duties is a delegation of legislative power. Some of the statutes are reviewed in Field v. Clark (143 U. S. 649). This is the leading case upon the subject. The particular law in question in Field v. Clark was section 3 of the tariff act of October 1, 1890, which reads as follows:

That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of January, 1892, whenever, and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the Government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and uncured, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which in view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the product of or exported from such designated country as follows, namely. (Here follows an enumeration of the articles and duties.)

The power vested in the President was (a) to ascertain whether the laws of a foreign country imposing duties or other exactions were "reciprocally unequal and unreasonable"; (b) to suspend by proclamation the provisions relating to the free introduction of sugar, and so forth; (c) to cause duties to be levied, collected, and paid at the rates prescribed by the Congress; and (d) to decide the length of time such law could be justly suspended. Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking for the court in the Field case (at p. 694), referring to Locke's appeal (72 Pa. St. 491, 498), said:

> The proper distinction the court said was this:
> "The legislature can not delegate its power to make a law; but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend."

An examination of other statutes and decisions makes it clear, in my judgment, that Congress may authorize and direct the President to increase or decrease rates of duty upon the ascertainment of a state of facts or conditions prescribed by law. The vesting of power in the President to ascertain the existence of prescribed conditions and to predicate duties thereon is within constitutional limitations.

I call attention to the following additional cases sustaining a delegation of power to the President to vary rates of duty:

(1) Congress may delegate power to ascertain facts. (The Aurora, 1813, 7 Cranch 382.).

The act of May 1, 1810, provided that the nonintercourse act of March 1, 1801, was to be revised in case Great Britain or France failed to revoke their edicts. The President was to declare the existence of this fact. This delegation of power was sustained by the Supreme Court.

Union Bridge Co. v. United States (1906) (204 U. S. 364); Hannibal Bridge Co. v. United States (1911) (221 U. S. 194); Rider v. United States (1899) (178 U. S. 251); Monongahela Bridge Co. v. United States (1909) (216 U. S. 177); Intermountain Rate cases (1913) (234 U. S. 475); Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. v. United States (1911) (191 Fed. 856); Mutual Film Corporation v. Industrial Commission of Ohio (1915) (236 U. S. 230).

The above cases seem to sustain the powers conferred upon the President to ascertain the facts specified in section 315. However, it is submitted that a different question is presented in the delegation of power to prescribe the rate of duty to be imposed. The following paragraph presents the cases in which similar questions were involved:

(2) Congress may delegate power to prescribe the rate of duty to be imposed.

This power differs in nature from the power discussed under paragraph (1), supra, for it is a power to prescribe rules of general future application. Delegations of similar powers have been frequently sustained by the Supreme Court. In fact, it is a fact of no slight importance that the court has never held such a delegation unconstitutional. In sustaining this grant of power the test of the Supreme Court is whether or not a sufficient standard has been established by the law so that the exercise of the power is properly safeguarded. The question is whether the 50 per cent limitation is a sufficient standard. The following cases would seem to uphold the delegation:

Butterfield v. Stranaham (1904), 192 U. S. 470, 493: Congress prohibited the importation of the lowest grades of tea by the act of March 2, 1897, and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to adopt uniform standards to determine such grades. The act was held constitutional.

American Sugar Refining Co. v. United States (1908), 211 U. S. 155: Congress imposed duties upon sugar in the tariff act of 1897. The Secretary of the Treasury was empowered to issue regulations and prescribe a method of determination. The court held that there was no constitutional question raised.

United States v. Grimaud (1911), 220 U. S. 506: The Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to make regulations for the use of forest reserves, and a violation of any such rule was made punishable by a fine and imprisonment. The constitutionality of the act was sustained.

Wayman v. Southard (1825), 10 Wheat. 1: The grant of power to the Federal courts to make rules was sustained.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & Nashville Railroad (227 U. S. 88): The Hepburn Act granting power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine "just and reasonable" rates was sustained.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co. (1912) (224 U. S. 194): The commission was given power to prescribe the manner in which the required annual reports were to be made. The provision was upheld.

United States v. Antikamnia Co. (1913) (231 U. S. 654): The Secretary of the Treasury was given power to make rules and regulations for carrying out the food and drugs act. The act was held constitutional and a regulation of the Secretary was sustained.

III.

The practical value of these elastic tariff provisions should appeal to both Members of Congress and business men. A frequent general revision of tariff schedules is undesirable both from the standpoint of Congress and from the standpoint of trade and industry. Nevertheless it is impossible to frame a law on the basis of conditions to-day which will fit the conditions of a few years hence, or even one year from now, as conditions are changing so rapidly. The near future will bring changes—in some cases radical changes—in economic conditions in the United States and foreign countries which can not now by any means be foreseen. Every report which we receive of industry in Europe, as well as in our own country, confirms the truth of this assertion. We are therefore confronted either with the possibility of another general revision of the tariff law in a short time or with the reduction to legislation of the President's admirable proposals.

IV.

AUTHORIZATION TO THE PRESIDENT TO INCREASE AND DECREASE DUTIES.

In the first place, then, it is proposed to make it the duty of the President to ascertain differences in conditions of competition in trade of such or similar products in the United States and competing foreign countries, which will enable him to find what rates of duty upon imported merchandise will equalize any differences which he may find to exist in favor of foreign producers in marketing such products in the United States. This is the rule which Congress should lay down for the guidance of the President in adjusting tariff rates. At the same time the law provides definite limits within which increases and decreases may be made, namely, not to exceed 50 per cent of the duty fixed in the law. In determining the differences referred to above the President is permitted to take into account comparative prices and wages in this country and abroad and other items in the cost of production of such or similar products in the United States and competing foreign countries. Upon the basis of this information and in accordance with the rule prescribed by Congress, it is proposed to permit the President to change classifications and forms of duties and to increase or decrease any rate of duty in the tariff act so that the will of Congress may be carried out in those cases where economic conditions have changed.

It is the desire of all parties that the tariff shall be equitable to the producer and consumer alike, and that it shall not unnecessarily burden our foreign commerce. But to achieve this result under world conditions existing to-day frequent modifications of rates are necessary. Present conditions can be met in a far better way through administrative action than by legislative enactment. In spite of our care and diligence and in spite of the expert help we have had, we can not claim that this bill, reported by the committee, is perfect. Probably even after it has been passed both by this body and by the House, it will still contain a few rates which will be found as soon as they are applied to be either too high or too low in respect to the conditions in the industries affected and to the related tariff rates. But whether maladjustments in the tariff rates are due to the fallability of the tariff makers or arise through a change in conditions, Congress can not be constantly considering individual cases calling for adjustment. In time it is the accumulation of such cases which force a general revision. Would it not be better to have these cases each handled as it arises and on its merits? There may be, on the one hand, cases where because of unusually severe competition the existing tariff rates are too low and justice to the American producer requires that they be increased; or, on the other hand, cases where the existing tariff rates prove too high and the consumer is entitled to a reduction. Congress should not hesitate to heed the warning of the President against "making our tariffs prohibitive."

I believe some misconception exists concerning the effect of the elastic-tariff provisions on business. The fear has been expressed that they will result in a degree in uncertainty to business. An appreciation, however, of the way in which the elastic tariff will operate should remove doubt upon this point. Changes of rates under it will never be sudden or arbitrary. I feel confident that as soon as these provisions are enacted into law the President will turn their administration to one of the regularly constituted agencies of the Government, probably the Tariff Commission. This agency will establish rules and regulations under which requests for changes in rates and classifications may be filed. In the proceedings which follow interested parties will have ample opportunity to be heard both in the presentation of testimony and in argument. The final decision in every case will rest upon a well-considered record. The mere investigation of cases of possible tariff changes should have no disturbing influence upon industry and trade, but, on the contrary, the adjustment of tariff rates from time to time should have a stabilizing influence and prevent the accumulation of cases which ultimately forces the upheaval of a general tariff revision.

Those who urge that the elastic tariff would result in instability apparently assume that the President would make changes in the tariff which are not justified by the facts. The principle laid down in the bill for the determination of the rates of duty is definite, and limits are fixed within which the rates may be changed either upward or downward. I think it can safely be assumed that the detailed information obtained through investigations by experts will never be so grievously at fault as to lead the President to proclaim changes in tariff rates which would work serious or permanent damage to an American industry.

V.

BASIS OF VALUATION.

The most discussed point in the tariff bill now before the Senate is the basis of valuation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I observe that the Senator is passing from the consideration of sections 315(a) and 316 to a different subject.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Is it the desire of the Senator to postpone discussion on the subject which he has just been discussing until he has concluded his entire address?

Mr. SMOOT. It is.

After long consideration the Finance Committee has based all ad valorem rates in this bill on the foreign values of imported merchandise. This decision was reached after long and careful consideration of three plans of valuation:

(1) The value of American products comparable and competitive with the imported article.

(2) The value or wholesale selling price of the imported article in the United States.

(3) The value or wholesale price of the imported article in the country of origin.

The first plan was abandoned early in the discussion, first, because of the limited number of exactly comparable domestic and foreign products; second, the difficulty and probable litigation involved in defining comparability to the satisfaction of importers, domestic manufacturers, and customs officials; and third, the disturbance to business while these difficulties were being adjusted.

To those unfamiliar with our import trade it is often assumed that because imported articles have the same generic name as domestic articles they are similar and competitive; as a matter of fact, however, relatively few products manufactured here and abroad are sufficiently similar to permit of price comparisons. Cotton cloth, chinaware, shoes, watches, and, in fact, most imported articles resemble the American product chiefly in name. The finish of a fabric, the decoration of a vase, or the adjustment of a watch render each article peculiar and unique in its field, and its price has little relation to other supposedly comparable products. In fact, even the trade-mark name on most articles of commerce has almost as much to do with their value as the physical qualities of the goods.

In view of these facts, any duties based on the prices of comparable American articles could be assessed with certainty on relatively few imported commodities.

If duties are based on American valuation, assuming an average margin of profit which might be inadequate for the importer to continue his business without materially advancing his price, the rate becomes higher than actually intended, and if the new price level the importer is forced to is more than his market can stand the duties may easily become prohibitive.

Assuming average landing charges of 10 per cent and average overhead and profit of 25 per cent is an extremely dangerous assumption upon which to base American valuation equivalent rates of duty.

Freight rates vary from a very small percentage to as high as almost the full value of the imported goods. Heavy and bulky commodities carry very high freight rates. Glass, for instance, might carry a freight rate of 40 per cent.

Overhead and profit items vary from a commission of 5 or 6 per cent to sometimes as high as 100 per cent upon landed cost. With these great variations in freight and profits the only rate that would accomplish its purpose would be upon a commodity where the actual freight percentage and the actual overhead and profit conformed, respectively, to the average of 10 and 25 per cent.

An ad valorem rate of 60 per cent, using these averages of 10 per cent for freight and 25 per cent for overhead and profit, can be reduced to an American ad valorem equivalent of 28 per cent, using the following arbitrary formula:

Formula.

	Per cent.
Foreign value	100
Freight, etc	10
Duty at 60 per cent of foreign valuation	60
Landed cost	170
Plus 25 per cent overhead and profit	42½
	212½
American valuation equivalent (60 per cent)	28

Sixty per cent of foreign value (100 per cent) equals 28 per cent of American value (212½ per cent).

In other words, on that basis the 60 per cent of the foreign valuation is equal to 28 per cent of the American valuation.

An actual application of this rate under varying conditions would mean rates, however, upon foreign valuation ranging from 46 per cent to 83 per cent. The following examples demonstrate this:

EXAMPLE NO. 1.

(33⅓ per cent overhead and profit.)

	Per cent.
Foreign value	100
Freight rate	10
Duty, at 28 per cent on American valuation (234 per cent)	65½
Landed cost	175
Plus 33⅓ per cent overhead and profit	58
American valuation	234

EXAMPLE NO. 2.

(50 per cent overhead and profit.)

	Per cent.
Foreign value	100
Freight rate	10
Duty, at 28 per cent on American valuation (285 per cent)	80
Landed cost	190
Plus 50 per cent overhead and profit	95
American valuation	285

EXAMPLE NO. 3.

(33⅓ per cent overhead and profit; freight, 40 per cent.)

	Per cent.
Foreign value	100
Freight, etc	40
Duty, at 28 per cent on American valuation (297 per cent)	83
Landed cost	223
Plus 33⅓ per cent overhead and profit	74
American valuation	297

EXAMPLE NO. 4.

(5 per cent commission.)

	Per cent.
Foreign value	100
Freight, etc	10
Duty, at 28 per cent on American valuation (164 per cent)	46
Landed cost	156
5 per cent commission	8
American valuation	164

Summary of above.

	Freight.	Profit.	American value.	Foreign value equivalent rate.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Formula	10	25	212½	60
Example No. 1	10	33⅓	234	65½
Example No. 2	10	50	285	80
Example No. 3	40	33⅓	297	83
Example No. 4	10	5	164	46

Thus it is seen that 28 per cent ad valorem, the American valuation equivalent of 60 per cent on foreign value, would result in American valuations varying from 164 per cent to 297 per cent.

One of the chief objections to adopting the American selling price of the imported article as a basis for the assessment duty lies in the danger of an importer reducing the selling price of any particular article of his line he desires to make closely competitive as against a comparable domestic article manufactured in the United States. This low-priced article is usually referred to by merchants as their "leader," and these "leaders" are usually sold at a very small margin of profit and sometimes under cost, as a bait to the trade for a greater volume of business.

The remaining items of the line are sold at varying profits advancing to the greatest profit that the importer can secure on the higher priced items of his line where the competition is not so great and where the values are not so well known to the trade as the values of the lower priced competitive articles are. American valuation permits the importer to sell his "leader" below the average level upon which the American valuation equivalent rate of duty would necessarily have to be based.

This can be demonstrated as follows: The rate of duty, under foreign valuation, set by Congress on any particular line to measure the difference between foreign and domestic costs would, let us say, be 60 per cent. In changing to the American valuation equivalent rate, if this change is to be made with any effort at accuracy, the average overhead and profit of the importer on this particular line and the average transportation charges should be ascertained. Investigation, let us say, shows that the average overhead and profit upon landed cost of this particular line is 25 per cent and the average freight 10 per cent. Items of the line are actually sold with profits ranging from 5 per cent low to 25 per cent average and 45 per cent high. The sum of these profits equals 75 per cent and the average would be one-third, or 25 per cent. The following examples demonstrate what would result under American valuation:

Actual overhead and profit, 25 per cent.

Leader (5 per cent).		Average (25 per cent).		High profit (45 per cent).
	Per cent.		Per cent.		Per cent.
Foreign value	100	Foreign value	100	Foreign value	100
Freight	10	Freight	10	Freight	10
Duty on American valuation, at 28 per cent	46	Duty on American valuation, at 28 per cent	60	Duty on American valuation, at 28 per cent	75
Landed cost	156	Landed cost	170	Landed cost	185
5 per cent profit	8	25 per cent profit	42½	45 per cent profit	83
Selling price	164	Selling price	212½	Selling price	268

It will be noted from the above examples that the "leader," the article in closest competition with the American manufacturer, is sold at a price expressed in percentage, 164 per cent, materially below the average price level—212½ per cent—which the American valuation equivalent rate of 28 per cent aims at. It will also be noted that the equivalent foreign valuation intended is 60 per cent, but the "leader" is only paying an equivalent foreign value rate of 46 per cent.

The overhead expenses and profits of an importer are always figures in a percentage based on his landed cost. He then adds the amount of such percentage to his cost to reach his selling price. Importer's costs are, first, the price he pays for his merchandise in the foreign market; second, the transportation charges to this country; and third, the amount of duty he has to pay. He must know these three elements of cost before he can add his overhead expenses and profit.

If the duty is to be assessed upon the selling price of the imported article, the element of the amount of duty is lacking and the importer can not ascertain his landed cost until he knows the amount of this duty. Inasmuch as the duty is to be based upon his selling price he is in further difficulty, for he can not ascertain his selling price until he knows his duty.

The importer in this situation is faced with rather an intricate problem in arithmetic. The way out of the difficulty is to take his selling price at 100 per cent. This selling price is necessarily made up of landed cost, duty, and the percentage item of overhead and profit added to landed cost and duty.

The importer knows his landed cost in actual money, but he only knows his duty and overhead and profit items in expressions of percentage.

Let us say duty is 30 per cent of his selling price, and overhead and profit, based on his selling price, is 40 per cent. The sum of these two percentage items is 70 per cent. The difference between 70 per cent and 100 per cent would necessarily equal the amount of his landed cost, a known amount. By dividing this percentage into this amount and multiplying by 100 the importer would then arrive at his selling price.

It can readily be seen that any system of valuation that requires such intricacies of arithmetic, and where the results are entirely dependent on unknown percentage items, would render a tariff entirely at the mercy of foreign shippers and importers in their manipulation of these fluctuating items.

Where duty is figured upon duty, and upon overhead expenses and profits in this country, and where these items necessarily vary to such an enormous extent, the dangers to the American manufacturer and to our revenues must be quite apparent.

No importer will pay duty upon profits and expenses in the United States if it is possible to avoid it. One simple device to avoid such payment would be for the foreign manufacturer to place an agent in the United States. This agent could probably sell in large quantities on a commission basis of 5 or 6 per cent, or he could be an employee of the manufacturer and his selling expenses in the United States absorbed in the overhead expenses of the foreign manufacturer. A simple device of this kind would render many of the rates based on average percentages of freight and profits ridiculous.

Where ad valorem rates of duty are imposed the principal safeguard to the revenue lies in the accuracy of securing true foreign values. Fundamentally no matter what system of value may be adopted, the ad valorem rate is always based upon the original foreign price or cost, either directly or changed into an equivalent.

Adding to such price or cost a lot of shifting and variable items, such as freight, insurance, brokerage fees, cartage, and selling and advertising expenses in the United States, and assessing the equivalent lower rate on such sum, accomplishes nothing. It merely multiplies uncertainties.

The proponents of American valuation advance as an argument in favor of this method of appraisement that American selling prices are more accessible and much more readily secured than prices in foreign countries. Foreign prices are often secured under great difficulties, but other difficulties would arise in determining the correct American selling value that would more than offset the obstacles in the way of securing foreign prices. As a rule, the market places in foreign countries are limited in extent. Foreign prices are secured at their manufacturing source and most foreign products are manufactured in some districts of foreign countries easily accessible. In securing distributing prices in this country the prices in many market places would have to be considered and these prices would differ, depending very much on locality. Factory prices are much more regular and stable than distributing prices.

Imported merchandise in the United States is sold to various trades—the jobbing, the small wholesale, the large wholesale, and the retail trades. The selling price of an importer to any of these trades might be construed by our courts to be a wholesale price, but there would be great variance in these prices, depending upon credits, discounts, quantities, and distance from the various markets, involving greater or larger transportation charges. The American selling price of the same commodity might vary considerably in the markets of the Pacific coast, the Middle West, or the Atlantic seaboard. These variable elements apparent in distributing prices render American selling prices extremely uncertain and unreliable as a definite or a fair and equitable basis upon which to assess ad valorem duties.

The second plan, that of assessing ad valorem duties on the American selling price of the imported articles, was abandoned largely because of the unstable basis for assessing duties growing out of the importers' profits when selling in the American market. In many cases the importers' margin was over 100 per cent of the foreign cost price; therefore, a reasonable duty assessed on a price which includes such a high margin would become inadequately low when importers' margins and, therefore, their prices are reduced under competition to a more normal figure. That is to say, a 25 per cent duty on a $2 price—$1 foreign cost and $1 importers' margin—yields a revenue of 50 cents, but if for one reason or another the importers' margin falls from $1 to 25 cents, the protection is 25 per cent of $1.25, or 31¼ cents, instead of 50 cents, the original protection sought.

This question of margins between the foreign price of an article and the importers' selling price in this country was recognized to be of such importance as to justify extensive investigation. Accordingly, the committee obtained an appropriation to be expended in the study of the customs records in New York and the books of importing and manufacturing firms in the United States for the purpose of determining the price differentials on all important items in the proposed bill which are subject to ad valorem rates.

The details of this investigation are published in the valuation report which is available to all those interested in the subject. As an example, however, of enormous variations in importers' margins for different products in the same schedule a few cases may be cited. The first 10 items of Schedule I in the valuation report show the following importers' margins:

Schedule I.—Chemicals, oils, and paints.

IMPORTERS' MARGINS.

Description of articles:	Per cent.
Lactic acid, technical, 80 per cent	19.8
Lactic acid, technical, 80 per cent	25.9
Formic acid, technical, 90 per cent	27.2
Formic acid, technical, 90 per cent	9.3
Oxalic acid, crystal, technical	19.6
Phosphoric acid, anhydrous, C. P	90
Gallic acid, medicinal, U. S. P	24.4
Atropine sulphate, U. S. P., an alkaloidal salt	19.05
Brucine sulphate, U. S. P., a by-product in the manufacture of strychnine. Brucine sulphate crystals, an alkaloidal salt	122.2
Colchicine, U. S. P., the active principle of colchicine semines	36

SCHEDULE II.—Wool, and manufacturers of.

IMPORTERS' MARGINS.

Description of articles:	Per cent.
Wool tops, 64s, combed in oil	13.2
Wool tops, 64s, combed in oil, Australia	2.8
Worsted tops, 56s, oil combed	3.7
Wool tops, 58s, oil combed	13.1
Wool tops, 60s, combed in oil	15.75
Wool tops, 70s, combed in oil	4.5
Worsted yarn, 2/26s of 56s tops; dry-combed in skeins; knitting yarn	3.38
Ladies' dress goods; all-wool ottoman; width, 40/41 inch; weight per linear yard, 3.69 ounces; warp, 96 ends per inch of 1/41 worsted; weft, 47 picks per inch of 1/41 worsted	12.5
Ladies' dress goods; cashmere henrietta; width, 40 inches; weight per linear yard, 3.18 ounces; warp, 67 ends per inch of 1/49 worsted; weft, 84 picks per inch of 1/62 worsted	37.1

The margins on the chemical products listed here run all the way from 9 per cent on one shipment of formic acid to 122 per cent on brucine sulphate. The margins in the wool schedule, however, run much lower than in chemicals, although the variation is large—from 2.8 per cent on wool tops to 37 per cent on ladies' dress goods.

From these examples it will be seen that there would be a great uncertainty in basing duties on American values which include so great a range of profits as those shown above. Reasonable duties on prices, including 100 per cent importers' margin, may be cut in half if for any reason the margin should fall to a few per cent.

In addition to the high margins of the importer, which may be greatly reduced in the future, especially if duties were levied on importers' selling prices, the price investigation referred to above showed that the ad valorem rates in the House bill were much higher in dollars and cents than they were meant to be. The House bill based the dutiable values, first on the wholesale price of the domestic article comparable to the imported article, and second, in the absence of such comparability, upon a constructive American value of the imported article; but in many, if not a majority of cases, the American prices were determined not by actual investigation but by derivation from the foreign selling price. The formula used was simple and may be illustrated as follows: Assume that a 50 per cent duty on foreign value is found, after due investigation, to be proper. Then for each $1 of foreign cost add a duty of 50 cents. This $1.50 divided into 50 cents (the desired specific protection) equals 33⅓ per cent—the proper duty on the American selling price of the same or comparable article. It will be observed that this calculation allows no profits, expense, nor transportation charges to the importer, a situation which has given rise to the belief that the ad valorem rates in the House bill are higher than necessary for protection.

Mr. KING. And, of course, if my colleague will permit me, if the American valuation should prevail the duties would be greatly increased. Is not that self-evident from the Senator's argument?

Mr. SMOOT. If the House duties prevail they would be higher than the duties on the foreign valuation basis reported by the Senate committee.

After it was determined by an examination of the importers and customs records that the ad valorem rates in the House bill were too high because they made no allowance for importers' margins and transportation charges, and that, on the other hand, rates based on American values which included actual importers' margins would be too low, a medium ground was sought which allowed 25 per cent for importers' margins and 10 per cent transportation and landing charges in the conversion of rates from foreign to American values, or vice versa.

For purposes of illustration a table showing the rates of foreign values ranging in multiples of 5 from 5 to 100 per cent is shown, together with the equivalent duty on American valuation under an assumed profit and overhead to the importer of 25 per cent and landing charges of 10 per cent.

(Basis: Landing charges, 10 per cent; profit and overhead, 25 per cent.)

Foreign selling price, per cent.	Landing charges, per cent.	Duty rate, per cent.	Total landed cost, per cent.	25 per cent profit, per cent.	American selling price, per cent.	Equivalent duty rate, per cent.
100	+10	+5	=115	+28.75	=143.75	3.48
100	+10	+10	=120	+30.00	=150.00	6.67
100	+10	+15	=125	+31.25	=156.25	9.60
100	+10	+20	=130	+32.50	=162.50	12.31
100	+10	+25	=135	+33.75	=168.75	14.82
100	+10	+30	=140	+35.00	=175.00	17.14
100	+10	+35	=145	+36.25	=181.25	19.31
100	+10	+40	=150	+37.50	=187.50	21.34
100	+10	+45	=155	+38.75	=193.75	23.23
100	+10	+50	=160	+40.00	=200.00	25.00
100	+10	+55	=165	+41.25	=206.25	26.67
100	+10	+60	=170	+42.50	=212.50	28.24
100	+10	+65	=175	+43.75	=218.75	29.72
100	+10	+70	=180	+45.00	=225.00	31.11
100	+10	+75	=185	+46.25	=231.25	32.43
100	+10	+80	=190	+47.50	=237.50	33.69
100	+10	+85	=195	+48.75	=243.75	34.87
100	+10	+90	=200	+50.00	=250.00	36.00
100	+10	+95	=205	+51.25	=256.25	37.08
100	+10	+100	=210	+52.50	=262.50	38.10

These calculations are simple and run as follows: If the foreign price is $1, landing charges 10 cents, and the duty 5 cents, the total landed cost is $1.15; 25 per cent on the landed cost is 28¾ cents. This amount added to $1.15 equals $1.43¾, the American selling price of the imported article. This selling price divided into 5 cents, the assumed rate of duty on foreign value, gives 3.48 per cent as the equivalent duty on the American value of the imported article. Proof of this calculation is furnished by taking 3.48 per cent of $1.43¾, which equals 5 cents, the duty sought.

A bill based on American values was drawn on the basis of this calculation, but after due consideration it was abandoned, because of the great divergence of actual importers' profits and expenses from the assumed 25 and 10 per cent. Goods imported on a 5 per cent basis would be inadequately protected when the rate was determined on an assumed 25 per cent margin, but goods imported at 50 per cent margin—as some of them must be to yield a fair profit—would be overburdened by the duty.

The only alternative to this arbitrary way of converting rates based on foreign values into rates on American values is to take the bill item by item and determine a normal price differential between the American and foreign product. Obviously under the present disturbed condition of the industry no such normal difference can be found.

The proposed bill, however, does provide for this method of basing rates on American valuation in that it gives the President power, after due investigation of particular cases, to change the basis of duty from the foreign to the American selling price. Such a change, if any, will not be made suddenly, however, for the law as a whole, to the great disturbance of industry and our customs administration, nor by schedules, nor even by whole paragraphs in some cases, but only for particular commodities or groups of related commodities when it is found, after a detailed investigation, that the American value of such or similar articles is a more certain basis for assessing duties than the foreign value of such articles.

I am convinced of the wisdom of the decision reached by the committee on the subject of valuation. Nothing could be more disturbing to business conditions than a revolutionary change in the basis of valuation. Business conditions to-day are sufficiently unsettled, and it should be our object to retain all factors possible which will contribute to stability.

American valuation has made a peculiar appeal to many people who do not understand it because it carries the label, "American." Naively, many persons have assumed that if it is a choice between something "American" and something "foreign" they, of course, prefer the former. This distinction has nothing whatever to do with the merits of the controversy and should have no weight in the final decision.

If any doubt existed in my mind concerning the undesirability of the wholesale adoption of American valuation it was removed by the so-called Reynolds investigation. This investigation, for which an appropriation of $100,000 was provided, was made by the Treasury Department to assist the Finance Committee in fixing tariff rates in case it was decided to base ad valorem duties on American valuation. The advocates of American valuation expected this investigation to demonstrate beyond doubt the desirability of their proposal. On the contrary, the facts brought out by this investigation demonstrated conclusively the inadvisability of breaking completely with the present practice of valuation in our customs service. It disclosed, as I have pointed out, wide fluctuation in importers' margins. It showed also that the value of imported articles in the American market fluctuated more widely than the value of articles in foreign markets. Manufacturers even who had first favored American valuation now hesitate to accept the Senate rates when converted to the American valuation basis. And well they may, for the Senate rates on foreign valuation offer them greater security than equivalent rates based on American values disclosed in the Reynolds investigation.

VI.

THE DYE EMBARGO.

The bill before the Senate provides—Title III, section 321—that the dye and chemical control act of 1921, approved May 27, 1921, shall continue in force for one year after the date of the passage of this act. It is further provided—section 315d—that the provisions of this embargo act may be extended by the President upon the finding of certain facts after a further period of one year. I regret that I feel called upon to express my disapproval of the continuation of this war measure. It may have had its justification in the period immediately following the armistice, but its incorporation now in a permanent tariff bill seems to me to be a serious departure in commercial policy. Furthermore, it is entirely unnecessary. The coal-tar chemical industries in the United States have grown strong, and those plants which are entitled to survive can do so with the protective rates provided in the bill supplemented by the provisions of the elastic tariff. When that schedule is reached, Mr. President, I shall show what effect those provisions will have. Inevitably certain of the weaker plants will be eliminated in competition with the stronger domestic concerns and the embargo will do little to help them and it will place an unnecessary burden on our large and important dye-consuming industries.

VII.

DUMPING AND OTHER UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION IN IMPORTATION.

Dumping and other unfair methods of competition in importation have been recognized as a menace, particularly under postwar conditions, to American industries. For this reason the bill permits the President to impose additional duties on goods imported into the United States by any person or corporation found guilty of dumping or other unfair methods of competition in importation, and in extreme cases he may prohibit such importations. If any doubt whatever exists as to the effectiveness of the tariff rates and the provisions of the elastic tariff as means to protect the coal-tar dye industries, the addition of this effective unfair competition statute should remove it. We have in this measure an antidumping law with teeth in it—one which will reach all forms of unfair competition in importation. This section (316) not only prohibits dumping in the ordinary accepted meaning of that word; that is, the sale of merchandise in the United States for less than its foreign market value or cost of production; but also bribery, espionage, misrepresentation of goods, full-line forcing, and other similar practices frequently more injurious to trade than price cutting.

The antidumping statute which we enacted as a part of the emergency tariff is not sufficiently broad in its scope nor flexible enough in its administrative provisions. Furthermore, an antidumping statute, I believe, should not be confused with customs administration. It should not, on the one hand, hinder the usual and fair importation of goods; but, on the other, it should prevent effectively those importations which are injuring unfairly American business. The administration of a dumping statute involves primarily a study of the effect upon American industries of foreign trade practices, and when any person is found guilty of any unfair practice tending to injure substantially or destroy an American industry he should be compelled to pay a penalty or be prohibited from bringing goods into the United States until such unfair practices are conclusively discontinued. This is provided for in the Senate bill.

In the economic uncertainty of the present, manufacturers in some lines of merchandise have asked for high tariff rates more because of what they fear than because of what they are experiencing. Such a law as I have suggested would assure American producers that they will not be subjected to unfair competition from countries abroad.

VIII.

ADDITIONAL DUTIES TO PREVENT DISCRIMINATION AGAINST AMERICAN INTERESTS ABROAD.

Finally, the elastic tariff provisions provided effective protection against discriminations for American overseas commerce. The law now in force and the present bill as it passed the House contain no provisions for penalizing discriminations against our exports. Foreign countries may now openly levy higher duties upon our exports than upon the same product when imported from other countries or they may discriminate by their tariff classifications; for instance, giving a separate classification to and levying a higher rate upon cottonseed oil than upon olive, palm, or other competing oils, or by so adjusting their automobile duties that those types of cars which we export are subject to the highest rates. At present the State Department can make diplomatic protests against such discriminations, but is equipped with no weapon against them. We now propose to arm the President with power to penalize them whenever they are found and whether the discrimination lies in the rates, the classifications, the customs regulations, or in the manner in which any of these are administered.

At the same time we do not intend that the United States should play among the nations the part of a man with a chip on his shoulder, and in recognition of the fact that there may arise cases, say, in the administration of quarantine laws, where a special restriction upon American trade may be reasonable, we have empowered the President to take action only against unreasonable discriminations. There are also special relations existing, for instance, between Spain and Portugal, which have the sanction of usage and which on other grounds it would not be reasonable to consider offensive discriminations. The President of the United States, of course, remains the judge of the reasonableness of any discrimination, and the presence in the law of the qualifying word "unreasonable" therefore in no way jeopardizes American interests. The maximum and minimum provision in the tariff act of 1909 was similarly qualified by the word "unduly."

We do not propose to reenact that penalty provision, because it was entirely too rigid. It was the well-known maximum and minimum provision which established maximum duties to be imposed against any country which did not accord to American commerce the same treatment which it accorded to the commerce of other powers. The late Senator Knox, when Secretary of State, administered this provision with the cooperation of the Taft Tariff Board and succeeded in freeing American commerce from many burdens imposed by foreign countries. But he found the provision unwieldy. There was only one penalty, and therefore it was not feasible to apply the statute in every case, just as it would not be feasible to use a rock crusher for cracking nuts. Senator Knox, therefore, in 1911 suggested a revision of the section to give it flexibility. Upon his revision our proposed measure is based. It provides that the President may impose additional duties within certain limits on the whole or any part of the commerce of any foreign nation which refuses to American commerce treatment equivalent to that accorded to other countries.

This provision defines the scope of the President's action on the one hand, but on the other hand it enables him to penalize any offending country by imposing new or additional duties upon those particular products thereof upon which additional duties will be least burdensome to American consumers and most detrimental to the foreign producers or manufacturers. For Congress to attempt to specify in advance the amount of the penalty and the articles to be penalized, regardless of the country, of the kind and amount of the discrimination, appears to us futile and unwise. The measure which we propose will allow the President and his expert advisers to realize the ambition attributed in the opera to the Mikado—

> My purpose all sublime, I shall achieve in time,
> To make the punishment fit the crime,
> The punishment fit the crime.

We propose that the President shall penalize the foreign country only to the extent to which it discriminates against us. But we do not leave him without further powers in case the foreign country should maintain its discriminations or should undertake a tariff war against us. In that case we would authorize the President to go even to the extent of excluding entirely the products of the offending country. If need arose the President might thus employ the full economic strength of the United States. But again the provision is left flexible; the President can use the precise amount of pressure which he and his advisers determine to be most advantageous to the interests of the consumers and producers of the United States.

It will be observed that we have stricken from the bill as it passed the House sections 301, 302, and 303. These sections are based upon principles which we, after mature consideration, have found in conflict with, and far less useful than, those upon which we propose to base American commercial policy. We propose that the United States shall apply one tariff to all countries alike—with the natural exception of Cuba—and shall force all countries to give to American products treatment equal to that which they give to other countries generally. In conflict with this principle of equal treatment sections 301 and 303 of the House bill embody the principle of reciprocity treaties. These sections were based upon provisions of the acts of 1897 and 1913. The provision of the act of 1913 remained a dead letter, but under the act of 1897 a number of reciprocity treaties were negotiated.

The country has had also some experience along the line of reciprocity treaties whose negotiation was not affirmatively authorized by law. But a review of our history shows that these treaties, even when successfully negotiated and ratified, have yielded meager results. One of the most important of these treaties and the only one now in force is our treaty with Cuba. At first glance it might appear that this treaty has greatly stimulated our exports to that island; but when consideration is given to the general growth of our export trade during the period in which the treaty has been in force, and particularly to the development of our exports to the other Caribbean countries, with the additional consideration of the stimulus due to the huge investment of American capital in Cuba, it becomes evident that only a minor part of our increased exports to Cuba can be attributed to the reciprocity treaty.

This comparatively small result has been obtained only by the remission of duties on Cuban sugar to the extent of upward of $50,000,000 during those years in which the Tariff Commission has shown that the benefit of the remission of duties inured to the Cuban grower and not to the American refiner or consumer. And even if it could be shown that the United States has gained or is likely in the future to gain from its reciprocity treaties some net profit above the cost of its concessions, there are other objections to such treaties, objections, so to speak, both external and internal. The concessions granted to one country constitute discriminations against other countries, and while the statesmen of foreign countries generally understand that the American interpretation of the most-favored-nation clause permits these mutual and reciprocal concessions, the mass of the people either do not understand or consider that our action is none the less an unwarranted discrimination. The negotiation of these treaties, their discussion, and their denunciation are likely to promote ill will rather than good will between the countries concerned, as may be illustrated from our relations with Canada. Friendly as that country is, our commercial relations with her would unquestionably be better had we never had any reciprocity negotiations with her.

Internally reciprocity treaties create difficulties because they lower the rates and disturb the balance established between protected industries. There are, no doubt, exceptions, but normally the concessions which the foreign country is most desirous of obtaining are those which allow successful competition with American industries or those which, because they affect only part of the supply of necessary imports, reduce the revenue of the Government without relieving the American consumer. When these treaties require ratification by the Senate or approval by Congress—and the acts of 1897 and 1913 show the unwillingness of Congress to allow these treaties to come into force without such approval—they open up anew the whole tariff controversy. As an illustration of this, I need but recall to your mind the discussion of the Kasson treaties negotiated under section 4 of the Dingley Act.

Section 302 of the tariff bill as it passed the House of Representatives is not only objectionable from the standpoint of policy, but in addition it will be in practice ineffective. It authorizes the President to impose penalty duties on specific products of a country which imposes duties or other exactions, and so forth, upon "like or similar" products of the United States "which in view of the duties imposed thereupon when imported into the United States he may deem to be higher and reciprocally unequal and unreasonable." Paragraphs 369 and 371 of the House bill contain provisions similar in principle to be applied automatically by the customs authorities to automobiles and motorcycles. Consistency requires that we strike out these provisions.

The purpose of section 302 and of these paragraphs in Title I was not to obtain for the United States treatment in foreign markets equal to that accorded third countries, but to force the lowering of foreign rates which, although applicable to goods imported from all countries, seem to American export interests undesirably high.

There are many reasons why these provisions should be excluded from the bill. In the first place, the levying of half a dozen different tariff rates upon identical products simply because they originate in half a dozen different countries is contrary to our commercial treaties. We have pledged to many countries to levy upon no products of theirs any higher or other duty than that which we levy upon the like product of the most-favored nation. It is true that under the American interpretation of this clause we may grant concessions from the established rates if other countries compensate us by equivalent concessions. But the provisions under discussion do not contemplate any concessions from our established rates, nor do they contemplate necessarily any special concessions to us by any foreign country.

Our lowest rates are to be given to certain countries without their making any concessions and are to be extended to other countries only if the latter reduce their rates, either to us or generally by varying amounts. The enactment of these provisions would therefore be followed immediately by protests from foreign countries. These protests would be armed with precedents from the history not alone of European States but of the United States as well, for the United States has hitherto maintained that such clauses in our treaties prohibited foreign countries from levying, as the result of general legislation, diverse rates of duties—except, of course, as the lowest rates were applied to American products and American ships. The State Department has not changed its views and considers the provisions under discussion clearly contrary to the most-favored-nation clause of our commercial treaties.

This conflict with our treaties should be conclusive against the enactment of these provisions. But I regret to say that even in this body there are men upon whom the treaty obligations of the United States seem to rest but lightly. Their attitude seems to say, "Let us legislate as we please and let the State Department worry about the complications; let all the world accuse us of being treaty breakers so long as our constituents vote for us." For the benefit of these men I shall add five reasons of policy why these provisions should be omitted from the bill.

First of all, section 302 of the House bill could operate only in cases in which we both export to and import from the same country the same or similar articles. That is obviously not the normal course of trade. Exporters have asked us to do something to induce certain South American States to reduce their duties. We should like to do so, but this section is useless for that purpose, since there is nothing which we export to South America which is similar to the products we import from those countries. In our trade with Canada and the industrial countries of Europe there are a few cases in which we both export and import similar articles to and from the same country; but unless the courts will give a very broad construction to the word "similar" the total trade which could possibly be affected by the application of section 302 of the House bill is very restricted. That a measure has a limited field of possible application is not, of course, by itself a strong argument against it; but where the measure is certain to involve us in international difficulties the scope of the measure becomes a weighty argument.

Secondly, even where this section is applicable there is no reason to suppose that it will effect its purpose of reducing the foreign tariff rate. Take, for instance, the case of the duties upon automobiles, in regard to which the House bill made the application of this principle mandatory, though I shall call it rather a method or device than a principle. The manufacturers have asked for a rate of only 25 per cent ad valorem; they do not fear extensive competition in the American market. On the other hand, in 1920 they surmounted a barrier of 35 per cent and sold $44,000,000 worth in Canada alone. Canada is a small country, and this amount represents very serious competition. Do you think that the Canadians are going to lower their protective barrier and expose a market which it may well be argued is already insufficiently protected merely for the sake of trying to invade the market of the country which makes more automobiles than all the rest of the world put together? Similarly, in other cases the application of section 302 would not be likely to result in a reduction of foreign duties on articles which we export in large quantities.

The more we export of the given article the more likely it is that our duty thereon will be low and that section 302 might be applicable; but if a foreign country finds a high duty necessary to protect that industry the more we export of the article the more certain is that country to maintain that protection against us. Needing protection in the home market they surely can not compete in ours. Then why should they expose their own industry merely to obtain a reduction of our tariff rate? It follows that the only case in which it could be reasonably expected that section 302 would be successful in reducing foreign rates is in respect to products of which we import larger quantities than we export. Therefore, the very condition upon which the successful application of the device rests shows its futility—it is a device for promoting our export trade in those products with which we can not supply our own demand.

Another reason for striking out section 302 of the House bill and the similar provisions relating to automobiles and motor cycles is that, in so far as they could be applied, they would discriminate first of all against Canada, Great Britain, and France. These countries are most friendly to us. Germany, on the other hand, would not be affected—except as she would obtain a competitive advantage through the higher duties on other automobiles.

The danger of retaliation is a fourth reason for striking out the measures under discussion. In the defense of the American standard of living we have proposed in this bill many substantial rates of duty, rates higher than those generally found in Canada, Great Britain, Japan, and the countries of continental Europe whose standards of living do not call for such high protection. It would, therefore, not be wise for us to enact this formula for measuring our tariff rates by those of foreign countries without a serious examination of the scope and effect of the retaliation to which we might be exposed should foreign countries adopt the same device.

Finally, we have rejected these provisions of the House bill because we do not believe that the amount of a tariff rate of a foreign country is a proper basis for the determination of our own rate. This is contrary to the fundamental doctrine that no country has a right to object in any way to the tariff rates of another country which, in the exercise of its sovereignty, it considers necessary to impose for revenue or for the purpose of encouraging the development of industry. From the American standpoint, for example, a duty, of say 20 per cent, may be deemed to be sufficient for the production of revenue or for the protection of industry, but a foreign country may wish to impose upon "like or similar" products a higher duty and have very good reason from its standpoint for doing so. Certain countries may very naturally feel that because of the less advanced stage of their industrial development they need relatively higher duties upon certain products, e. g., automobiles, than are imposed by the United States. Nevertheless, this section would authorize the President to impose a penalty duty upon the foreign country for its "impertinence" in adjudging that its manufacturers need a higher rate of protection than ours.

This country has always affirmed that its rates were based upon the needs of domestic producers and manufacturers and of the public revenue; that these were purely domestic questions and of no concern to any foreign country. As long as we did not discriminate against any country but made the same rates applicable to all, our position has been that no foreign country had any just cause for complaint or any reason for imposing any penalty upon our commerce. For many years our State Department has maintained this position against France, which has insisted that our high rates on wines, laces, and articles of fashion and the fancy trade constituted in themselves unfavorable or discriminatory treatment of French trade. If we should enact section 302, we should be reversing our position, leaving our State Department in the lurch, and giving plausible support to the French claim that our products should be subject to the discriminatory rates of the French maximum tariff simply because our rates, though uniform, happen to be high on some of the most characteristic exports of France.

The Senate bill is drawn with the idea of penalizing any foreign country which discriminates against our commerce, but if that country desires to levy high customs duties either for revenue or for protection, we believe that the United States must recognize its unassailable right to levy such duties, and we should not attempt to penalize it because circumstances require it to give to a certain industry a higher rate of protection than that required in the United States.

In short, Senators, we would base the commercial policy of the United States upon the twin ideas of granting equal treatment to all nations in the market of the United States, and of exacting equal treatment for the commerce of the United States in foreign markets. We do not believe that the United States should pursue a general policy of special bargains and special reciprocity treaties.

Such bargains in the past have not brought the results hoped for, and alike in foreign and domestic politics they cause complications and bickerings. Nor do we believe that we should follow any such policy as that contained in the House bill, namely, the penalizing of foreign countries merely because they maintain certain rates higher than our own. This policy would be contrary to treaty. Its field of operation would be very limited, it would be ineffective within that small field, it would discriminate first of all against the countries which are most friendly, it would expose us to retaliation, and it would be an unwise reversal of the position for which the United States has consistently stood for many years. Both the policy of reciprocity treaties and that of section 302 of the House bill would lead to complicated and contentious international relationships. We stand for a simple, straightforward, friendly policy of equal treatment for all, with no discriminations against any country except as that country has first discriminated against us.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have listened to the remarks of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] with more than ordinary interest. He has been discussing some of the very important features of the bill. To these features I have given considerable thought and study, especially to that relating to the American valuation plan, and I wish to say that, in my judgment, the Senator from Utah has discussed that subject in a masterly way. I believe that his discussion demonstrates the inadvisability of the adoption of any such basis for an American tariff. I think his argument is conclusive upon the subject, and I not only heartily concur in his conclusion, but I wish to compliment him upon the magnificent way in which he has handled the subject and the very clear and lucid manner of the discussion,

Having come to the conclusion which the Senator from Utah has reached, and being so deeply convinced of the soundness of that conclusion, I am at a loss to know why the majority of the Senate Finance Committee has, by section 315(b), given to the President of the United States the right to adopt any such basis for a tariff. The majority of the Finance Committee have repudiated that, and have done so in a most vigorous manner, and may I ask the Senator from Utah to advise us why they are willing to repose an authority in the President to do a thing which the Senator has so vigorously condemned?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I intended to answer that question when a certain title in the bill was taken up and when I discuss the rates, but, succinctly, I will state to the Senator that there are certain items in the bill as to which a hundred per cent duty would not measure the difference between the German cost of producing and the cost of producing in the United States. The only way to protect the industries concerned in those items, which are small in number and small in size, is to give the power to the President which we have given.

If I had a blackboard here in the Senate Chamber I am sure I could convince the Senator from New Mexico that there are goods made in the United States which can not be protected in any other way. I was going to say frankly to the Senator when those schedules were reached just what the conditions are, and state frankly that I expect the President of the United States in those few cases to use the authority granted to him in section 315(b). I could at this moment call the Senator's attention to a few lines of goods. He has had experience enough in making a tariff bill to know what those lines are, and I think when his attention is called to them he will himself admit that 50 per cent or 60 per cent or 100 per cent will not be sufficient to equalize the difference in cost between Germany and this country.

I also want to say frankly to the Senator that that applies only to goods made in Germany, so far as I can call to mind now. I hardly think this is the proper time to discuss it in detail, but I assure the Senator that when those items are reached we will give him the figures, and we will give him the reasons why that action was taken.

I know the Senator is fair enough, if the information convinces him that that is the only way to reach it, to say so frankly to the Senate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am glad the Senator made that last remark. I am at a loss, however, to conceive of any case where it is necessary to change from the foreign valuation plan to the American valuation plan in order to protect any industry in this country, either reasonably or unreasonably.

It is true that in the investigation of the subject of rates which some manufacturers wanted to have placed upon certain commodities, it developed that those rates would have to be very high in order to give the degree of protection which the manufacturers wanted, but in no case, so far as I can recall, was it suggested that a rate could not be made which would be sufficient. The objection to naming a rate upon the foreign valuation was based solely on the argument that the rate would have to be so high that it would shock the public conscience.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not want to be unjust, I know. The rates were named because of the fact that conditions are changing so rapidly that the President ought to have power to reduce the rates, as well as to increase them, when conditions change.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I have been perfectly fair in presenting the whole subject matter, and I intend to be fair in every question that is discussed during the consideration of the bill. I have nothing to conceal. I am perfectly willing to make any statement that I know to be a fact, and therefore I will say to the Senator that that was not the reason, because I know, or I think I know, that as to some of the items I have in mind it will not be many years, and perhaps not two years, before we can name the rates. I want the power of the President to be exercised if it becomes necessary to save them, and then I want him to exercise that power in reducing the rates when necessary.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is evidently confused as to the real purport of my question. It is not a question of rates about which I am seeking light. What I want to know is why the basis of the rate shall be changed. I do not contend, nor do I want any inference to be drawn that I am saying, that the Senator from Utah is unwilling to fix any rate because of the amount of it. I made the remark which I did on account of the testimony of one of the witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMOOT. I misunderstood the statement of the Senator if he made it then as he makes it now. What the Senator desires to know is why the change in classifications from foreign valuation to American valuation was included within the power given to the President?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is precisely my question.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to be just as frank with the Senator on that matter as I was in the other case. On the basis of foreign valuation, with the items that appear in the bill, the 50 per cent increase would do no good at all. We might as well give the President no power at all as to give him only that power. The spread in certain items is so great between the foreign valuation and the American valuation that the only way we could protect at all by giving the President the power to increase to the extent of 50 per cent would be on the basis of the American valuation. We could not do it on the foreign valuation. We might as well not give him any power, because of the fact that it would not protect on the foreign valuation basis.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, if I understand the Senator, the purpose in conferring power upon the President to change the basis of classification is to enable the President to impose a duty which would be beyond 50 per cent of the foreign valuation?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely; and I want to say frankly to the Senator that there are cases to which the attention of the Senate will be called when we reach the schedule that will illustrate the situation. There are not many, as I said, there are very few indeed, but I know that no one wants to destroy an industry. I know the Senator does not desire to do so. I think that when we present to the Senate the facts they will convince everyone beyond any doubt that a 50 per cent increase on the foreign valuation would not save those particular industries.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to remind my colleague that in addition to the valuation which the President has the power to add to the foreign valuation there is the tax imposed by the bill itself, which is no inconsiderable one, in many instances being 50 or 60 or more per cent. So there would be the tax levied by the bill which comes from the Finance Committee plus the foreign valuation tax which might be levied by the President and which in many instances would make a tremendous tax.

Mr. SMOOT. I want my colleague to understand that I know that and I frankly admit it. There is no question about it. We will either have to do it or let these few industries die, and the question is whether we shall let them die or not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then the effect of that provision of the bill is practically to give to the President of the United States the power to fix tariff rates without limit.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not without limit. There is a limit of 50 per cent on the American valuation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That would be in addition to the rates fixed in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. It is 50 per cent increase of the rates in the bill on the American valuation.

Mr. OVERMAN. What rule is to be fixed by which the President is to act?

Mr. SMOOT. The rule is laid down in the bill itself. It covers the difference in wages in foreign countries and here and the conditions surrounding the industry not only in this country but in foreign countries. The bill itself specifically states what the rule shall be, and it is laid down in plain words.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator in his discussion to-day has called attention to the vast difference between the imposition of a rate on the American price plan and on the foreign cost or valuation plan. It seems to me that a rate of 50 per cent of the American valuation plan added to some of the rates in the bill would practically make the duty without any reasonable limitation whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not 50 per cent additional rate. It is 50 per cent of the rate named in the bill. That is the limit.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But after a change in the classification——

Mr. SMOOT. The rate in the bill applies after it is changed into the American valuation plan. The President has the authority to increase that rate 50 per cent. In other words, if it was a 10 per cent rate, it would then be 15 per cent; if it was a 30 per cent rate, it would then be 45 per cent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator has illustrated, I think, just what that means, and I should like to know if I am right about it. He has estimated that ordinarily the transportation charges on foreign commodities to this country are about 10 per cent. He has shown us in a very graphic way the variation in the overhead and profits of the importer, and I think he has figured that those on an average are about 25 per cent. Let us see what the result of it would be. Let us assume an article which sells in the United States at $8 and see the difference between the tariff duty levied under the American valuation plan and the tariff duty levied upon the foreign valuation plan.

An article sells for $8. If the tariff rate is 50 per cent, that would mean a $4 tariff. The Senator allows 25 per cent as the overhead and profit of the importer. That would be another $2. He allows another 10 per cent as the transportation charges, which would be 80 cents. So of the $8 he has taken up $4 of it in duty, he has taken up $2 of it for overhead and profit of the importer, and he has taken up 80 cents for the cost of transportation. In those three items he has taken up $6.80.

Therefore the article which costs only $1.20 in the foreign country must sell for $8 in this market in order to pay the 50 per cent tariff under the American valuation plan. He has $4 of tariff under that plan. But if it were 50 per cent upon the foreign valuation plan he would have only 50 per cent of $1.20, which would be 60 cents. We have there a variation ranging from a 60 per cent tariff upon an article to $4 upon the same article, and that is what is meant by the proposed change from a foreign to an American valuation plan. When anyone talks to me about giving the power to the President to change the duty from 60 cents to $4, I say that for all practical purposes it is an authority without limit.

Mr. SMOOT. I must disagree with the Senator. The statement he has just made is absolutely without foundation, so far as the bill is concerned. If there are 10 per cent landing charges and if there is a 25 per cent profit with a 50 per cent duty on foreign valuation, it would equal a 25 per cent duty on American valuation. It is difficult to visualize by words just how it works out, but if the Senator will follow me, I will endeavor to show him. I ask him to work it out with his pencil, and I believe he will find that I am correct.

The landing charges are 10 per cent. The rate of duty is 50 per cent. If the article is $1, that makes $1.60. Twenty-five per cent profit on $1.60 is 40 cents. That means that the American selling price is $2.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator's only criticism upon the illustration which I gave then, I take it to be, that in my figures I put the 25 per cent profit of the importer and his overhead expenses upon the selling price, whereas the Senator would only have that apply upon the landing price plus the duty.

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is not the only difference. Let me carry my illustration to its conclusion. Twenty-five per cent of the landing cost will be 40 cents, which would make the American selling price $2. Twenty-five per cent of $2 is 50 cents. Fifty per cent of $1 is 50 cents. So they are equal in that case. The transfer of an article from the American valuation plan, where the rate of duty is 25 per cent, to the foreign valuation, with 10 per cent landing charges and 25 per cent profit, equals a 50 per cent tariff on foreign valuation. That is all there is to it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right about that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will take any other figure.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But I will ask the Senator to point out the defect in the illustration which I gave, if he can.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no such case as that to which the Senator refers that would ever happen. It is impossible for it to happen. So why take a case and work it backwards upon a basis that can not be figured out? The instances cited are mathematically correct or they are mathematically wrong. If the Senator desires, I will have made for him a chart showing the rate figured both ways, with a 2½ per cent landing charge, a 5 per cent landing charge, a 10 per cent or a 40 per cent landing charge; and the profits beginning with 10 per cent and running on up to 15 per cent, 25 per cent, 30 per cent, 35 per cent, 50 per cent, or even higher, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will say to the Senator that I have such tables myself, and I have gone through them very carefully; but the bill provides that the President may change the basis so that thereafter these duties shall be based upon the American selling price. Now, let us stay with the illustration which I gave. The American selling price, we will say, is $8; the rate of duty is 50 per cent. I will ask the Senator from Utah how much the duty would be in that case?

Mr. SMOOT. In such a case as that the duty would be $4.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, if the importer charges 25 per cent of the American selling price for his overhead and other expenses, how much would that be?

Mr. SMOOT. The American importer never pays a duty upon the American selling price; that is a thing that is never known; that is a thing he could not do. That is where the Senator from New Mexico is wrong.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Well, the Senator speaks with a good deal of assurance, and I hesitate to express any thought differing from his; but some people calculate it one way and some in another. The overhead charges, according to the Senator from Utah himself, vary from 5 per cent to 100 per cent. Instead, then, of saying that the particular importer adds 25 per cent on the American prices of $8, or $2, for his overhead and other expenses—and we might take some other percentage and bring about the same result—suppose the importer charged 50 per cent for his overhead and profit; then that would be equal to about 33⅓ per cent; but, whatever it is, I will ask the Senator, according to his own figures, how much overhead and profit would be allowed to the importer on an article which sells for $8? What does the Senator think the average would be?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I could not state that until I knew at what price the importer was going to sell the article for in the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I stated that the importer was to sell the article for $8.

Mr. SMOOT. Why cite an impossible case? If the cost to the importer of the article delivered in America is $8, and then he has to add to that price for his overhead and profit, and the American article sells for $8, everybody knows that he could not sell it. So it is not appropriate to bring such a case before the Senate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then I will figure the matter according to the Senator's own plan. The Senator says that the importer fixes his overhead and profit on the landed cost of the article after the duty is paid; that is the way the Senator figures it. Now, let us figure it in the same way and see how much of a variation there is between these plans.

The duty is $4; the cost of transportation is 10 per cent of the selling price.

Mr. SMOOT. Whose duty is $4? The duty is not being collected on the American valuation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But the Senator's bill is proposing to give the President the right to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; in certain cases the President could do it under this proposed law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to show the extent of the power which it is proposed to confer upon the President; that it amounts almost to conferring upon him the right to fix the tariff rates without limit, or, anyway, without any reasonable limit.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico asks me a question in reference to an article which sells in America for $8.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will ask the Senator as to an article selling for $8 in the American market, the tariff on which is 50 per cent of the American selling price, to figure in his own way what was the original cost of the article in the exporting country?

Mr. SMOOT. No living man can tell what the cost of the article was in the foreign country; nobody has ever claimed to be able to do that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. How much could it cost? What would be the maximum foreign cost in order to enable the exporter to make his usual profit and pay 50 per cent duty based upon the American selling price?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if he were to make a profit of 25 per cent and the article sold for $8, which is the American price, the landing cost in this country would be $6.40; 25 per cent on $6.40 would be $1.60, which would make the total $8. The Senator is now trying to figure on a case that is absolutely impossible; it simply can not happen that when the American article sells for $8 the foreign article in competition is going to pay a duty of 50 per cent on the American valuation and allow the importer to pay his overhead and figure any profit. That is preposterous; it can not be done.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Now, Mr. President, I will take the Senator's own mathematics for this proposition. So we have, then, on the article which sells for $8 a duty of $4, which must be added to the original foreign price. To that original foreign price must be added the cost of transportation, amounting to 10 per cent. So the result is that if the selling price is $8, $4 of it is duty, and the Senator has just figured out that the overhead and profit of the importer will be $1.60. In the illustration which I previously used it was $2, so that there is a difference of 40 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. I said that if the foreign article was delivered in America for $6.40, and the importer made 25 per cent profit, after figuring his overhead, that would equal $8, the price at which the American sells his article. If there was any greater expense than that, the foreign article could not be sold. I recognize, I think, what the Senator is getting at, and I will admit, as I have heretofore done, that whenever this power is exercised it will be because of the fact that the tariff rate based on foreign valuation will not protect the industry, and therefore the article must be transferred to the American valuation, with the rate attached under the American valuation. In that event, of course, the duties will be exceedingly high. There is no doubt about that; no one is trying to deny it; in fact, I will say to the Senator now that if the duty under the foreign valuation were 60 per cent, which did not give sufficient protection, and the article were transferred to American valuation, and the President exercised all the power which he is authorized to exercise under this bill and increased that 60 per cent duty to one of 90 per cent, under the American valuation that would mean there would be a 900 per cent duty on that article. I do not deny it; there is no question about it. The American people might just as well know it now as at any time, and I do not want Senators to be deceived about it.

I wish to say further that I do not know of any item that would require that to be done. I will modify that and say there are very few such items, and in connection with those items there is the question involved whether the President will want to save the industry in the United States. The items I have in mind are found only in schedule 1 of this bill, and they are merely items which it is thought are vital to our national defense.

So far as this side of the Chamber is concerned we do not want any misunderstanding about this question at all. We know that the power which is authorized to be exercised is given for a certain purpose, and we know that the President of the United States is not going to exercise the full power except in cases where it is absolutely necessary for the protection of our country.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does the Senator want us to understand that he has in mind now some item in this bill the situation with respect to which he believes to be such that the basis of the duty should be changed from the foreign valuation to the American valuation in order to protect a given industry? In other words, is the bill based upon such a flimsy foundation that the Senator can not tell now within the range of 100 per cent or 1,000 per cent whether the duties assessed here are right or not? Does the Senator mean that?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not said that, and the Senator can draw his own conclusions; but I do say to the Senator that I doubt very much whether the toy industry is going to continue in the United States under the rate, based on the foreign valuation, which the bill provides. I feel positive that it can not. I think that I can bring into this Chamber illustrations which will demonstrate that beyond a question of doubt, so that even the Senator will acknowledge it to be true. I believe that I can also bring into the Chamber illustrations of other industries the products of which compete with those made in Germany under conditions which no American laborer would ever tolerate, and God grant they may never be called upon to tolerate them.

Are we going to say that those few industries shall be destroyed? Are we going to say that the millions which have been invested in them must be wiped out because of conditions existing in Germany to-day? So far as I am concerned, I wish to say that I am not going to countenance any such course, and I do not believe the Republican Party is going to do so. We are willing to take whatever censure there may be on the part of the people, but before the discussion is over the American people will know the reason for the action taken. I have no more doubt than that I breathe the breath of life that when the American people know the true situation, when they are advised of the conditions existing, they will prefer to have American labor working and American plants running rather than to offer objections to a high rate of duty.

I am not an embargoist; but I am a protectionist. When I say a "protectionist" I do not mean that I favor protection that borders upon an embargo; I mean that I advocate protection that just equals the difference between conditions incident to manufacturing goods abroad and here. I believe, Mr. President, with the exception of some rates which I personally think are too high, the bill can be defended from one end of the country to the other, and it will be a great deal easier for us to defend the very items that will have of necessity to be transferred from the basis of foreign valuation to the basis of American valuation than it will be some of the other rates based on foreign valuation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, so far as the toy industry is concerned, that is a story all its own, and that will be discussed when we reach that schedule. I do not propose to discuss it now; but I do want to say to the Senator that in his prepared speech, to which I listened with so much interest, he called attention to the fact that in this whole tariff schedule there are relatively few comparable articles entering into international trade. That was his statement, and it is a fact. It was demonstrated by the so-called Reynolds report that while we have these foreign articles coming in here, relatively few of them are comparable to American-made goods. It is true that there are some classes of toys which can be made in Germany which are not made in the United States, and I do not believe that there is an American citizen who would ever want to make such toys. They are not comparable to anything produced in the United States. Is the Senator going to put an embargo on them? Is the Senator going to shut out goods which do not compare with the goods produced in the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. No; and I want to say to the Senator that I can fill this Chamber with toys as to which the Senator can not tell to save his soul whether they were made in Germany or whether they were made in America, and I will say that very few comparable goods are made in America and in foreign countries; but there is comparability with toys, and if the Senator wished me to do so I could fill the RECORD with the names of the items. I expected this matter to come up, Mr. President; I knew it would come up here, and I knew that the Democrats, or at least some of them, would try to make capital out of it; but before the debate is over the American people will know why.

Talk about a protective rate! I have before me just a few of the dyes, with prices, some of them of the most vital importance; others I do not take any stock in at all. There are some that are vital; and those items, as far as I am concerned, are to be protected in this country with a rate, and not with an embargo, and I am willing to say what rate that is, and I will say right now that it can be 900 per cent under the authority of law granted to the President of the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is precisely what I wanted to have appear in the RECORD. I recall one particular class of main dyes, where the American manufacturer said that the reason why he did not want to have a tariff based upon the foreign valuation was because the rate would have to be too high, and I asked him how high it would have to be in order to protect that particular dye, and he said it would have to be 1,000 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, I will go the Senator one better than that. There was one of them that said it would have to be 2,000 per cent.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. And he was right.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is, from the figures he presented.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. From the figures that we had, he was right.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I recall that incident about dyes. We will assume that it applies to toys; that there are some toys made in families in Germany so cheaply that they have an insignificant price when coming to this country. We have a great toy industry in the United States. They make a class of toys that are sold all over this land; and I want to say to the Senator now that of all the toys sold in the United States not over 3 per cent of them are imported toys.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, why have we a toy industry in the United States? We did not have it before the war. It was built up as a war industry, and there never would have been a toy industry in the United States that amounted to a pin if it had not been for the war. Now that we have established that industry are we to protect it, or are we to let it die? The Finance Committee, or a majority of the Finance Committee, thought that it would be wrong to let it die.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Finance Committee evidently thought more than that. They thought that they would not allow any of these foreign toys to come in here, because when they put it within the power of the President to change the basis of this rate, and by that means in some cases, as the Senator says, gave him the right to run the rate up to 900 or 1,000 per cent, they gave the President the right to create an absolute embargo upon such importations.

Mr. SMOOT. For the benefit of the Senator, I want to tell him that I do not think 20 per cent of the toys made in the United States will have to be transferred to the American valuation under the authority given to the President; but why not keep that 20 per cent? We have the industry started here. Why do we want it destroyed? Why do we want to drive the people that are making these toys out on to the street? We have enough unemployed people in the United States now, without driving any more out of a job in order that some poor, half-starved children and women working at their homes all times of night and all times of day may get that pittance of work. Why, Mr. President, it would be better for us to send over the money and feed them—better from a humanitarian standpoint, better from the commercial standpoint—than to allow the trade in this country to be destroyed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the Senator is wide from the effect of doing just what he proposes to be done. That can be illustrated by reference to a particular article. There are pocketknives sold in the 5-cent stores of this country for 5 cents. The rates already provided in this bill are sufficient to prevent those knives from coming into this country at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Then they never will be transferred.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It means, then, that no opportunity will be given to any American boy or girl who has only the 5 cents to get a pocketknife, and that is what the Senator would do. He would take from the children of this country those cheap toys which they are able to buy, and tell them to go without. That is what the Senator would do.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I want to know whether the people of this country will tolerate depriving of amusement the poor people of this country with even meager means?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong again. The Senator knows from past experience that all we would have to do would be to wait and permit the American industry to be destroyed, and when it was destroyed our friends across the water would make us pay for it, as they did when we did not have any industry. Does the Senator know that the toys that are now offered to destroy the American industry are offered by the German Government at one-quarter of what they were offered for before, when we had no competition? Does the Senator know that the American people paid them then not what they pay the American manufacturer to-day but even higher prices? That is what would happen again if the American industry were to be destroyed.

I am not worried about the 5-cent pocketknives. They will be made in America; they will be sold at the 10-cent store; but while they are being sold there American-made knives are not going to be driven out of the market by some firm over in Germany sending them here for the very purpose of displacing the American product and ruining the industry and the concern that makes them in America.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, it will appear from an examination of the schedules of this bill that under its terms the knives which I have been talking about will be absolutely kept out of the United States and no American boy can buy a knife for less than 25 cents. There is not a knife produced in the United States which can be sold for less than a quarter; and this bill levies a specific duty of 12 cents apiece upon such knives and an ad valorem duty besides. I do not care to discuss these phases of the bill now, but I want to say that if we have in this country an industry which can not compete with foreign industries under the duties which have been levied in this bill—take the toy industry, for example; the duties levied there are now so high that they will put many of these toys beyond the reach of the American child—if that duty is not sufficient to keep this industry alive, then, I say, for God's sake let it die, and let us get toys from somewhere that the poor children of this country can afford to buy; but no such dire result as that will happen.

The Senator well knows that the American producer of toys is going to produce toys. He can produce certain classes of toys in competition with the world and the toys that are most used in this country. The industry will not be destroyed, and the Senator is only using the old stock argument when he says, "Build up the industry at any cost, and then, after it is built up it will be beneficent enough to let the children have toys at a reasonable price." The duties in this bill are so high that if the industry can not survive under it, I say that it ought not to thrive.

Mr. President, I rose really for the purpose of asking the Senator regarding another phase of this bill which he has been discussing this afternoon. This power conferred upon the President is clothed in very peculiar and I am inclined to think significant language. It is language which I have never seen before in connection with the subject. I want to read it:

That in order to regulate the foreign commerce of the United States and to put into force and effect the policy of the Congress by this act intended, whenever the President—

Now, mark the language—

upon investigation of the differences in conditions of competition in trade, in the markets of the United States, of articles wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States and of like or similar articles wholly or in part the growth or product of competing foreign countries, shall find it thereby shown—

That the duties fixed in this bill do not equalize the differences in conditions of competition in trade, he then shall have the right to change the duty and increase or withdraw it.

I would like to ask the Senator whether he interprets that language as confining the condition to that to which the Senator referred in his address, and also in this colloquy which has been going on between us. Does the Senator believe that there is any restriction there to competition because of any difference in the mere cost of production? What is meant by "competition in trade"?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator should know that if an investigation were made, not only the question of wage would be taken into consideration but the question of depreciated currency would no doubt be taken into consideration also. That is one of the great difficulties we have had in making a tariff bill. In every country in the world the conditions existing will be different from those existing in any other country. I think it would have simplified this whole tariff matter if we could have had a provision in the bill equalizing the exchanges of the countries. But it was held by our State Department that such a provision would be violative of our treaties with foreign countries. That would have done away with a great deal of the trouble we have experienced in making this bill, and I have no doubt that will be taken into consideration by the President, or the agencies which may act for the President, in determining whether those conditions are such as to justify him in transferring an item—not a title, not a paragraph, but an item in a paragraph—or a paragraph itself, from foreign valuation to American valuation.

I wish to say to the Senator that there are also numerous other considerations. I do not think it is wise for me to say here what I was going to say in relation to the unfair practices which are being carried on in the world to-day against the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There is a provision in the bill to take care of unfair practices.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; we have such a provision in the bill, and it has teeth in it, too; but I say that that will be taken into consideration, I have no doubt, in the investigation, and we intend to correct that under the provisions of this bill. But there are some few discriminatory features which it will not be possible to reach even with the provision we have in this bill, drastic as it is, in my opinion, because of the fact that the business is not done between the foreign country and our own country; it is done in a roundabout way.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I recall very well listening to a speech by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who is now present, defining his position upon the tariff, back in 1913. I was not then a Member of this body, but I listened to the Senator from Iowa, and he defined his position so clearly that it impressed my mind then, and I have carried it with me ever since. What the Senator from Iowa was asking for was that the producers of these commodities, both domestic and foreign, be put upon a competitive basis as to the cost of production. This bill does not say one word about cost of production. It says "competition in trade."

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator had read on, he would not have made that statement.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have read the whole section several times.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me read paragraph (c) to the Senator, and see if it does not give sufficient reasons for action on the part of the President. It reads:

(c) That in any investigation provided for in this section account may be taken of the price at which like or similar merchandise is sold in the United States and competing foreign countries, wages, prices of materials, and all other items in costs of production of such similar merchandise in the United States and competing foreign countries and any advantages of domestic and foreign producers in competitive trade, including laws and regulations affecting the same; that no proclamation shall issue under this section unless reasonable opportunity shall be afforded to all persons directly interested in the production and distribution of such merchandise affected by such proclamation; that the President, proceeding as hereinbefore provided for the proclamation of such rates of duties, may, when he shall determine that it is so shown that the competitive advantages have changed or no longer exist which led to such proclamation, accordingly as so shown modify or terminate the same.

Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa could not have expressed it any more clearly than it is expressed in paragraph (c) as the basis of action by the President in making the change.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that paragraph (c), which has just been read, is couched in this language, "That in any investigation provided for in this section account may be taken" of the things to which he just referred, but there is absolutely no requirement that they shall be taken into consideration or that they alone shall be considered. The door is left absolutely wide open, so far as the power under section (a) is concerned, through which it is conferred upon the President of the United States. It throws the door wide open. He can take into consideration any element on earth. If he chooses to say that the American producer ought to receive 100 per cent profit, he can take that into consideration. He may be one of those who believes in profiteering, and that if you build up a few rich people in this country you benefit all. That may be; but there is absolutely nothing in this bill which limits the President as to the factors which he shall take into consideration. While he may do these things, there is no obligation that he shall do them, and there is, further, no restriction that he shall not take into consideration any other thing. It leaves the door absolutely wide open.

Mr. SMOOT. So careful were the committee in drafting this provision that they limited the action of the President, and stated that—

No proclamation shall issue under this section unless reasonable opportunity shall be afforded to all persons directly interested in the production and distribution of such merchandise affected by such proclamation.

Does the Senator think there is a living man on earth who could be elected President of the United States who would do just what the Senator is suggesting now? The President of the United States can not make these examinations. The President of the United States is not going to listen to the parties interested, and the President of the United States can not issue a proclamation until all the interested parties have had a hearing. That the President of the United States would do the thing pictured by the Senator from New Mexico is beyond belief.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask the Senator from New Mexico to yield to me, not to indulge in this debate, because I have not yet become sufficiently familiar with the bill to have a mature judgment in regard to some of its provisions, but I desire to present a conference report upon House bill 4810, and to ask that it be printed and lie on the table until the House has acted upon it. It must act first.

[The conference report appears later in the proceedings.]

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURSUM in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I expect to leave the city in a day or two, and I would like to call up a bill on the calendar and have it passed. It is House bill 7272.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I can not yield at this time for that purpose. The Senator from Utah wants to leave the Chamber, and in connection with this other discussion I wanted to call attention at this time to the next subdivision of the section.

The next subsection which has a bearing upon this same subject goes even further than the one which I have just read. It reads as follows:

That in order to regulate the foreign commerce of the United States and to put into force and effect the policy of the Congress by this act intended, whenever the President, upon investigation of the differences in conditions—

To which I have referred—shall find it thereby shown that an industry in the United States is being or likely to be materially injured—

And so forth.

That language is used.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator want to know why it was used? I think I can tell him very briefly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I would be glad to have the Senator give us his explanation of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us take, for instance, a chemical really vital to the defense of the United States. Unless the President were given power to act in a case like that, they could send a shipload of the stuff to this country at once, and that would destroy the business in the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Is there not an antidumping provision in the bill and an unfair competition provision?

Mr. SMOOT. It may not be antidumping, and it may not be unfair competition, because they may offer the material to all the countries of the world. To be frank with the Senator, I never expect this power to be used except in a case of that kind, but in such a case the Senator would not object to its use. That is exactly what we had in mind.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Such a thing has never happened in the history of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. There have never existed in this country and in other countries conditions such as exist now.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But I desire especially to call attention to the fact that where the President concludes that there are differences in conditions in competition in trade which are likely to injure any business he may take action. Injury to what degree? If profits of 100 per cent are reduced to 75 per cent, will you call that an injury? There is no specification of what is a reasonable profit, even. It may be any profit which the President of the United States, in his generous disposition, may see fit to allow to any particular industry, friendly or otherwise.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, any concern that is making over 10 per cent can not be injured by competition in trade.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That may be the opinion of the Senator from Utah, but I remember very well when the Senator from Utah stood here and talked until he was almost exhausted trying to convince us that we should not levy a tax upon excess profits, that the manufacturers ought to be permitted to earn all they could get out of their business.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I deny that statement.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If that was not the effect of the Senator's argument, I was unable to interpret it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has made a statement that was never made by me. I did oppose the excess-profits tax being over 32 per cent. I was in favor of an excess-profits tax of 32 per cent, and the Senator will yet live to see the time when he will acknowledge that that position was well taken, and it will be demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt that it would be to the best interests of the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator was talking about surtaxes. The Senator wanted surtaxes reduced to 32 per cent, but the Senator contended absolutely against any excess-profits taxes being levied upon the profits of corporations. The RECORD I am sure will bear out the statement which I made and which shows that the Senator himself has been unwilling to say that a 10 per cent profit should be the limit. I ask the Senator now if he is willing to have an amendment placed in this section providing that in considering the profits which anybody shall make, in order to effect an injury, such profits shall not exceed 10 per cent?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to take the time of the Senate to get off into another subject. Let us consider the bill now before us. I can answer for whatever I have said in relation to excess profits and any other taxes upon the business of the United States. The question just asked by the Senator is not for the Senator from Utah to decide. It is for the committee to decide, or it is for the Senate to decide. If the Senator wants to offer an amendment, then we can vote upon it, but I do not think there is any necessity at this time to discuss it at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did not expect to come to any agreement with the Senator. I asked the question for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that there is at the present time no limit under the language of the bill. That is what I meant to emphasize. The language used confers upon the President of the United States the right to take into consideration a profit of any amount which he may choose to consider, and, if competition reduces the profit below that amount, to consider it an injury to the business and then bring into operation all the drastic provisions of the bill.

Mr. President, I have consumed a good deal more time in this colloquy than I had any thought of doing when I rose to ask a few simple questions. The general subject I expect to discuss at some subsequent time. I merely want to make this concluding statement, that in my humble judgment, whether wise or unwise, constitutional or unconstitutional, under the provisions of the bill, as they are framed, and under those sections we have been talking about this afternoon, the whole power of taxation is practically transferred to the President. I recall the past when we wanted a tariff commission to take the tariff out of politics. What should be done is to get this economic question out of politics, but instead of doing that, instead of bringing to fruition some of the suggestions of years ago, when the Tariff Commission was created, it is now proposed absolutely to turn the engine in the other direction. Instead of getting this thing called "tariff" out of politics, the effort is being made to throw it bodily into the very vortex of politics by conferring upon the President of the United States any such power as is conferred by the section of the bill which we have been discussing.

I expect to discuss the matter at some length at a later time, but I thought at this early stage it might be well enough for the people to understand just what that section contemplates.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I present certain letters from the United Peanut Associations of America, the Enterprise Oil Co., the Southern Tariff Association, and the Southern Fisheries Association, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNITED PEANUT ASSOCIATIONS OF AMERICA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
Norfolk, Va., April 15, 1922.

Senator FRANK R. GOODING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Our association has been sending you a lot of petitions asking for tariff on peanuts, and I surely would thank you to present these petitions, as to represent us. * * * I am sure 90 per cent of the farmers and dealers are for protection.

The emergency tariff which passed last May has saved the peanut industry surely a good many millions of dollars. The year before the emergency tariff went into effect there was imported from China mostly in round numbers 232,000,000 pounds of peanuts and peanut oil, but a good many of these peanuts did not go into consumption before the following season, and had effect on the market, but the price of peanuts in Georgia advanced something over 100 per cent and, of course, we know the emergency tariff was responsible and it saved the peanut farmers in the South several millions of dollars.

I really believe the people interested directly and indirectly in raising and handling and manipulating peanuts is from 750,000 to 1,000,000 people and without a protective tariff on peanuts the Southern States will have to abandon raising peanuts, as they can not compete with the pauper labor, and if they do there will be around 1,000,000 people that will have to look to something else for a livelihood.

I surely thank you for what you have done for us and I hope that you will see that we get a tariff, namely, 3 cents on hull goods and 4 cents on shelled goods.

Very truly yours,

P. D. BAIN,
Chairman, United Peanut Associations of America.

THE UNITED PEANUT ASSOCIATIONS OF AMERICA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
Suffolk, Va., March 7, 1922.

Senator GOODING, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I inclose you copy of a resolution which was passed by the directors of the Peanut Growers' Exchange covering the peanut sections of Virginia and North Carolina. Copies of this resolution have been sent to the Senators from the two States, as well as the Representatives.

In addition, this office is sending out blank petitions for signatures to our members in Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina, Florida, and Texas. These to be sent to yourself, with exception of those from Texas, which we think should go to Senator SHEPPARD, as he is their Senator who is in favor of tariff on farm products. We are also requesting our members to write personal letters to their Senators.

Hope that this work will help you in helping us get peanuts included in the tariff bill to be enacted by Congress.

Yours very truly,

M. M. OSBORN, Secretary.

Each district meeting is requested to adopt the following resolution adopted by the board of directors at their meeting March 1:

"Whereas the peanut growers of America can not successfully compete in our own markets with foreign growers of peanuts without a tariff thereon sufficient to cover the difference between the cost of labor abroad and in this country; and

"Whereas the present emergency tariff on peanuts has been of decided benefit to the peanut farmers: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the directors of the Peanut Growers' Exchange (Inc.), representing more than 5,000 farmers in Virginia and North Carolina, appeal to the Representatives and Senators of Virginia and North Carolina to secure such a competitive tariff on peanuts as is now provided for in the pending tariff bill, which is not more than sufficient to cover the difference between the cost of production here and abroad, and that a special appeal be made to the officials of peanut organizations in other peanut-growing States to appeal to their Representatives and Senators in Congress to assist us in securing this much-needed legislation."

—

THE UNITED PEANUT ASSOCIATIONS OF AMERICA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Suffolk, Va., February 10, 1922.

Senator GOODING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand that the Finance Committee of the Senate is not going to or has not approved our suggestion for rates on peanuts because we have Democratic Senators who will not vote for the bill.

When we appeared before the Finance Committee we were told that they were going to frame this bill without regard for sectional lines. Of course we will admit that we are handicapped by reason of having Senators from the South who are bound down by political ideas possibly more than for doing good to their people. However, that does not represent the sentiment of the South to-day. And I believe that the Republican Party is missing one of its best opportunities to get in a wedge that will break the solid South, if it fails to give the southern interests a part in the tariff bill. This is your chance to get started in the South.

Another matter, Is the Republican majority going to overlook the fact that we have Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, Senator RANSDELL, of Louisiana, and the other Senator from that State who will support this tariff bill? Then why not give us protection on peanuts by reason of these three southern Senators if you haven't any other good reason? Then in addition the National Milk Federation has asked for a rate of 4 cents and 4½ cents per pound on vegetable oils, peanut oil at 4½ cents. This is to protect their butter products. Now if you want to keep the oil protected don't you see that if you let peanuts from the Orient come in free of duty that the oil crushers on the west and southern coasts can import these cheap peanuts and produce the oil here in America? That will get their peanut oil in free.

Very truly yours,

M. M. OSBORN, Secretary.

—

SOUTHERN TARIFF ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1922.

Senator F. R. GOODING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Mr. M. M. Osborn, secretary of the United Peanut Associations of America, sends me the inclosed letter in which he calls attention to the omission of peanuts in their raw state from the schedule presented to the Senate Finance Committee. If Mr. Osborn's information is correct, I presume this is an oversight.

Yours very truly,

J. A. ARNOLD.

—

THE UNITED PEANUT ASSOCIATIONS OF AMERICA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
Suffolk, Va., January 21, 1922.

Mr. J. A. ARNOLD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ARNOLD: In looking over the schedule of rates which the agricultural bloc of the Senate have agreed to support, which was submitted to the Finance Committee a few days ago, I note that peanuts have been omitted.

Senator GOODING presented this schedule and included almost every southern product except peanuts. I am sure that this was an oversight and not intentional, as he included cotton seed at three-fourth cent per pound, and you will remember Mr. Holman asked for a tariff to be placed on vegetable oils and products from which they were made; now this includes peanuts. Soya beans should also be included.

I am sure that you can advise us after seeing Senator GOODING that he will see that peanuts are included, also I think it would be well for him to include soya beans, as if a tariff of 4 cents is placed on soya-bean oil, and soya beans are admitted free. Soya beans will be imported. Whereas if a tariff is placed on soya beans you are going to see another crop added to the South—that of soya beans, as the Senator from Louisiana told us.

Let me hear from you as soon as possible.

Yours sincerely,

M. M. OSBORN, Secretary.

ENTERPRISE OIL COMPANY,
Enterprise, Ala., March 22, 1922.

Senator GOODING, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As we understand it, you are a member of the so-called agricultural bloc, and in favor of tariffs for the benefit of the farmer, and to ascertain somewhat the sentiment of our people on this vital question the writer circulated yesterday a petition as regards the tariff on peanuts, peanut oils, and other vegetable oils, and in less time than one hour the names as affixed to the petition as per copy inclosed were signed. Without a single exception, every person to whom it was presented for signature signed it without question, our people having studied the question and knowing what they want.

If it were practical and possible to get and present such a petition, think that at least 90 per cent of the people in this Coffee County, Ala., one of the largest peanut-producing sections of the South, would sign same. The writer has no doubt but that this same sentiment as relates to peanuts prevail over the entire peanut section, and if you find it possible your influence will be appreciated to have written into the permanent tariff bill the figures as mentioned in the petition herewith inclosed.

Yours very truly, C. Y. SAWYER.

—

To honorable Members of the United States Congress:

We, the residents of Enterprise, Ala., interested in the maintenance, development, and prosperity of the South, realizing the extent to which our agricultural interest, directly, and our entire community indirectly, are affected by the practically unrestricted flow of foreign-grown peanuts and other agricultural products, vegetable oils, etc., into our country because of the approximately free-trade conditions existing before the emergency tariff bill was enacted, and fully appreciating that the failure to include peanuts at 4 cents per pound and peanut oil at 5 cents per pound, as well as a like rate on other vegetable oils in the permanent tariff bill, which is to supersede the emergency tariff, will take from the South its one cash crop that has proven a great blessing as substitute crop for cotton in boll-weevil-infested territory, where cotton can not be grown profitably on account of this pest, earnestly request your consideration of this vital matter to the end that you help to secure rates stated above which are not more than sufficient to cover the difference between the cost of production here and abroad.

J. W. Goff, E. W. Nickols, Alto Hutchison, E. L. Murdock, W. E. Peters, Rev. J. O. Colley, G. E. Lasseter, M. Dillon, jr., Henry Watson, J. M. Donaldson, T. W. Morgan, J. W. Searcy, A. D. Wright, V. O. Warren, J. L. Warren, W. O. Byrd, C. H. Heath, Will Warren, A. M. Owen, Arrie Owen, J. L. Hildreth, J. W. Ryder, P. H. Searcy, C. L. Ellis, M. P. Adams, S. L. Brunson, G. W. Carlisle, H. M. Pippin, J. W. Nickols, L. K. Ogletree, M. H. Bracken, R. C. Fleming, G. M. Heath, G. W. Shiver, R. T. Adams, W. C. Stapleton, Bud Blackmon, F. T. Price, W. J. Mitchell, C. R. Walls, R. A. Miller, S. C. Odom, H. O. Whittle, J. C. Boyette, A. R. Pouncey, Ben W. Clendenen, jr., J. E. Caldwell, A. M. McIntosh, A. R. McIntosh, J. A. Holloway, J. B. Holloway, O. L. Skipper, W. B. Slawson, John T. Benson, G. W. Boghton, G. W. Jones, J. D. Heath, Q. O. McGee, L. H. Sessions, H. M. Sessions, L. Corbett, W. O. Weems, J. R. Colson, John Stanley, R. B. Martin, Judge J. M. Loflin, K. W. Harrison, J. J. Faulk, M. M. Faulk, E. F. Price, W. O. Pittman, Flossie Shanks, Jim T. Grimes, E. T. Grimes, C. F. James, H. D. Harrison, J. P. Mitchell, C. H. Windham, H. B. Grimesley, Z. C. Hundley, Dothan, J. W. Marsch, J. A. Brock, J. S. Amos, C. Y. Sawyer, C. S. Sawyer, L. L. Conner, W. E. Conner, M. O. Forehand, T. T. Brooks.

—

SOUTHERN FISHERIES ASSOCIATION (INC.),
Jacksonville, Fla., January 23, 1922.

Hon. FRANK R. GOODING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Our attention has been called to Senate bill 2878, introduced by Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, to allocate the control, administration, and supervision of all functions of the Government, principally affecting agriculture, forestry, and food, to the Department of Agriculture.

We note among the provisions of this bill is one to transfer to the Department of Agriculture the work of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce. The Southern Fisheries Association wish to protest against the transfer of the Bureau of Fisheries from the Department of Commerce to the Department of Agriculture.

It is felt by this association that a transfer at this time would be a grave misfortune to the fish industry. Mr. Hoover has taken a personal interest in the fish industry of the country, and has through conferences and committees commenced a great work to help the industry get on its feet so that it could be in a position to prosper. He has also been of great benefit to the fish industry in the matter of transportation rates and service, and we would dislike very much to see this change made, as we believe that the industry would suffer accordingly.

We respectfully ask that you give this your earnest consideration, and, if you can consistently do so, we will appreciate it if you will allow the Bureau of Fisheries to remain under the Department of Commerce.

Very truly yours, F. D. FANT, President.

Mr. GOODING. I also present petitions of sundry citizens praying for inclusion in the tariff bill of adequate protective duties on peanuts and peanut and other vegetable oils, which I ask may lie on the table. I also request that one of the petitions be printed in the RECORD without the signatures and that the number of signatures on each of the petitions be noted in the RECORD.

The petitions were ordered to lie on the table and noted in the RECORD, and one of the petitions without the names was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Members of the United States Congress:

We, the residents of Wakefield, Va., interested in the maintenance, development, and prosperity of the South, realizing the extent to which our agricultural interests directly and our entire community indirectly are affected by the practically unrestricted flow of foreign-grown peanuts and other agricultural products, vegetable oils, etc., into our country because of the approximately free-trade conditions existing before the emergency tariff bill was enacted, and fully appreciating that the failure to include peanuts at 4 cents per pound and peanut oil at 5 cents per pound, as well as a like rate on other vegetable oils in the permanent tariff bill, which is to supersede the emergency tariff bill, will take from the South its one cash crop that has proven a great blessing as a substitute crop for cotton in boll-weevil-infested sections where cotton can not be profitably produced on account of this pest, earnestly request your consideration of this vital matter to the end that you help to secure rates stated above, which are not more than sufficient to cover the difference between the cost of production here and abroad.

Petitions of 66 citizens of Greensville County; of 22 citizens of Southampton County; of 38 citizens of Franklin County; of 11 citizens of Petersburg; of 25 citizens of Prince George County; of 17 citizens of Bland district, Prince George County; of 18 citizens of Disputanta, Prince George County; of 40 citizens of New Bohemia; of 10 citizens of Wakefield; of 42 citizens of Newsoms, Southampton County; of 27 citizens of Franklin, Southampton County; all in the State of Virginia; petitions of 45 citizens of Malone, Fla.; of 19 citizens of Waverly, Tenn.; of 47 citizens of Benton County, Tenn.; of 18 citizens of Perry County, Tenn.; and of 22 citizens of Decatur County, Tenn.; resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of farmers and business men at Marianna, Jackson County, Fla.; petitions of 19 citizens of Charleston, S. C.; of 48 citizens of Hertford County; of 34 citizens of Tyner, Chowan County; and of 34 citizens of Pendleton, all in the State of North Carolina; petitions of 32 citizens of Adel; of 16 citizens of Bluffton; of 90 citizens of Meigs and Thomas Counties; of 100 citizens of Edison; of 43 citizens of Lumpkin; of 42 citizens of Baldwin County; of 21 citizens of Morris; of 14 citizens of Early County; of 30 citizens of Benevolence; of 91 citizens of Hahira; of 70 citizens of Colquitt; of 34 citizens of Damascus; of 27 citizens of Arlington; of 32 citizens of Decatur County; and of 17 citizens of Pelham, all in the State of Georgia; petitions of 76 citizens of Aubrey; of 185 citizens of Bridgeport; of 104 citizens in the State of Texas; of 35 citizens of Stockdale, Wilson County; of 56 citizens of Comanche, Tex.; of 52 citizens of Gillespie; of 34 citizens of Park Springs; of 57 citizens of Stephenville; of 57 citizens of Boyd; of 115 citizens of Joshua; of 19 citizens of Henderson; of 29 citizens of Hughes Springs; of 76 citizens of Paradise; of 17 citizens of Garner; of 24 citizens of Jack County; of 18 citizens of Palo Pinto County; of 22 citizens of Weatherford; of 61 citizens of Hood County; of 38 citizens of Perrin; of 59 citizens of Santo; and of 57 citizens of Chico, all in the State of Texas.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the ranking minority member upon the Finance Committee, owing to indisposition, is unable to present at this time for the consideration of the Senate his views upon this bill. He will, however, within the next day or two submit to the Senate and to the country an analysis of the pending measure and conclusive reasons why it should not receive the approval of this body. His acknowledged ability and his thorough acquaintance with tariff legislation will give to his address national importance. He will point out the evil and indefensible features of the bill and demonstrate its disastrous effects upon American commerce.

I am not a member of the Finance Committee, but have been asked by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina and other minority members of the committee to join with them in the consideration of this bill, particularly those paragraphs found in Schedule I, which comprises oils, paints, and chemicals, and to those provisions dealing with dyes and embargoes.

Mr. President, the Senate is entering upon the consideration of a measure of the highest importance to the American people.

The so-called Fordney tariff bill came to the Senate some months ago and has been reported back to this body by the Finance Committee with numerous changes and drastic modifications. Contrary to the wishes of the American people, and under the whip and spur of the predatory interests and trusts and combinations, which have been and will be beneficiaries of tariff exactions, this Republican Congress immediately after the last election began the preparation of a tariff bill. There are reactionaries and "die hards" in the Republican Party who believe that governments exist only for the purpose of enacting tariff laws in the interest of the manufacturers and special interests; and they are utterly unable or unwilling to comprehend the economic and industrial problems of the United States or of the world. Political economy is to them a sealed book, and the limpid streams which bear the argosies of trade and commerce and bring prosperity to peoples and countries strike terror to their provincial souls. It was thought by some that the Republican Party had become liberalized, and many loyal and patriotic Americans were led to believe that the party of Lincoln was freeing itself from sinister influences which controlled it at the time Theodore Roosevelt, an indurated Republican, denounced his party and led a revolt against its oppressive, reactionary, and Tory policies. Many of the followers of Mr. Roosevelt, who had protested against the medieval and buccaneering policies of the Republican Party, reentered that organization after the demise of the Progressive Party, hoping that the chastisement which the Republican Party had received had purged it of its reactionary leadership and given it a wider vision and a broader spirit and a nobler attitude toward the social and industrial problems of the hour. But the Progressive forces in the Republican Party have found to their profound dismay that the leopard does not change its spots and that the Republican Party of to-day follows the plans of Quay and Aldrich and Payne and CANNON and other powerful leaders who controlled and still control the Republican Party. These policies seem to be wholly materialistic and are conceived in greed and selfishness and measure patriotism by devotion to what are denominated "business and financial interests."

It is remarkable that so many who seek riches and speedily acquired wealth and are willing, in order to obtain it, to prostitute the powers of the Government, should be so ignorant of the inexorable laws of trade, of supply and demand, and of the fundamental principles to which adherence must be given if there shall be genuine and continued individual or national prosperity.

It is true that prohibitive tariffs may bring temporary gains and enrichment, but in this age they react to the disadvantage of the peoples and countries enacting them, and such tariffs become destructive of prosperity, particularly in those countries having the resources of and situated as is the United States. This Republic is the great creditor nation of the world, and it possesses raw materials and primary products almost sufficient to meet the demands of all peoples. Important as its domestic trade is, its foreign trade and commerce will determine to a large degree its industrial development and financial growth and progress. With its inexhaustible supplies of iron and copper and zinc and lead, its limitless agricultural resources, its unmeasured productive power, the genius and strength of its people, these and other factors give to the United States world leadership and the basis for material prosperity unparalleled and unapproachable.

"Main Street" politicians and the narrow zealots and bigoted partisans center their vision upon some local industry or some provincial enterprise and close their eyes to the Nation and its interests and to the questions, fundamental and vital, which in the end must be controlling if there shall be national development and growth. The history of progress is the history of trade whether among peoples of a restricted area or of a nation or continent. The nations that have led the world in civilization, in morals, and in true progress have been the nations that carried aloft the banner of trade and commerce.

Intellectuals have broken the crusts of a perverted nationalism and shattered the policies which crystallized the thoughts of people into small and unexpanding forms. They have carried their philosophy and their political economy and their conceptions of justice and of international morality and sympathy, if not union, into other lands. They have removed senseless and cruel barriers and brought peoples and nations into contact, and with the advance of science the world, which seemed at one time to be so big, has grown smaller and the elbows of peoples and nations have touched, and looking into each other's eyes they have discovered their resemblances and have realized that they were akin.

Too many politicians and so-called statesmen dwell in the valley and in the shadow of narrow ravines and gorges that cut their way through man's creations as well as through nature's mighty handiwork. There are some of our so-called statesmen who treat international questions as a thing apart from trade and commerce. They seem to think that a nation has two completely separated divisions, and, indeed, consists of two distinct entities; one being or entity is concerned with purely what is denominated domestic and the other with international questions.

Some of our greatest publicists and world writers have shown that international problems are inseparably connected with local and domestic problems and that many of the clouds that have obscured the international horizon and have resulted in storms and tempests have been occasioned by controversies arising out of, or connected with, domestic or national issues.

Great Britain saw how imperative it was that she should secure raw materials and food supplies from other nations. Her growing population, congested in a limited insular field, was doomed to penury and the nation to decadence if foreign trade could not be secured. She built ships to carry from foreign shores food supplies and raw materials and to send to all ports and to all lands the products of her mills and factories.

It may be true that Great Britain's trade policies have brought about international conflicts. Aside from religious and dynastic wars, I think it can be stated with historical accuracy that most of the other conflicts between nations were the outgrowth of commercial rivalries. There are many who believe that the great World War was, indirectly if not directly, caused by fears upon the part of certain European nations that their foreign trade was in danger. Great Britain regarded a navy as necessary to defend the British Isles and also to protect her commerce upon the high seas. Germany looked upon Great Britain as a commercial rival. She pushed her trade into all lands and became an active competitor of Great Britain as well as other nations in almost every market of the world. The Pan-German element demanded a mighty navy and looked for an opportunity that would enable Germany to acquire foreign territory and to secure what was denominated "a place in the sun."

But because controversies have arisen as a result of international trade there is no ground for the contention that there should be no trade among nations.

There are disputes and controversies among merchants and manufacturers within a city or a county or a State. These controversies are not arguments against business dealings and trade and traffic among the inhabitants of cities and States. As mankind grow in intelligence, and as desires for justice increase, controversies diminish. Municipal law is developed and courts are established and laws are enacted under which contentions are determined and order and justice secured. International law is bringing all nations within its beneficent influence, and international treaties and conventions are destroying causes which have contributed to international strife. Notwithstanding the spirit of perverted nationalism which exists in many quarters, and the racial antipathies which still persist, there are unmistakable evidences of a growing spirit of international amity; an international conscience is being developed and the old theory that there is no law to restrain nations is being abandoned under the pervasive spirit of an enlightened and rational internationalism which arraigns before the bar of public opinion and the conscience of civilized nations peoples and nations who defy the spirit of justice and the rights of individuals and states.

The philosophy, the science, the literature, the moral precepts, no matter from whence they come, are the patrimony of all peoples. The seas no longer divide nations. We speak across the waters and hold converse with friend and stranger far out upon the mighty deep. People everywhere are beginning to think internationally and to appreciate how profoundly each nation, whether great or small, is affected by the conditions among peoples, even in the antipodes.

Discontent and revolution in India affect Great Britain and other European nations, and reactions result which affect our industrial condition. With poverty and revolution in India the output of the mills of Great Britain is reduced, and this affects the price of cotton grown upon the plantations of the Southern States of this Republic.

Before the war Russia purchased more than $600,000,000 annually of Germany's products. Germany in turn sought our shores and purchased enormous quantities of copper and other primary products of our country. Owing to Russia's catastrophic condition she can not buy from Germany, and Germany's purchases from America are correspondingly restricted. If Russia were prosperous she would not only purchase from Germany and Germany in turn purchase from America, but if we were buying commodities of which she has an excess, she would take in payment therefor hundreds of millions of our manufactured products. Thus would our foreign trade be expanded, our domestic production increased, and our prosperity enhanced.

Mr. President, there are those in the Republican Party who refuse to see the truth or to follow the pathway of safety and progress, or be guided by the lamp of experience. They exhibit a blind pertinacity that is inconceivable in the light of world conditions and the impressive lessons of the past, which in blazing letters are thrown athwart the pathway of the American people. Professing high patriotism and undiluted Americanism, they seek to convince the people that their prosperity will be promoted by putting into the hands of domestic producers of the commodities and products which comprise the very life and well-being of the people, the unrestricted power to create and maintain monopolies in those commodities, and to fix and perpetuate such price levels as may be dictated by their greed and avarice. They speak volubly of the domestic market, of its colossal proportions, and seek to convince the people that the foreign market is unimportant; or, at least, if important, is unavailable for America's surplus products, even though an embargo interdicts all foreign imports.

Mr. President, if Europe were prosperous to-day our exports, if they did not reach the high levels of 1919 and 1920, would approximate them, provided that reactionary Republicans were not in control of this Republic. Of course, if they did control and insisted upon the "hermit" policy for which they now contend, then our exports would dwindle, and the tide of American prosperity, which would otherwise exist, would recede.

While a sufficient quantity of gold is required under the monetary systems in the world as a basis for credits and exchange, it may, I think, be safely affirmed that metallic money plays a less important part in the commerce of the world and the prosperity of the world than is usually supposed. Notwithstanding America has the greater part of the gold supply of the world, millions of persons are unemployed, and financial depression has brought paralysis to our industrial and economic life. Our gold does not give us foreign trade, nor does it vitalize our moribund business organism. Exchange of commodities is the life-giving blood that builds the sound tissue of national and international progress.

Wealth is not gold, though gold may constitute a part of a nation's wealth. Wealth consists of the products and commodities created and fashioned by the genius of man. There may be potential wealth, and in that America is fabulously rich. With our great coal measures and our stupendous deposits of copper and zinc and lead, with our forests and fisheries, and other natural resources too numerous to be mentioned, we stand at the gateway of unexampled prosperity. The gate will open and riches will enter if only we are guided by wisdom and the principles of sound economic philosophy, if I may so speak, the infallibility of which have been demonstrated in this and in past ages. The conception that if we possess gold prosperity is inevitable, is archaic; it was the basis of the mercantile system from which the protection theory is derived. Professor McLeod states that—

> Midas was the parent of the mercantile system, and for several centuries every Government in Europe was imbued with his ideas. * * * Midas saw that with treasure in his hand he was wealthy—he could obtain whatever he wanted and could command the services of others. * * * The very same ideas gradually grew up in Europe. Sovereigns saw that their chief power consisted in the treasure they could accumulate. It then became a cardinal point in their policy to encourage the importation of money as much as possible and to prohibit its export. * * * The Spaniards, dazzled with the brilliant prospect of securing the greatest part of the wealth of the world without labor, imagined that the well-being of the country consisted in amassing enormous heaps of gold and silver.

I referred a moment ago to what constituted wealth. Adam Smith says—

> A nation may import to a greater value than it exports for half a century, perhaps, together; the gold and silver which comes into it during all this time may be all immediately sent out of it; its circulating coin may gradually decay, different sorts of paper money being substituted in its place, and even the debts, too, which it contracts in the principal nations with whom it deals may be gradually increasing; and yet its real wealth, the exchangeable value of the annual produce of its lands and labor, may, during the same period, have been increasing in a much greater proportion.

Adam Smith further states:

> It would be too ridiculous to go about seriously to prove that wealth does not consist in money, or in gold or silver, but in what money purchases, and is valuable only for purchasing. Money, no doubt, makes always a part of the national capital; but it has already been shown that it generally makes but a small part, and always the most unprofitable part of it.

I am not attempting to minimize the importance of gold in our fiscal system, or in our international exchanges, but I am emphasizing the fact that it is production and exchange of commodities which, after all, produce wealth. When our foreign commerce was thirteen billions annually, as it was in 1919 and 1920, we enjoyed unexampled prosperity. The more we produce and save the greater is the wealth of the Nation. When the annual product of all the people of the United States was approximately $35,000,000,000 it was all consumed in wages and in the process of production, except approximately $5,000,000,000. This was the residuum which was added to the general stock of the Nation's capital and constituted a part of the Nation's wealth. When the value of the products of our country increased to sixty or sixty-five billions of dollars per annum, then there was a larger surplus which was available for investment and which constituted an accretion to our capital and to the Nation's wealth. But the increase in wealth came from production and savings. A people may produce a large volume of commodities, but the volume will shrink unless there is a market for such products. The increase in individual and national wealth is measured by the volume of trade and commerce. The key which will unlock the door which now imprisons the American people is not a golden key nor an iron or steel key forged by high protectionists. Indeed, the lock can only be turned and the door opened by confidence, and just and liberal policies and the removal of odious measures which are impediments to the flow of just and natural laws. It were well if statesmen would remember these words of Adam Smith:

> Man is generally considered by statesmen and projectors as the materials of a sort of political mechanics. Projectors disturb nature in the course of her operations on human affairs, and it requires no more than to leave her alone and give her fair play in the pursuit of her ends that she may establish her own designs. * * * Little else is required to carry a State to the highest degree of affluence from the lowest barbarism but peace, easy taxes, and a tolerable administration of justice, all the rest being brought about by the natural course of things.

Mr. President, the issue before us is not that of proctection or free trade. The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, in opening the discussion Saturday, referred to free trade, and reactionary Republicans are constantly erecting a "bogey man" labeled "free trade" and exhibiting the grotesque figure throughout the land.

No one upon this side of the Chamber is advocating free trade, and no amendments will be offered by the minority to the pending bill which will call for free trade. The Underwood-Simmons law, which was enacted in 1913, was not a free-trade measure. Republicans denounced it as such and sought to frighten American people by declaring that under that act the mills would close and ruin and disaster would overwhelm the American people. The doleful predictions of Republicans were not verified, and the people soon discovered the disingenuousness, if not the hypocrisy, of Republican protestations. They lost interest in the tariff as an issue and were entirely reconciled to the Underwood tariff law. They did not demand in the 1914 or the 1916 elections, or the 1918 or the 1920 elections, that the Underwood-Simmons tariff law be repealed. American business men who were satisfied with reasonable and fair profits, and who were guided by the principles of justice as well as patriotism, did not demand the repeal of that law or the formulation of the Fordney tariff bill or of this measure which has been reported from the Senate Finance Committee. Politicians and partisan Republicans and selfish and predatory interests, when they found that the Republican Party was so powerful in both branches of Congress, fancied they saw an opportunity to fasten upon the country a tariff law which would legalize monopolies and put it in the power of domestic manufacturers of most of the commodities required by the people to exploit them. They perceived that under the influence of natural laws of trade and commerce readjustments in the economic and industrial world were inevitable, readjustments which would affect the prices of commodities as well as other factors entering into production and consumption. They determined, so far as they could, to secure a monopoly of the home market, to arrest the decline in prices, and prevent the operation of competitive forces.

I do not mean to include in this general statement all of the business interests of the United States. There are thousands and tens of thousands of men of the highest character who are governed by the keenest and most enlightened spirit of justice, who have been and still are unwilling to see the powers of the Government debased, as they will be if this bill passes, though the result thereof might swell their profits and add to their fortunes. The business interests of the United States controlled by men of this character apply in their dealings the highest standards of ethics and broad and enlightened policies. But there are others who are willing to use the taxing power of the Government to further their private ends. They desire tariff rates so high as to constitute an embargo. Not content, they would repeal the Sherman antitrust law and form combinations and trusts which would enable them to destroy domestic competition, and thus prey and fatten upon the consuming public.

The evidence in the Hardwood Lumber Co. case, recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, reveals that a large number of lumbermen of a certain section of the United States combined and conspired to destroy competition and to maintain or to increase prices upon their products. I have made considerable investigation, and I assert that there are hundreds, and it has been said by some investigators thousands, of these "price-fixing" or "open-price" organizations who have acted in open violation of the Sherman law and are conspiring against legitimate business for the purpose of increasing prices to the American people.

Mr. President, in my opinion a very large part of the manufacturers who are supporting this bill desire an undue advantage, and are seeking undue, if not inordinate, profits. There are very many business houses and corporations and business concerns who are opposed to this bill, who do not desire the advantages which it would give them, who prefer that business be conducted somewhat in harmony with the laws of supply and demand and the legitimate and natural laws of trade and commerce. When I denounce predatory interests and those who are robbing and exploiting the American people I do not, of course, include within that category corporations and individuals and business enterprises of the class just referred to, but I do not hesitate to aver that there are interests, greedy and voracious and oppressive, which are back of this bill and which expect under its provisions to reap enormous profits and to swell their treasures and to add to their colossal fortunes.

I repeat, Mr. President, the issue tendered by this bill is not "free trade" or "tariff for revenue," or a "reasonable tariff"; but the issue is whether certain manufacturing and other interests in the United States shall be permitted to prey upon the people and continue prices at levels inordinately high, or increase them or prevent a decline to such levels as would be fair and just to the American consumer, and in the end conducive to the greatest felicity of the American people.

Confessedly this is not a tariff in the interest of infant industries. It is not a tariff to afford moderate protection to adolescent enterprises. It is not a bill which seeks to place upon a parity with foreign producers the domestic producer because of the supposed higher wages paid to American labor.

Mr. President, I submit that a careful analysis of this iniquitous bill will demonstrate that, regardless of the professed purposes which prompts its enactment, its true object is to give to domestic producers a complete monopoly of the domestic market and to maintain domestic prices at levels so high as to be oppressive to the American people and which, it is hoped, in the end will force world prices to substantially those fixed by the monopolies and combinations in the United States.

Before the consideration of this bill is completed, attention will be challenged to scores of items named in the bill, notwithstanding the fact that there is no foreign competition and there is no prospective foreign competition. There are scores, if not hundreds, of items where the imports have been less than 1 per cent, where the tariff rates have been increased above the Underwood bill from 150 per cent to 400 per cent, 500 per cent, and 600 per cent. It is patent to every fair-minded man who examines the bill that in its application domestic monopolies will inevitably be created, and it is equally clear that no possible competition is anticipated—even though commodities were left upon or added to the free list—with respect to hundreds of items named in the pending bill.

Mr. President, this bill is protectionism run mad. It is the apothesis of the narrow and restrictive policies which prevailed in medieval times or among nations and peoples who were at war with all other nations and peoples and who believed that intercourse among nations was inconsistent with national honor or growth and development. This bill, Mr. President, is a bad bill. It is, in my opinion, so bad as to call for condemnation by the American people.

There have been tariff bills characterized as wicked and oppressive and vicious and un-American. All these terms, and more, with propriety and with truthfulness, can, in my judgment, be applied to this bill.

Of course, it will pass. The stage is set and sooner or later the curtain will be rung down, the farce or tragedy, whichever it may be denominated, will be ended. It will be signed by the President. It will become a law and the American people—the great army of workers—the victims of this legislation, will then be called upon to pay toll and tribute to the barons and overlords and the rich and the mighty.

The brilliant newspaper men who furnish the American people, and particularly public men who are in Washington, with so much of pleasure and profit by their periodical Gridiron Club banquets, presented on Saturday night one view of the Fordney tariff bill, or at least its journey through Congress. Irving's immortal Rip Van Winkle appeared in the banquet hall in his tatters and rags, awakening from his long slumber. With feeble voice he inquired whether the Fordney tariff bill had been passed. Upon being advised in the negative he retired, declaring that he would slumber on for another period. Mr. President, I am frank to confess that if I had my way Rip Van Winkle would sleep for many years before this bill was enacted into law. I regret the triumphant majority of the Republicans which will enable them to drive it through this body. They will win a victory here, but that victory will presage a defeat when the American people learn of its provisions and behold its operations.

Mr. President, this measure in various forms has been before the House and Senate committees for more than a year, and tentative schedules have been examined and studied, doubtless with the utmost care, by the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate, and also by the minority members. However, it must be said that the minority members of the Finance Committee had no voice in the preparation of the bill. The Republican members, after the hearings were closed, excluded the Democratic Senators and for weeks and weeks have been engaged in the preparation of the bill.

When prepared it was promptly submitted to the Senate, the Democratic members having no opportunity afforded them to discuss with their associates upon the committee any of the schedules or any of the provisions of the bill itself. Though I am not a member of the Finance Committee, as I have heretofore stated, I have attempted to acquaint myself with the provisions of this measure, which, as reported, contains 438 printed pages. It covers practically all of the commodities and products that affect the lives and health of the people of our land. It deals with food and clothes and medicines and chemicals and metals and building materials and books; indeed, it covers the Nation, it covers the people. It envelops the people and rests upon the mass and presses upon every part of our social and domestic life. It is unfortunate that our method of preparing tariff bills is so crude and antiquated and results in such injustice and inequalities. So long as predatory interests and selfish and greedy men and corporations can influence legislation, tariff bills will be monuments of wrong and injustice and oppression.

It was hoped by President Roosevelt that a tariff commission would take the tariff question out of politics. When the Democrats created the Tariff Commission it was thought that many of the evils attending tariff legislation of the past would be abated. I am afraid the Tariff Commission has not justified all of the hopes entertained, nor does it possess the confidence which all believers in genuine reform would be glad for it to enjoy. Whenever tariff bills are being framed there are unmistakable evidences of selfishness upon the part of many who seek to have tariff duties laid that will either create a monopoly or diminish competition. The distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] became a national figure when he opposed oppressive tariff rates that were demanded by various interests throughout the country. Senator Dolliver, that brilliant Iowan, in eloquent terms pleaded for more liberal and just policies in tariff legislation, for policies which would not build up monopolies and lead to the oppression of the great agricultural classes as well as the overwhelming majority of the American people. Who does not remember his denunciation of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill? Since coming to the Chamber this morning I thought of one of his great speeches and asked that the record of the debate upon that legislation be brought to my desk. Permit me to read a few words from one of Senator Dolliver's great speeches. As stated, he had severely arraigned the Republicans for the betrayal of the people and the predatory interests for their greedy selfishness. He stated that he had been—> charged here and elsewhere with a betrayal of the protective-tariff system, and the humble suggestions which I have felt it incumbent upon me to make have been met with a tone of malice and derision which ought not to intrude upon proceedings such as ours. * * * The efforts I have made to modify some of these schedules, instead of being the efforts of a free-trade enthusiast or an enemy of the tariff system have been those of a consistent protectionist, standing not only by the platform of his party but by the historic standard which the party has interpreted in the legislation of the last 30 years.

>
> What has been the sum of my offense? I asked the Senate to retain the Dingley law upon the cotton schedule and to reject an underhand attempt to raise it without anybody knowing it. I asked the Senate to open Schedule K, which has for 42 years stood substantially without change upon our statute books, not to destroy its protective efficiency but to equalize its burdens and to distribute its benefits fairly among the manufacturing industries interested in it.

He then refers to Senate leaders, who arrogate—> to themselves the right to determine the status of those within the ranks of the Republican Party, stood on this floor charging me with "reading importers' briefs" for the destruction of the protective-tariff system.

He referred to the efforts to drive him out of the party, and declared that—

> It will be a long time before the Senator from Iowa will be read out of the Union or out of the Republican Party by reason of an open and straightforward effort to reduce the rates on the clothing of the American people, which have for more than a generation fattened the men who made them and which at last have been capitalized by the handful of promoters who enjoy their dividends.

He further stated:

> We have seen in this Congress a spectacle that has discouraged my heart, the spectacle of men being compelled to bargain with the authorities which control the Senate for the protection of the interests of their own people.
>
> We have seen the majority obtained here not by an appeal publicly and squarely made to the judgment and conscience of the Senate but by a sort of reciprocity of benefits, all centering in the so-called "citadel of protection."

What a frightful picture of the manner in which the Payne-Aldrich tariff law was enacted.

Both he and the present senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] led a revolt against the leadership of their party, which was controlled by corporations and trusts and by highly protected interests, who dictated schedules and secured legislation to add to their enormous fortunes. The senior Senator from Iowa was the exponent of what was denominated as the "Iowa idea." He was a gallant leader in the Republican Party against its anachronisms and its effete, selfish, and oppressive policies, which in their reactions were injurious to the economic and industrial life and progress of the people, and destructive of that spirit of fellowship and fraternity which should exist between the United States and other nations of the world. Notwithstanding the appeals of these two able Senators and other liberal statesmen in the Republican Party, the illiberal and reactionary forces were supreme, and the Republican Party turned its back upon the people and became the complacent tool in the hands of special interests, who dictated the policies of that party and thus became the governors of the Republic.

Mr. President, I was a Member of the House of Representatives when the Dingley tariff bill was under consideration. I well remember the lobbyists and the special interests who thronged the capital and the almost unrestricted power which they exercised in the formulation of that bill. It was not written by the American people or to aid the American people. Avarice and greed dictated its schedules, as they dictated the provisions of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill. Under the Dingley bill huge corporations were developed, gigantic trusts were established, enormous fortunes were made, and certain manufacturing centers increased in wealth and power until they thought that the Government and its taxing power and its great forces existed only to promote their selfish ends. But the Dingley bill was an innocent measure when compared with this Fordney-McCumber bill which is now upon our desks.

Mr. President, a word respecting the manner in which the Senate bill was prepared. After the House passed the Fordney bill and it came to the Senate it was referred to the Finance Committee. Hearings were had, the witnesses in the main being representatives of interests desiring embargoes or tariffs almost, if not quite, prohibitive. The testimony given is not very illuminating and but little data of a credible or fundamental character is submitted.

Generalizations are indulged in. Piteous appeals, in some instances, are submitted for increased tariff duties. But few, if any, facts are submitted upon which the committee could act intelligently in the formulation of tariff schedules. There are hysterical cries about the menace of foreign competition. The specter of a resurrected Germany is thrown upon the screen by the clamorous volunteer witnesses whose interest and expected profits and benefits prompt them to appear. They state nothing of importance about the cost of production, about profits, about the basic facts connected with the industry or enterprise. But little is submitted which would aid in preparing a just and fair tariff bill.

Upon the conclusion of the hearings the Democratic Senators were excluded from the committee room. The Republican members then proceeded to frame the bill. Those Senators who were here during the period when the bill was being incubated by the Republican members saw almost daily the corridors of the Senate Office Building and those adjacent to the Finance Committee room overflowing with men who were representing the interests and who hoped to profit by the tariff bill. They were watching the doors of the committee room, and many entered therein. What they said, what testimony they gave, what views were submitted no Democratic member of the committee has been advised. The minority members were not permitted to hear these witnesses or to know what they stated to the Republican members of the Finance Committee day after day and week after week. Washington was filled with these lobbyists and representatives of protected industries who were seeking opportunities to impress upon the Republican members of the committee their demands for their extortionate tariff rates now found in this bill.

Mr. President, I concede the right of the Republicans, as they are in the majority, to write the tariff bill; that is, I concede the technical right of the majority to frame the measures which are to be brought into the Senate for consideration. I deny, however, the propriety, indeed, I deny the moral right of the majority to frame legislation without consultation with the minority. Under the rules of the Senate committees are organized. The party in control of the Senate has a majority upon every committee, but the committees are arms of the Senate. Bills and resolutions offered are referred to appropriate committees.

A committee consists of Republicans and Democrats, not Republicans alone. Bills referred to the committee are to be considered by the members of the committee, both majority and minority members. The majority members have no right to exclude the minority from the committee room and hear testimony and fashion the legislation without giving the latter an opportunity to hear the testimony, to express their views, and to offer such suggestions as they may desire with reference to the bills or measures to be reported back to the Senate.

But conceding that the majority members of the committee have the right to meet secretly and to exclude the minority and to frame legislation, I deny their right to hear testimony in secret—testimony relating to the measures before them and which in the very nature of things influences them in their action. And the vice of this procedure is emphasized when such testimony is not stenographically reported and no minutes are taken in order that the minority members or the Senate may not know its character. As stated, there were hearings before the committee when the Democrats were permitted to participate. Those hearings have been published and are available to Senators. It is presumed that these published hearings were the basis of the action of the committee, and that the bill reported rests upon the same. Senators who read the bill may desire to know what testimony was offered in support of a given item or paragraph or schedule appearing in the bill. An examination of the printed record will show whether the testimony given warrants the provision of the bill to which the testimony refers. But if testimony is received in secret and not reported, and is not available either to the minority members of the committee or to other Senators, except the majority members of the Committee on Finance who heard it, then not only the minority members, but all Senators who were denied the opportunity to know what the testimony was, are placed at a disadvantage. It is unfair to them. Every Senator is entitled to know what reasons justify, or were regarded as justifying, a particular measure. No testimony should be received in secret by members of any committee where either the majority or the minority are excluded. Such a course subjects the party in control to just criticism and will arouse suspicions upon the part of the public as to the honesty and integrity of Congress. It can not be otherwise.

When it is known that representatives of a powerful chemical company were heard in secret by the majority members of the committee, and their testimony was not taken down, and that the bill when finally reported contained provisions exceedingly favorable to their interests—provisions which give them a monopoly and an embargo—there will be just indignation, and many Americans will feel that the methods employed in legislation are dark and devious, if not corrupt; or, at any rate, such procedure will afford just grounds for suspicions which will tend to undermine the confidence of the people in the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. President, I desire to briefly refer to the provision of the bill discussed by my colleague [Mr. SMOOT]. In my opinion it is unwise to commit to the Executive the power to raise or lower rates.

Both my colleague and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] support these provisions of the bill. Doubtless they were inclined to do so in order to continue the House provisions calling for the American valuation. I shall not at this time point out what I conceive to be the evils of the House provisions, nor shall I balance the points in favor of and against the two plans with the purpose of determining which is the more objectionable.

The Senate bill sets up a Federal agency to determine and fix tariff duties. The President—and of course that means subordinate officials of the Government, upon whose recommendations the President must rely—is authorized to materially increase the duties laid in the bill. In other words, high as the duties are as fixed in this bill, they may be materially increased by an appeal to the President by those who may affect to be displeased with existing rates.

Mr. President, I am unwilling to commit to executive agencies and commissions the power which this bill seeks to give them. If the President, upon advice of the Tariff Commission, is authorized to increase tariff rates upon the application of beneficiaries of higher duties, then any usefulness the Tariff Commission now has will cease and it will become the football of the special interests and those seeking increased tariff duties. Let me add parenthetically that some have already lost confidence in the Tariff Commission; but under this system its usefulness will be destroyed and it will be regarded as an instrumentality to be employed in increasing the rates fixed in this bill upon the demand of trusts and predatory interests.

Mr. President, under this provision authorizing the President to increase tariff rates the tariff will never be taken out of politics, and no tariff bill will ever settle any schedule or definitely fix rates. Appeals will be made by selfish corporations or individuals for an increase in rates. The law will be regarded as an invitation for persons to make appeals for an increase in rates. Senators know that no matter how high tariff rates may be there will be persistent efforts to secure higher duties. The McKinley bill gave to the country rates that were unprecedented and shocked the American people. High as they were, selfish and greedy persons were soon demanding still higher rates, and a nation-wide propaganda was carried on which culminated in the Dingley bill, which greatly increased duties over the McKinley bill. The Dingley bill was regarded as the ne plus ultra of protectionism. No statesman of standing, when that bill was passed, believed that higher duties would ever be imposed, and yet manufacturing and other interests in the United States soon after began an agitation for a revision of the tariff. Many Republicans insisted that the tariff be revised downward, but the beneficiaries of high tariffs controlled the Republican Party, and by their false appeals secured control of the legislative and executive branches of the Government and the Payne-Aldrich tariff law was enacted. Notwithstanding the disastrous effects of that bill and though it divided the Republican Party, the selfish and greedy zealots who feed and fatten upon protectionism have continued the propaganda for higher rates. And their efforts have found fruition in this iniquitous and oppressive bill which some will call the Fordney-McCumber bill.

Mr. President, under the provision authorizing the President to increase rates the beneficiaries of the tariff system will maintain permanent lobbies at Washington. Witnesses appearing before the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee, and who demand higher duties, will transfer their activities to the executive agencies. The tariff question will not only be projected into but kept in the political arena. The President will constantly be drawn into it. Pressure will be brought upon him and the executive agency which will represent and speak for him.

Let me illustrate. Some manufacturer will represent to the Senators and Congressmen of his State that the rates upon the commodity which he manufactures are too low. He will insist that the matter be called to the attention of the President, to the end that the rates may be increased. He may be a powerful political factor in the State. He may have thousands of employees, and other manufacturing institutions may be interested in the success of his efforts, realizing that if he wins the door of opportunity will be open for them to increase rates upon their products. Accordingly they will join with him in bringing pressure upon the Executive to revise and increase the duties upon the commodity in question. And so political pressure will be brought to change the tariff law, and if the plan wins all other manufacturers or producers of like or of similar commodities will immediately demand that the rates be raised upon their products, and the circle will widen until thousands and tens of thousands of applications will be made for increases. Washington will be the Mecca to which the agents of these interests will direct their footsteps, and the tariff question, instead of being settled, will be transferred from Congress to the President and will be a virulent and cancerous growth, invading more and more the tissue of the entire economic and business life of the Nation.

Mr. President, the senior Senator from Utah in the able address just concluded referred to the importance of stability in tariff rates, or rather showed how important it was that business should know what the tariff rates were, and that when tariff laws were enacted they should continue unimpaired unless impelling reasons called for their modification. It is patent that if tariff laws are to be frequently changed business will be seriously interrupted. Business men desire to know what the law is, what their obligations are, what the tariff duties are, and if they are left in doubt and uncertainty they are restrained from bold and aggressive business activity and from movements which would enlarge their business and make for national development and progress.

Mr. President, if this bill passes in its present form, with the power committed to the President to change tariff rates, I repeat, instability in business will result and tariff schedules and tariff laws will be prepared and enacted by the President and minor executive officials instead of by the Congress, as the Constitution provides.

However, Mr. President, I am told that this bill will pass, no matter what its infirmities or evils or iniquities may be. The "manufacturers' bloc" and the "tariff bloc" and perhaps some other "blocs" are behind it. These are strange and remarkable developments in our parliamentary and legislative experience. In the early days of the Republic parties were formed. Jefferson became the leader of a mighty party which has guided for many years the destinies of this Republic and whose influence has contributed greatly to its phenomenal development. Hamilton and his associates founded a political party which passed away to be succeeded by others. For years the Republican and Democratic parties have been in control of this Republic. The policies of these parties, policies stated in their various platforms, have found expression in national legislation and have determined the international course which our Nation has pursued. Leaders in both parties doubtless have made serious mistakes and both parties have often failed to carry into effect the pledges made to the people; but they have been militant and aggressive political organizations, seeking through the machinery of party organization to control in a political way the Nation as well as the States of the Union. The people have intrusted one or the other of these parties with power, and when placed in position the people have expected that they would, with fidelity, execute the mission given them.

The people understood that the present Republican administration was in control in Congress and that the various committees would report legislation; that the Republican Party, as such, would carry into effect the platform pledges of the party. But a new theory of legislation has been devised, and new forces have arisen which threaten the destruction of the parliamentary system of the past and the plan of Government which has, with all its defects and imperfections, been of incalculable benefit to the American people. We are now to be governed not by parties but by blocs and groups and combinations. We have a "tariff bloc" and a "manufacturers' bloc" and these are to unite to drive through the legislative mazes this most astounding tariff bill.

Mr. President, if we are to be governed by blocs and groups, I repeat, our party system, our parliamentary system, as we now know it, will be destroyed. We will have a farmers' bloc and a bankers' bloc and a manufacturers' bloc and a labor bloc and all sorts of blocs and groups and combinations. There will be intrigues between groups; rings within rings and combinations within combinations and groups within groups, trading and bartering and buying and selling—all these things and more will occur, until disaster will result to the Republic.

Mr. President, we need political parties, and courageous and patriotic men and women must support political parties and carry out political policies. It is true parties may become corrupt, and they sometimes betray their people. Party leaders at times are recreant to their trust and false to their supporters, but in my opinion through political parties the best government will be secured by the people. We are often displeased with our parties. We frequently feel that they have departed from the fundamental principles upon which they rest. If political parties do lose their virtue and cease to function in the interest of good government and for the promotion of the welfare of the people and the preservation of the Republic, then they should be destroyed and other political organizations erected to execute the people's will. In our Government two vigorous, earnest, and honest political parties can meet the legitimate demands of the people. One party will necessarily be more progressive and more liberal than the other. It will be devoted rather to the interest of the masses, to the welfare of the toilers, and to individuals rather than to property. It will speak for the oppressed and seek liberty and justice rather than power and the gaudy trappings of imperialism. One party will attribute to property a sacredness far above that to which it is entitled. It will be inclined to be reactionary, and unresponsive to the great moral and humanizing forces that in the end will control the world.

Of course, I believe the Democratic Party is the party of progress, of liberty, and justice; that its mission was proclaimed by Thomas Jefferson; that its mission is to defend the rights of the individual, preserve the States of the Union, and maintain unimpaired the Constitution of the United States. It would, in my opinion, be most unfortunate if these political parties were destroyed and blocs and groups, racial or religious or industrial, should arise upon their ruins.

Europe has been cursed with blocs. They have overthrown governments, precipitated national and international controversies, and in some instances provoked wars that have desolated nations. There are clerical groups and combinations and federations based upon sectionalism or religious issues or other matters which tend to weaken government and to prevent the adoption of any settled fixed national or international policies.

Since coming into the Chamber to-day I have been handed a letter dated April 19, written by Mr. J. A. Arnold, vice president of what is called the Southern Tariff Association. The letterhead indicates that the association has headquarters, or at least branch headquarters, at the Raleigh Hotel in this city. It denominates itself as "nonpartisan," and at the top of its printed letterheads are the words, "Organized to protect and promote the interests of those engaged in productive pursuits. 'To equalize the cost of production.'"

Many of these national and nonpartisan movements, Mr. President, are exceedingly partisan, but often they are mercilessly selfish, and frequently engage in procuring impolitic, sectional, or class legislation, or defeating sound and merited enactments. May I say in passing that there appear to be scores, if not hundreds, of organizations having permanent headquarters in Washington, which seems to be the mecca to which groups and blocs and those seeking special and class legislation come. Expensive offices are maintained and highly-paid lobbyists are retained.

I do not disparage movements against oppression or unwise and un-American policies or efforts to secure just and constitutional legislation. Many persons come to Washington with truth upon their lips and with a desire to aid in securing legislation promotive of the public welfare or to defeat legislation, projects, and policies that would be injurious to our country and to the American people. It is eminently proper that facts be presented to Congress. Hearings are ordered for the purpose of obtaining facts by which the action of Congress may be determined. In my criticism of reprehensible and sinister influences and organizations and groups and confederations I do not strike at efforts and movements which are promoted by patriotism and by a sincere desire to advance the public weal. It is altogether proper that men and women throughout the land should be alert and vigilant, and when they discover improper or dangerous tendencies or the projection of unwise or sectional or selfish policies they should make known their opposition and present to executive departments and to the legislative branch of the Government, as well as to the public, the dangers and evils to be apprehended and avoided.

This letter to which I refer was sent to a chemical company—one that is profiting by this bill before us. The letter states:

> At the meeting of our schedule committee here on April 12–13 we reiterated our position favoring a dye embargo, and in filing our schedule with the tariff bloc, President Kirby called attention to our North Carolina resolution demanding an embargo on dyes. We are inclosing a copy of the schedule sheet containing the dye reference.
>
> Am also inclosing copy of report of our meeting to our membership.

It is apparent from the letter, as well as from the annexes, that this so-called "Southern Tariff Association" is cooperating with other organizations and seeking confederation with industries and organizations which are to be beneficiaries if the odious schedules found in this bill are enacted into law. The evidences are multiplying of the log rolling, combining and confederating of groups and industries and associations, to secure the enactment of the Fordney bill. This letter indicates that this so-called "nonpartisan" tariff association is willing to combine with the dyestuffs industry and secure the adoption of an un-American policy, to wit, the enactment of an embargo law.

It has been known for some time that interests which have for years profited by high tariffs have been seeking a rapprochement with the agriculturists, and we now behold the "agricultural bloc," and the manufacturers' bloc yoked together. It is an unholy alliance and an unequal yoking to push tariff rates to levels unprecedented.

There is no common ground upon which the special interests who have dictated tariff laws for nearly 50 years and agriculturists can stand, and yet during most of this period the majority of the farmers in the United States have been deceived by the protectionists and have supported their un-American and selfish policies. The agriculturists, with their surplus products selling at prices fixed in the world's market, and the manufacturers and beneficiaries of our tariff laws have grown enormously rich by selling to the domestic consumer, including agricultural populations, their products at price levels inordinately high and maintained by unfair tariff rates. The farmers have sold their wheat and corn and their products not only in the American but in foreign markets too often at prices which brought no returns, but the protected industries have compelled the American consumers to purchase their products not at world prices but at levels which were oppressive to the domestic consumer, and as stated, enormously profitable to the tariff beneficiary. The agricultural interests are still being deceived, and in the language of the street "buncoed" and "fooled," and are being drawn into an alliance with the selfish and predatory interests which in the past have plundered the farmers and the American people and which in the future propose to continue their exploiting activities.

The letter speaks of the "tariff bloc" and "the filing of our schedule with this bloc." If it were not for extraneous evidence, there might be some doubt as to what was meant by the "tariff bloc," but we are not left in doubt because the report accompanying the letter reveals the character and personnel of the bloc, and information which we obtain from time to time has revealed that the tariff bloc consists of distinguished Republican Senators who are not members of the Finance Committee.

I had supposed that the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, the chairman of the Finance Committee, and his able associates, were to determine the form of the bill which was to be submitted to the Senate for consideration. When the House sent the Fordney tariff bill to the Senate it was promptly referred, as by the rules of the Senate required, to the Finance Committee of this body. That committee is composed of 10 Republican and 6 Democratic Senators, who are all able and distinguished Members of this body.

We had supposed that this committee would examine the House bill, weigh carefully its provisions, order hearings, if they thought proper, and after a painstaking and careful examination, because the subject is one of vast importance to the country, they would report back to the Senate a measure which reflected their matured judgment. Perhaps I should qualify that by stating that the Democrats, and doubtless the country, knew that the bill, as reported back, would not express the views of the Democratic Members of the Finance Committee. But it was supposed that if hearings were had Republicans and Democrats would participate and that the views of all members of the committee would be considered in preparing the amended bill for the Senate. And it was thought that the bill when presented would be, if not the composite production of both the majority and minority members of the committee, at least a bill that was prepared by the majority of the Finance Committee and not by outside and external forces and interests.

But it would seem as though the tariff bloc, which has united with the manufacturers' bloc, were dominating—I shall not say controlling—factors.

Accompanying the letter is a report to the membership of this Southern Tariff Association. I invite attention to a few sentences from this remarkable document:

> We were given a special hearing by the Senate tariff bloc and presented to them our memorial and schedules and such changes as desired in the Senate Finance Committee's report.

Why did not this Southern Tariff Association and its Washington lobby go to the Senator from North Dakota and to members of the Senate Finance Committee for changes which they desired? Why seek the so-called tariff bloc? Of course, the reason is obvious. They must have understood that the tariff bloc was sufficiently powerful to dictate schedules, to force its will upon the Finance Committee. Proceeding, the report says:

> Copy of the memorial is first attached and copy of our schedules will appear in the next issue of the Southern Tariff Advocate of May 1. The Senate tariff bloc received us at 10 a. m., Room 128, Senate Building, Senator GOODING, chairman of the bloc, presiding. We were given a satisfactory hearing and feel that we have rendered southern industries a distinct service. We inclose second attached list of 25 Senators present.

Let me add, Mr. President, that none of the Senators upon this list is a member of the Senate Finance Committee. Mr. President, this is an astounding revelation. We find a tariff bloc sitting in state, apparently in the Senate Office Building, receiving representatives of organizations and those who are trying to influence legislation and obtain higher tariff rates.

The report says:

> The Senate tariff bloc received us at 10 a. m.

Of course, this tariff bloc is not holding receptions. What are its functions? From whom does it obtain its authority? Why were interests seeking to promote special legislation for the advantage of groups and organizations appearing before this, I shall not say political but certainly extra, legislative body? May I inquire who appointed this tariff bloc of 25 Senators to receive delegations and to consider their schedules and their suggestions? Were they fashioning legislation? Were they writing the bill which is before us, or preparing the various schedules to be submitted to the Senate Finance Committee upon which the latter should put its seal of approval? Has the Finance Committee abdicated its functions? Has the Senate lost its legislative power and authority and committed it to a tariff bloc? If that be true, let us abolish the Finance Committee and permit these outside and extraneous organizations to take charge of the legislation of the country. No wonder the influence of this legislative body is diminishing.

Mr. President, when the Ways and Means Committee of the House was organized in March, 1920, the lobbyists and representatives of protected interests, like the locusts in ancient Egypt, settled down upon Washington, and they, uniting with organizations claiming to represent the agriculturists, have exerted every influence possible to secure the passage of tariff legislation which would place the American consumer at the mercy of what Mr. Roosevelt called "the predatory interests" of the country. They have demanded schedules and tariff provisions and tried to squeeze the Finance Committee of the Senate as the strong man would compress the clay within his hands.

We hear that the schedules in this bill are "satisfactory" to the tariff bloc and to the manufacturers' bloc and the manufacturers' representatives and lobbyists. Think of the unction of the Southern Tariff Association:

We were given a satisfactory hearing and feel that we have rendered southern industries a distinct service.

Did they get promises from the tariff bloc? If so, what service did they render? The bill before us reveals what those benefits are. Tariff rates are increased. Hundreds of articles that should be free are placed upon the dutiable list. Upon hundreds, if not thousands, of articles the tariff rates have been increased. The domestic market, instead of being a competitive market, is to be a restricted market, with the manufacturers and the producers of many commodities so intrenched as to compel the payment of prices far beyond the value of the commodities. This remarkable report continues:

We are planning to hold congresses in each of the Southern States and arouse the industrial South to a unanimous expression in favor of a protective tariff, American valuation, and the immediate enactment of the permanent tariff measure. This work to be followed with the organization of congressional districts into working units.

Mr. President, this is a fair warning that these organizations, these tariff associations, these manufacturers' combinations, are to attempt to control the political parties in the South. They are to organize in each congressional district. For what reason? To name Congressmen or force those who are named, at the risk of their opposition, to support embargoes and prohibitive tariffs in behalf of the selfish combinations who would use the taxing power of the Government in an illegal and unconstitutional way, and increase their profits and swell their fortunes. I denounce these schemes and plots as un-American, as destructive of the integrity of political organizations, and as harmful to the Republic and injurious in the highest degree to the people themselves.

It seems, Mr. President, the plan is to use political parties if they may be used; or, if not, to destroy them and to combine tariff blocs, manufacturers' blocs, and other blocs and groups and confederations to control Congress and dictate legislation. The political parties, or at least the Democratic Party, is to be destroyed, and interests, held together by the cohesive power of plunder, are to run the Government. The report further proceeds:

Among those who addressed our meeting were Senator GOODING, chairman of the Senate bloc; Chairman FORDNEY, of the Ways and Means Committee; and Senator HARRELD, of Oklahoma.

I am led to inquire, Why was the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee present?

The letter to which I referred approves of the American valuation plan. We may speculate, but I do not think we go far astray as to the reason of the presence of the distinguished gentleman. Further reading from the report:

President Kirby addressed the agricultural House bloc in the evening, and was given a warm reception by quite a considerable number of our Congressmen.

There is a memorial, which, I understand, was submitted for the RECORD a few days ago by the Senator from Idaho. It is entitled "Memorial of the Southern Tariff Association," presented to the Senate tariff bloc April 13. It speaks of the downfall of Rome, and then drifts into what amounts to a threat that the enlightened business judgment of the South may be rapidly becoming a political "pronouncement." It does contain a statement which shows an appreciation of the iniquities of past Republican tariff laws:

The farmer protests, as he ought to protest, against having to sell in a free market and buy in a protected mart.

Of course, everybody knows that with the enormous agricultural surplus the American farmer is compelled to, and will be compelled to, sell in the markets of the world, and that tariff laws will prove of no advantage whatever to him. Why should the farmer protest against buying in a "protected mart"? The reason is obvious, but the farmers have had that fact concealed from them. The "protected mart" is the one which enables the manufacturer and the beneficiary of Republican protective legislation to increase prices far above world prices and far beyond the level at which legitimate profits would follow. The memorialists confess that protection means higher prices for the manufacturer and greater burdens for the consumer.

But they are trying to reconcile the farmers of the country to this exploiting policy by promising them an equal opportunity for exploitation. The morality of this proposition evidently satisfies these memorialists.

The Senator sitting near me asks sotto voce the names of the Senators of this historic organization known as the "tariff bloc." In view of the fact that this bill before us will become historic, it is eminently proper that the tariff bloc, who undoubtedly have been so powerful in promoting it and will be so potential in passing it, should be preserved to history, and the names of the organization immortalized, if not canonized. I therefore feel it my sacred duty to have the names entombed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The Senator sitting at my side [Mr. CARAWAY] suggests that I should say "embalmed" instead of "entombed." The report from which I read contains the following list of Senators present at the hearing given the schedule committee of the Southern Tariff Association by the Senate tariff bloc April 13, 1922, held in room 128, Senate Office Building:

Senators GOODING, Idaho, chairman; MCNARY, Oregon, secretary; ODDIE, Nevada; NICHOLSON, Colorado; JOHNSON, California; HARRELD, Oklahoma; TOWNSEND, Michigan; LADD, North Dakota; NEW, Indiana; POINDEXTER, Washington; SPENCER, Missouri; STERLING, South Dakota; BURSUM, New Mexico; SHORTRIDGE, California; WILLIS, Ohio; NORBECK, South Dakota; CAMERON, Arizona; CUMMINS, Iowa; CURTIS, Kansas; CAPPER, Kansas; STANFIELD, Oregon; JONES, Washington; WARREN, Wyoming; KEYES, New Hampshire; WELLER, Maryland.

I hope that Senators will pardon me for not giving the full names, but I am presenting their names just as they appear in the report.

I see the name of my distinguished friend from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] who has been regarded as a stalwart in the Republican ranks. His white plume has been seen for a quarter of a century upon every sanguinary battle field where the fight raged between the militant forces of Republicanism and Democracy. It is sad, but it seems as if he has deserted and joined the tariff bloc.

I see the name of my distinguished friend from Iowa, Senator CUMMINS——

Mr. CUMMINS. What is that?

Mr. KING. The report says "CUMMINS, Iowa."

Mr. CUMMINS. I must say, Mr. President, that that disparages the entire communication, because I have not been present at any meeting of this sort nor have I ever been invited to any meeting of the kind.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope there are others who will arise and confess that they have not abandoned the faith and joined the tariff bloc. Now is the time for confessions, and I hope others will come to the front.

Let us discover who are Republicans and who are Democrats, and whether we have any Republican Party or any Democratic Party, and whether this country is to be governed by political parties or by blocs and groups and combinations and organizations—racial, religious, industrial, economic, or what not. If we are to be governed by agricultural blocs and manufacturers' blocs and tariff blocs and groups who organize to secure legislation or to shape the policies of the country, regardless of the welfare of the masses, it is time that we should be so advised. Mr. President, in the language of the street, it is "time for a show-down." Let us know whether the principles upon which this Republic was founded are to be preserved, whether the policies announced by Jefferson are to be followed by Democrats and the policies and principles which sincere and patriotic Republicans of the past have declared are to be the guide of the Republican national party. Let us discover who is to frame legislation. It is time that we should learn whether Senators and Representatives are mere delegates or Representatives in all that that term implies.

At the risk of being charged with repetition, I affirm, Mr. President, that the best interests of our country require the maintenance of vigorous, militant political parties—parties who submit their platforms to the people and who, when triumphant, sincerely and courageously, in the interest of the public, seek to carry them into effect.

Political parties may and do frequently err. They depart from proclaimed principles and are guilty of infidelity to great ideals which they profess. But they have their place in this Republic. While I am contending for political parties and their importance in our political life, I am far from asserting that every person should affiliate with the two great national organizations. Oftentimes both parties may be wrong upon one or many great issues.

Independent forces, guided by lofty ideals and noble resolves, may be necessary to bring them back to the paths of safety and justice. Politicians and those controlling the machinery of political organizations may at times, while preserving the forms and principles of political creeds, lose the spirit which is necessary to carry out the creed and the policy. Political parties may sometimes be shells and whited sepulchers. Such should be pushed into oblivion. But the great political parties of our country in the main represent the political issues and differences among the people, and the battle lines drawn by them have generally called for and have generally brought to the contending forces substantially all of the electorate of the land. Imperfect as our political parties are, they serve a most useful purpose in our political and economic life. Let us not destroy them until something better is offered. In my opinion, bloc government is not a fit substitute for party government.

I have just been handed a statement dealing with the tariff bloc, which was issued by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING], which in part is as follows:

As chairman of a committee of 25 Senators who desire an all-American tariff bill passed by Congress before adjournment this summer, I desire to make the following statement on the eve of the reporting of the Fordney-McCumber bill:

The Senate Finance Committee, after months of the most painstaking study and care, has about completed its work on the first all-American tariff bill in our history. This measure will protect agriculture and industry alike, not only in the West and South, but in the East and North. Under the leadership of Chairman MCCUMBER and with the support of my committee I am firmly convinced that the tariff bill when finally enacted will be one which every section of this country will gladly support. As there never has been such a need for a tariff which recognized all sections alike, and as there never has been such a unanimous demand for tariff legislation, I think I can safely say that this Congress will never adjourn until the tariff bill is passed.

This is the sentiment of both the Senate and the House.

Furthermore, those interests which have been camouflaging their opposition to any tariff legislation by attacking the principle of American valuation as a basis for ad valorem duties are, in my opinion, not going to succeed with their anti-American propaganda. This tariff bill when it passes both Houses is going to be all-American in every respect. * * *

The following is a list of Senators who have expressed a willingness to accept the schedules in the new tariff bill proposed by the national farm organizations, including the National Grange, the National Farm Bureau, the National Dairy Association, the National Poultry Association, the National Wool Growers' Association, the American National Live Stock Association, and the Southern Tariff Association:

Senators GOODING, Idaho, chairman; MCNARY, Oregon, secretary; JOHNSON, California; CAPPER, Kansas; NICHOLSON, Colorado, forming the executive committee; and PHIPPS, Colorado; NORBECK, South Dakota; JONES, New Mexico; POINDEXTER, Washington; STANFIELD, Oregon; SHORTRIDGE, California; ODDIE, Nevada; LADD, North Dakota; BURSUM, New Mexico; CAMERON, Arizona; WARREN, Wyoming; SPENCER, Missouri; WILLIS, Ohio; HARRELD, Oklahoma; NEW, Indiana; WELLER, Maryland; KEYES, New Hampshire; TOWNSEND, Michigan; STERLING, South Dakota; RAWSON, Iowa.

It will be observed that there is a tariff bloc, and the chairman declares that as head of a—

Committee of 25 Senators who desire an all-American tariff bill passed by Congress before adjournment this summer, I desire to make the following statement on the eve of the reporting of the Fordney-McCumber bill.

I observe in this statement a severe condemnation of the proponents of the foreign valuation plan. The tariff bloc seems to think that the American valuation, as a basis for ad valorem duties, is the only proper plan and that any different one is "anti-American." That means, of course, that the tariff bloc wants a prohibitive tariff.

It was shown in the able speech of my distinguished colleague [Senator SMOOT] that the American valuation plan was not only unworkable but was unscientific and indefensible. It would seem that the tariff bloc and the greedy manufacturers are clamoring for rates which will constitute an embargo, that they may maintain such prices upon the domestic products as human selfishness, raised to the "nth" degree, demands. I do not think I am transgressing the rule when I say that the press carries a statement from the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House [Mr. FORDNEY] to the effect that if the American valuation provision is not preserved in the bill Congress will sit until the "snow flies." I think there are others who will say that if it does carry that provision Congress will remain beyond the period when the white mantle covers the earth. The months are short, winter will soon arrive, and the 4th of next March is not far distant.

The tariff bloc, if the Senator from Idaho speaks for them, have reached the peaks of the mountain of protectionism. There are no higher peaks to climb. The expedition which has for months unsuccessfully sought to reach the summit of the Himalayas should obtain the services of the tariff bloc. They seek the heights—the heights of protection, the heights of exaction, the heights of isolation. All hail the tariff bloc, with its foreign valuation scheme, its latitudinous tariff rates, and its vision of an America selfish, self-sufficient, self-centered, and self-contained, withdrawn from the great movements which are drawing the world together in amity and peace!

The able senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the few other Republican Senators who are opposing the American valuation plan, must rest under the imputation of being anti-American in the judgment of the tariff bloc. May I repeat that our Republican friends, the members of the tariff bloc, may just as well know now as later that we will be here many months before that policy shall be engraved upon this bill.

Permit me to invite attention for a moment to the announcement of the Senator from Idaho. This is most amazing:

The following is a list of Senators who have expressed a willingness to accept the schedules in the new tariff bill proposed by the national farm organizations, including the National Grange, the National Farm Bureau, the National Dairy Association, the National Poultry Association, the National Wool Growers' Association, the American National Live Stock Association, and the Southern Tariff Association.

Then follows the list of Senators above given.

The clear implication of the statement is that these organizations have prepared tariff schedules which appear in this bill. Senators will recall that in Mr. Arnold's letter which I have just referred to the Southern Tariff Association stated that it had "filed a schedule with the tariff bloc, including an embargo on dyes." Apparently these organizations have covered substantially all products and commodities produced in the United States, and their schedules are the ones appearing in "the new tariff bill proposed by the national farm organizations."

May I again inquire who prepared these schedules and fashioned this bill? Was it these organizations referred to by the Senator when he said that the "following list of Senators expressed a willingness to accept the schedules in the new tariff bill proposed" by them? Did they prepare these schedules? There is a dye embargo provision in the bill. Is this part of their plan? Apparently it is, because it is on their schedules. Of course, we know that the dye monopoly, consisting of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., the National Aniline & Chemical Co., and the Chemical Foundation, and others, prepared it. The dye embargo law, which is now upon the books, was prepared by agents and attorneys of the dye industry, and their handiwork evidently is accepted by these organizations of whom the Senator from Idaho speaks.

Mr. President, the members of this tariff bloc are men of character and ability. I express my profound regret that they feel it is necessary to form blocs in order to secure legislation.

The Senator from Idaho, in his announcement, as well as the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], in his able opening address, stated in substance that this bill would put men "back to work upon the farm and open the factories and bring prosperity." I shall pause long enough to observe that if limited exports will accomplish those results, there is no reason why, since the Republicans have been in power, the results should not have been realized. Our imports for a considerable period of time have been unimportant in a large number of commodities produced in the United States and entering into the lives of the people. Indeed, for 1921 they were less than one-half of the imports in 1920. In 1919 our exports were nearly eight billions, and in 1920 they were in excess of eight billions. In 1921 they were $4,379,000,000, and our imports were $2,250,000,000. The theory of the Senators from North Dakota and Idaho is that the less the imports the greater our domestic prosperity. Manifestly, if there were no imports, then our prosperity should reach the flowering period. Men of that school can not conceive of advantages resulting from trade, or, at any rate, if they perceive any benefits, they are to be derived only by the seller and not by the buyer, and sales and exports can be had without corresponding purchases and imports. If the philosophy of the Senators be sound, then our prosperity should be greater now than it was in 1919 and 1920, because our imports have shrunk from five and a quarter billions to two and a half billions of dollars within a year. There is not always a perfect ratio between exports and imports; and some countries, because of extraneous conditions which I have not time now to examine, may export more than they import and become prosperous. But, generally speaking, the exporting nations are importing nations, and the measure of prosperity is gauged by production and sale, whether the sales be made in the domestic market or in foreign markets.

With diminishing imports as well as exports factories have closed, mills have become silent, mines have ceased to produce, and millions of courageous and efficient men and women have been compelled to join the mighty army of the unemployed. As soon as Europe is in a position to buy our surplus products, both primary and finished products, then we will have returning prosperity. Europe could consume all of our surplus agricultural products, including cotton, as well as copper and many other mineral products which we classify as raw materials, and also finished products. Every country in the world wants American products.

With political stability in Europe, with returning confidence in the permanency or at least stability of European nations, there will be demands for American products which have never been surpassed, unless during the war, and those demands will increase with returning economic and industrial development throughout the world. China will soon be ready to purchase millions of American products. Manchuria and Siberia will afford markets for American goods. Indeed, the world will seek our shores to buy our products and to contribute to our prosperity and national wealth.

Mr. President, this great tide of wealth and advantage will flow to our shores if we will but pursue a wise and sound economic course. Our greatest prosperity came to us when tariffs were not prohibitive; but now the reactionaries and the unsound political economists who are dictating the financial and economic policies of the Republic, blinded by selfishness and controlled by the demands of trusts and special interests, are determined to interfere with the returning tide of prosperity and to close the door of opportunity to the American people. I repeat, Mr. President, if restricted imports or no imports bring prosperity, why is there not prosperity in the United States to-day? There is more capital, there is more wealth than when Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt were Presidents. Our wealth, I may add, is in great part the result of Democratic administration.

When President Wilson came to the Presidency the wealth of the United States was approximately $187,000,000,000. When he left the White House our national wealth exceeded $300,000,000,000. But our wealth and our capital have not since the Republicans came into power brought us prosperity, and our constantly diminishing imports have not resulted in putting the men upon the farms or opening the mills or reviving the languishing and despairing business of our country.

Mr. President, there can be and will be a certain amount of prosperity and progress if we do not export American products. One hundred and ten millions of people in a rich country such as this is require commodities of tremendous value for their support. We will have in the future, as in the past, an enormous domestic market, and under a most illiberal and restrictive tariff policy there is sure to be enormous production for domestic consumption and a reasonable degree of prosperity.

So the Fordney-McCumber bill, with all of its odious, discriminatory, archaic, and destructive features, will not destroy American production nor kill American demands for food and clothing and the multitudinous commodities essential to life and health.

May I digress, Mr. President, to briefly emphasize the prosperity which came to this Nation and to the American people under the eight years of Mr. Wilson's administration. Measured by every standard that determines the progress and advancement of the people, the history of the world furnishes no parallel to that found in our country during that period. In material wealth we outstrip the world. The value of the property of our country nearly doubled. Our foreign commerce rose from a few billions to thirteen billions of dollars. During that period our country participated in the greatest war of all time, and under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson our resources were mobilized, our armies marshaled, and our flag, carried before millions of gallant American soldiers, saw retreating military forces fall back discomfited, beaten, and routed until finally the enemy laid down his arms. The eight years of Woodrow Wilson were the golden age of this Republic. In the centuries that shall follow that period will be remembered as a most glorious one in the history of this Republic, and the leader of the Nation during that period will be remembered for all time as the noblest figure of his age.

The Republican Party, appreciating the financial depression and the industrial paralysis which their foolish policies have largely brought about, are attempting to find some excuse therefor. They promised the American people a complete reversal in the policies of Mr. Wilson. They came in not to construct but to destroy, not to build but to act as iconoclasts; and blinded by prejudice and passion they have gone about like foolish workmen knocking and seeking to destroy the noble edifice which had been erected by the Democratic Party.

Their policies have brought ruin and disaster to agriculture as well as unparalleled suffering to labor. Indeed, business of all kinds has been caught in the deadly calm that has attended Republican success. Unable to devise constructive policies to advance the interests of our country and of the world, they seized upon the Underwood-Simmons law, under which our prosperity was greatest, as a pretext for the industrial depression in the land. I repeat what I said a few moments ago, if we had a wise and liberal foreign policy and a sane and national domestic policy we would not be in the slough of despond. World conditions inevitably would have caused a recession in our tide of prosperity, but the low levels reached since the Republicans have come into power are to be charged to the unwise policies of the administration.

I am prompted to tell Senators upon the other side of the Chamber that they pledged the country to retrenchment and economy. They promised to promptly separate from the service 40,000 employees in Washington and to materially reduce the taxes; indeed, to get back to a pre-war basis. Revenue legislation enacted during the war because of the enormous demands called for in mobilizing four and one-half millions of our gallant sons for military and naval service was to be promptly replaced by peace-time tax laws. The war ended nearly four years ago, and yet the burdens of taxation have been but inappreciably reduced and our annual expenditures exceed pre-war appropriations four or five hundred per cent.

I notice by this morning's paper that the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding the heavy tax burdens, warns the country that there will be a deficit for the coming fiscal year of $500,000,000. The tax law enacted by the Republicans contains most of the provisions in the war legislation revenue act, provisions which were justified in war, but are to be condemned in peace times. I think inquiry will disclose that even now the deficits resulting from the enormous expenditures made by the Republican Party are met by frequent short-time loans negotiated by the Treasury Department.

Mr. President, the Republicans, with great flourish and glee, announced a Budget system which would prevent deficits, reduce expenditures, and diminish taxes.

Deficits are here, appropriations mounting into the billions continue, and the tax burdens still oppress the people. Distress, poverty, unemployment, discontent—these are the direct and immediate fruits of Republican control of all branches of the Government. The statesmanship of the Republican Party seems to reach the zenith of its perfection and glory in the proposition to enact the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill and to convert the eleven billions of Europe's obligations into long-time bonds, which, in turn, are to be used to meet obligations and as the basis for further extravagant and foolish expenditures.

I venture the opinion, Mr. President, that when we obtain these bonds from debtor nations there will be an orgy of extravagance that has not been witnessed in this Republic at least since the period between 1870 and 1880. Unless safe and wise counsels prevail, the eleven billions owing us from Europe will be a detriment and not a benefit. If these bonds are to become the basis of huge appropriations for all sorts of schemes with the United States guaranteeing their payment, it is easy to perceive that instead of being a benefit or a blessing they will be a positive menace and danger. Unless the American people are aroused there will be schemes to have the United States underwrite these bonds and borrow money to pay bonuses and bounties and to meet all sorts of chimerical and visionary schemes.

Some plan should be devised to utilize these bonds as soon as they are received to meet the outstanding bonds of the United States. By that I do not mean that the holders of our bonds should surrender them for foreign bonds, but legislation should be enacted or some plan devised that will preserve these bonds when obtained to meet the obligations of our Government, or to impress them with a lien for the outstanding obligations of the United States. They must not be left free in the Treasury to be hypothecated or used for further loans or for the extension of credits. They must be used to meet the bonded indebtedness of the Government, and unless this is distinctly understood, I repeat, they will be squandered and there will be a saturnalia of extravagance that will shock the conscience of patriotic Americans.

Several months ago in discussing the question of the bonus I ventured an opinion that whatever bonus was paid to the ex-service men it would not be met by taxation, that the Republicans would dodge that course, the course of honor and of sound public policy, but would utilize foreign bonds for the purpose of raising the funds to meet such bonus. I have not changed my views, although I sincerely hope there will be enough patriotism and statesmanship in the Republican Party to prevent the adoption of such an unsafe and unsound economic, if not political, policy.

I have had letters, Mr. President, demanding that $500,000,000 be immediately expended in the reclamation of swamp lands and cut-over lands and privately owned lands as well as public lands of the West. The letters have stated that the bonds of France or Great Britain could be utilized for this purpose. Others have written suggesting that we spend $1,000,000,000 for the construction of highways throughout the United States, and that we employ a part of the foreign loan for this purpose. Others have written demanding that the Government spend $200,000,000 in completing the Muscle Shoals project and establishing suitable plants for the production of fertilizers for the agriculturists in the United States. One letter which I received called attention to the St. Lawrence Canal proposition, which will cost several hundreds of millions of dollars, and it was stated that this huge sum could be raised from the sale of the European bonds, providing the United States would underwrite them. And so it goes, Mr. President, and so it will continue to go until the eleven billions are squandered, unless Congress sets itself resolutely against these improvident and dangerous propositions.

Mr. President, repeating somewhat, permit me to state that the Republican Party seems unable to grasp world conditions and international economics. The people are told that if we prevent imports under the provisions of the pending bill the world will nevertheless buy from us whatever surplus of commodities may be produced in the United States. The intimation is made that they can pay for these products in gold. Of course, those who make these suggestions know of their inaccuracy. The world has but little available gold; indeed, too little to establish sound financial systems or inaugurate and maintain wise and safe fiscal policies. The United States has a plethora of gold—more than 60 per cent of the world supply. Europe owes the United States Government and the American people more than sixteen billions of dollars. At present it is unable to pay any part of the principal; indeed, it is unable to pay all interest due upon this stupendous sum. Europe never can pay these obligations except by means of trade and exchange of commodities. As her trade and commerce increase, the credit of European nations will be strengthened. In time the gold reserves of European nations will be strengthened and the paper issues will more nearly approximate gold values. What the world needs to-day is political security, economic rehabilitation, and a proper nationalism, accompanied by deeper and broader world sympathies. In the light of these needs the Republican Party turned against the world and committed the great mass of the American people to the merciless greed of trusts and combinations and gigantic corporations, who control and seek to control the industrial and business life of this Republic.

Mr. President, I suggested the other day to the Senator from North Dakota that this bill reminded me of the peoples known to the past as Troglodytes. Senators will recall that classic authors, such as Strabo and Herodotus, speak of the prehistoric tribes who lived in caves and refused intercourse with other tribes or peoples. Those who dwelt near Mentone, in Italy, and other countries bordering upon the Mediterranean Sea have been described by writers and historians. They lived in seclusion. They sought isolation. Indeed, families living as cave dwellers avoided contact with other families. This bill seeks to make of the people of the United States Troglodytes. We are to refuse contact with other peoples and to forbid their having commercial intercourse with us.

Mr. President, such a bill might have been expected in prehistoric times or during medieval ages, but in this age it is an anachronism. Prof. Clive Day, of Yale, in his admirable work upon commerce states that the isolation of the earlier States of antiquity is their most striking feature.

> Each one lives only unto itself. It rises in civilization and then declines without sharing its gains and losses with other States. * * * The modern world, with its common fund of culture and its community of interests uniting different peoples, could arise from the conditions only after long centuries of struggle. The unity of the Christian faith was needed to confirm the union of peoples in a common civilization.

Mr. President, there are those who proclaim their culture, their advanced ethical standards, their profound belief in a common civilization, and yet they advocate policies that create fissures and cleavages and chasms among peoples and nations which must be bridged and which are provocative of international controversies and contributory to world decadence. Professor Day speaks of the unity of the Christian faith, and implies that it should influence, if not control, the relations of peoples and nations and point the way in commercial and political intercourse.

Christianity seeks to allay racial antipathies and to bring all peoples into one spiritual faith and one noble and all-embracing fellowship. While we proclaim in our churches world solidarity and international brotherhood and devoutly pray for world peace, we forge the thunderbolts of war, promote a narrow and arrogant spirit of nationalism, and seek to erect barriers in trade and commerce and in other fields of international relationship which develop animosities and are calculated to breed international disputes fruitful of wars and rumors of war.

We have condemned China because of her isolation and her disinclination to accept the cultural influences of the world and seek a union with the peoples of the world in a common civilization. In the middle of the last century an American admiral, with fighting ships and smoking cannon, compelled Japan to abandon her seclusive policy and to accept our commodities and to enter into commercial relations with the people of the United States. Japan responded to the spirit of the times and has become a world force. Like the fabled Minerva, she seems to have sprung from the brow of Jove, equipped and competent to play a great part in the affairs of the world. But the troglodytes upon the other side of the aisle and the troglodytes in the Republican Party want us to assume Japan's former position of isolation and seclusion and exclusion, so they offer to us this bill, the prototype of which we must seek in the Dark Ages or in medieval times or among prehistoric peoples.

The Republican Party now seems to affect a profound solicitude for the farmers. This bill is to help the farmers. It is to quench their thirsty souls and lift from their bowed backs their present burdens. But we are not told how this bill will furnish markets for the wheat and the corn and the agricultural products of the American farmer. But the reactionaries say we have given the farmers high rates upon wheat and agricultural products. Doubtless some people will be fooled by this sophistry. But every thinking farmer knows that the prices of his products are fixed in the markets of the world. He produces a surplus and that surplus must find buyers beyond our shores. They will buy all of the surplus products and, indeed, more of the American farmer if they can pay for their purchases with their products, with commodities which the farmers must have and which under this bill they will be compelled to purchase at inequitable and extortionate prices. But, Mr. President, there are many items not produced in the United States upon which enormous tariffs are laid in this bill and which the American people must have and for which they will be compelled to pay higher prices.

Mr. President, this bill is designed to give a monopoly to great corporations and trusts in hundreds, if not thousands, of commodities which the great mass of the people are compelled to have. It is expected by some who perceive the necessity of foreign markets that these trusts and monopolies will make such enormous profits upon their sales to the American people that they will be able to drive from foreign markets many foreign producers. Mr. President, the evidence shows that most of the articles produced in the United States can meet world competition, and our great natural resources, our unlimited supply of raw materials, our superior mechanical appliances, our modern machinery and modern methods, together with the great skill and genius and ability of American experts and technicians and workingmen, will enable the United States to dominate in trade and commerce the world's markets. Much of the talk about the cheap labor of the world is made to deceive the people and as a pretext for demanding the high rates found in this tariff bill. For years, Mr. President, we have sold agricultural implements, sewing machines, and hundreds of articles produced in the United States in foreign markets, competing with all nations.

We have sought quantity production, and in some fields, because of the larger profits in what might be denominated the primary and more important articles of commerce, we have voluntarily left to other nations the production of finer articles—those which in their production require a vast amount of patience and hand labor.

Mr. President, during the past year, notwithstanding our shrinking commerce, we have met all competition, and now that the reservoir of prices in the world is rising we will encounter less difficulty and the competition will be less keen than during the past year. Mr. President, for more than a year the many protected industries have been engaged in a nation-wide propaganda to frighten the American people into believing that Germany was ready to destroy our industries, if not to devour the people. Appeals have been made to the passions and prejudices of the people, and efforts have been made to keep alive the war spirit and the bitterness against Germany which grew out of the war. This position is somewhat paradoxical when we remember the flattery bestowed upon and the insincere and deceptive appeals made to Americans of German birth or descent in the last election to secure their support of Mr. Harding and the Republican ticket.

Senators on both sides of the Chamber know that throughout the land the Republicans and their organizations and campaigners denounced the Versailles treaty as being harsh and severe in its treatment of Germany and her people. Mr. Wilson was criticized because he set his hand to a treaty which, it was contended, was equivalent to forging the chains of industrial servitude upon the German people. Mr. Keyne's book was extensively quoted by Republicans, and the speech of Senator Knox, when he denounced the Versailles treaty because of its alleged oppression of the German people, was referred to again and again. The purpose seemed to be to inflame those Americans of whom I have spoken against Mr. Wilson and the Democratic Party and to profess a sympathy for Germany and the German people which, it was alleged, was not felt by Mr. Wilson or the Democratic Party. In other words, the Republican Party deliberately sought to deceive millions of our American citizens—men and women who vote and whose votes in many sections determine the result of local and State elections, and in the aggregate, perhaps, of national elections. No more insincere and hypocritical appeal was ever made to a great and intelligent electorate than was made by the Republican Party in 1920.

Yet we all remember that before President Wilson went overseas to join in the Paris conference the leader of the Republicans in the Senate [Mr. LODGE] and other Republican leaders criticised President Wilson and the Democrats and charged that a "soft peace" was to be made with Germany; that Mr. Wilson and the Democrats were too considerate of Germany and proposed to relieve her from reparations which Republican leaders said must be imposed upon her.

The Senator from Massachusetts, in a number of speeches in the Senate, demanded what the terms of the peace should be. He spoke for his party, and those terms were quite as severe as those found in the Versailles treaty. But now, after having by their deception induced millions of German-American citizens to vote the Republican ticket, they turned upon Germany and denounced her as a menace to the prosperity of our country.

The dye manufacturers, and particularly the Chemical Foundation, which is an adjunct of the dye monopoly, have for more than two years been active in their propaganda against Germany and the German people, and some of their agents have assailed as pro-German and as enemies to America any person who attempted to speak the truth concerning the economic and industrial conditions of Germany.

In the hearings before the Senate Finance Committee, when the threat of foreign competition was echoed, Germany seemed to be in the minds of some witnesses.

The able Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], in a speech which he delivered some time ago in defense of an embargo upon dyes, referred to Germany as the great menace to the chemical industries of the United States. And I make the prediction that during these debates the defenders of these iniquitous schedules will, directly or indirectly, hold Germany up to the Senate and to the country as the great danger to returning prosperity and as a reason for these prohibitory tariffs and for un-American policies which find expression in embargo statutes.

Mr. President, I protest against this insincerity and hypocrisy upon the part of the Republican Party. Germany is bankrupt. The greater part of her territory in which were found raw materials—coal and potash and iron—have been taken from her. She has been stripped of her ships and her colonies and burdened with reparations and severe economic conditions which constitute what some contend are insuperable obstacles to her rejuvenation industrially and will bind her to the treadmill of toil and arduous labor for many years, if not decades, to come.

I am not mentioning these things, Mr. President, by way of criticism of the Versailles treaty. Germany provoked the war. The military régime in Germany, in my opinion, was responsible for the war. Germany deluged Europe with blood. She must pay for her transgressions.

But, to develop a sentiment favorable to this bill, many of its proponents are telling the people that Germany has revived and is about to seize the economic control of the world. Germany is the specter that these high protectionists would place over the door of every American to frighten the people into supporting this bill, which seeks to plunder the American people and to enrich corporations and trusts. As stated, most of Germany's raw materials have been taken from her. She is compelled to purchase in the markets of the world raw materials in order to manufacture many of the finished products required for her people or for foreign export.

In order to obtain raw materials she must have gold. This she has to buy in the markets of the world, making enormous sacrifices therefor. She will be compelled to tax her people higher than any other nation in the world. This morning Mr. Walker, one of the financial experts sitting upon the other side of the Chamber, handed me a pamphlet showing the enormous taxes levied upon the German people—income taxes, excess-profits taxes, and property taxes, which in some instances amount to 100 per cent. During the past few months prices have risen in Germany, the increase in some commodities being several hundred per cent. Rents have increased, fuel has increased, railroad transportation has increased, wages have shown a remarkable advancement, and everything indicates that prices in Germany will soon equal, if they do not exceed—indeed, in my opinion they will exceed—in many commodities the pre-war levels. So, Mr. President, we must expose this conspiracy upon the part of some of these selfish and greedy cormorants who are attempting to frighten the American people by pointing to Germany as the devouring monster of the world.

Speaking for myself, I feel that the war is over. Germany was our enemy. We defeated her. We should not live in the past but in the present. The spirit of hate, that implacable, vengeful spirit upon which some people feed and fatten, must not be permitted to corrode the soul of this Nation. That is the trouble with the world to-day—the racial antipathies, the hates, and the fears. This Nation should lead the way in sympathy, indeed, in love and in fellowship and in the broad, generous spirit of humanity which the wounds and sorrows of the world are crying for, and which will heal the world and bring to the sorrowing nations that peace for which men and women are longing and praying.

Mr. President, in 1921 the products of the United States were approximately sixty billions of dollars. Germany was able to send us commodities of the value of eighty-eight millions of dollars. She took from us more than we took from her. She bought oil and food and other commodities which she so sorely stood in need of. Her purchases aided the American producers of the commodities which she bought. They profited by Germany's purchases and Germany likewise received benefit. And yet our troglodyte friends point to these limited imports from Germany as justification for the intemperate and odius provisions found in the pending bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to ask whether the Senator thinks the hope of the chairman of the committee is justified, by past experience or otherwise, which he expressed in this language on page 5765 of the RECORD:

> We have tried to help bridge this gulf between the production cost of manufactured articles and the consumer's ability to buy them by doing what we can to increase the purchasing power of the latter, and it is now up to the manufacturer to do his part to bring his cost down to meet the size of the consumer's pocketbook.

Did the Senator ever hear of a manufacturer doing that in this country? Is there anything to found such a hope upon in all our past experience? Does not the Senator think that the manufacturer is going to take all that the traffic will bear, and that it is a false foundation to build upon to plead with him to have mercy on the poor consumer if we give him this advantage by the tariff duties which this bill fixes?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was interested in the able speech delivered by the Senator from North Dakota when he submitted this bill to the Senate. I remember that part of his address to which the Senator from Florida refers. I thought then, as I do now, that my friend from North Dakota attributed to the manufacturers of the United States and the beneficiaries of this bill an unselfishness which many of them do not possess, and I felt then, as I do now, that his admonitions that they should be satisfied with a most meager return upon their investments, for a limited time at least, would fall upon deaf ears. Many of these manufacturers at this very time are charging inordinate prices and seeking to bring about a situation that will enable them to swell their profits far beyond what justice and fairness demand. There are trusts and combinations now, and efforts are being made to secure legislation that will permit combinations and organizations to control prices.

Since the decision of the Supreme Court in the Hardwood Lumber case there has been great consternation among hundreds, if not thousands, of the open-price organizations, many of whom constituted conspiracies and combinations denounced by the Sherman antitrust law. Fearing prosecution under it, they have sought, and are seeking, legislation to permit the continuation of criminal organizations. In my opinion, some of these combinations should be proceeded against under the criminal law and their promoters sent to the penitentiary. We have the Cement Trust and the Raisin Trust and the Plumbers Trust and the Building Trust and the Milk Trust and hundreds of combinations which have conspired to keep up prices and destroy competition in order that greater profits might be put into the coffers of such organizations.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator again to call his attention to some further observations in this plea of the chairman of the committee? After reporting a measure under which the American people will have to go down in their pockets for something like $4,000,000,000 a year, and not only making it possible but practically assuring that the manufacturer will extort from them from an average of 30 per cent up to 200 per cent, the Senator observes this:

Let the manufacturer be satisfied with a most meager return upon his investment for a while, then let the employees increase their efficiency to the highest possible degree.

Then he says:

Then if the retailer will just follow the manufacturer, the great American public, now hungry for more and better things, will give employment to all to supply its demands and old-time prosperity will again reign throughout the land.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the manufacturer will not, in my opinion, if this bill becomes a law, heed the wise suggestions of the Senator from North Dakota, nor will the retailers. And many of the laboring men will fail to attain that efficiency which is necessary for that prosperity which is so much desired. The Senator from North Dakota, being a just man, thinks that others should be just, and that they should not discriminate and plunder and use laws which may give them power to the disadvantage of the people. But, in my opinion, he is mistaken as to many of those who come within the categories mentioned by him. The Senator is like the prophet of old. His is the voice of one crying in the wilderness, but the selfish interests, while recognizing his sincerity and his desire for the public weal, will attribute to him an unsophistication which will provoke their smiles. While they will regard him as an honest man, they will feel that he is a poor psychologist and that he does not comprehend the heights and depths of this bill.

Mr. President, this bill will aid the trusts and combinations. It will contribute to the destruction of competition and thus lead to the oppression of the people. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in his address stated in substance that his party could defend and justify this bill before the American people. My able colleague is a courageous man, and I have no doubt of his sincerity in the statement just referred to, but I respectfully submit that he is mistaken. The challenge which he and other Republicans make will be welcomed by the minority. In my opinion, the American people will not indorse this bill. When they understand its odious features they will denounce it as they did the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, and they will rebuke the Republican Party for its reactionary policies and its devotion to the interests of the corporations and trusts which are carefully guarded and protected in this bill.

Mr. President, is the Senator from North Dakota willing to adjourn or take a recess at this time?

Mr. McCUMBER. In just a minute. I wish to say a word or two before we take a recess.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator that I am not through. I shall suspend for the day, but I have not concluded all that I want to say.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator does not wish to say anything more to-day, I will just take up one or two of his statements, and then we can go into executive session.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is not ready in the morning to proceed, I shall resume the floor. If he is ready to proceed, when he concludes I shall take the floor, and the Senator can reply to me then, if he prefers, or he can do so now.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will do it now.

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have never thought it necessary in any kind of an argument to go down on my knees to any class of people in the United States. I try to be fair in the presentation of a tariff bill, the same as in the presentation of any other bill.

There may be those, even good Republicans, who think that all we have to do is to pass a tariff bill and the American people will immediately jump into the seventh heaven of prosperity. There may those who believe, as does the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], that no benefit will inure to the American people from a protective tariff. On those two subjects we may differ. I do not claim that a tariff bill will produce everything that every enthusiastic tariff man or manufacturer may think it will produce.

I never thought for a moment that it was bending the knee to say that $2,000,000,000 would not buy $4,000,000,000 worth of goods. It never occurred to me when I presented the fact that under the present condition of the country, when the agriculturist was not receiving any more money than he did in 1914, and when another third of our population were not receiving any greater number of dollars after paying their rents and taxes than they received in 1914, that they could not pay any more out than they received, and I considered it rather timely to intimate that in order that all of these two-thirds may buy the same quantity of goods the prices of those goods would have to go down to meet their ability to purchase them.

It never occurred to me that I was crying or that I was asking anybody to be merciful. Every man will sell his goods for all he can get for them, but he can not get for them a dollar more than his purchaser has in his pocket to pay for them.

I think the manufacturers in the United States have done exceedingly well since 1920 in reducing the cost of their products. I am not complaining that the retailer has not reduced his prices to the same extent the manufacturer has reduced his. The retailer, purchasing his stock at a higher price, may feel that it is necessary for him to hold up the old prices at least until he gets rid of his old stock, but, in either event, they both will have to be governed by the law of supply and demand, and the law of supply and demand means that the one who purchases must have the money to meet the supply, and if the cost of a supply is twice the size of his pocketbook he can only buy half of that supply.

I thought I was making it clear that it was necessary to reach that condition before we could buy the entire product of the mills or the capacity of the mills. I considered that I was not far out of the way in presenting that condition, which exists to-day in the United States.

I think no Senator has the right to say of me that I am begging of anybody, not even of the Senator from Utah, for any favors. I think he must agree with me that I very properly placed the rule that would govern the opening of our markets; that we had given the American manufacturer and the American laborer an American market; had given him his opportunity or at least a chance in his own market. Then it is up to him to produce at a price at which the American people could purchase all the American mills could produce.

That is not begging and that is not getting down on your knees and asking anybody to be merciful. No principle of mathematics has any mercy in it. It is simply a matter of pure logic as applied to the matter of trade.

I do not think all people who make a success in life are per se wicked. I think we are all a great deal alike. I think we are, nevertheless, governed by the law of supply and demand. We try to prevent the foreigner from importing such an influx of goods into the United States as shall so increase the quantity as to drive the price below the cost of American manufacture. We have to keep the mills going and the farms going and people at work. That is the theory on which we are working.

Some may not agree with me in the matter of protection. I am not complaining that they do not. I consider that they are acting honestly. It never occurred to me that they were down on their knees, that they were begging, because their views differed from mine. I do not agree with the Senator from Utah, for instance, that we must trade with a country on even terms, practically, in order that both of us may be prosperous, and that we must always buy where we sell. If the Senator will go back and look over the trade statistics of the commercial intercourse between foreign nations and the United States, he will find that, with the exception of three years, since 1879 the balance of trade has been in favor of the United States. In the case of Great Britain we have sold hundreds of millions, and even as high as nearly $2,000,000,000 more to her than she has sent to the United States. In only one instance during all of that period since 1898 have we had less than three hundred millions of a balance of trade in our favor.

We sell to Great Britain. Of course, she must make the money somewhere else. She may get it from India; she may get it from Africa or South America; but we are not looking for the source of her money. We are hunting for markets, and she will not buy from us unless she can buy at better advantage from us than she can anywhere else. That is all there is to that law of trade.

Let us consider the tariff question as Senators who really believe that there is just as much integrity in the heart and mind of one Senator as in those of another, and that we may differ without having any sinister motives charged to us. I think the principle of protection is better for the industries of this country. I can see a great many arguments which can be made in favor of free trade, but whatever those arguments may have been in times past, I think this would be the worst time in the history of the country for the American people to change the policy of protection to American industries.

Mr. President, I think the Senator who accused me of being a supplicant should not have made that statement. The Senator knows me too well to believe even for a moment that I would approach either an individual or a class in that spirit.

Mr. KING. The Senator from North Dakota knows that heretofore upon the floor of the Senate I have paid tribute to his courage and his lofty patriotism, and I would not for the world impute to him any lack of courage upon any occasion. When I spoke of his supplicatory speech, it was more by way of general interpretation that some would place upon it, and with some humor, rather than a serious insistence that my friend, who is so courageous here and elsewhere, and whose courage I hope will be rewarded by his nomination for the Senate, because he is so useful, had acted in other than a courageous manner. I am sure he will not attribute to me any desire to challenge his integrity, his courage, his ability, or his high sense of honor.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to thank the Senator and to say to him that cold print does not always indicate the humor of an expression, and I have to meet it as the cold print would look.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I take it, of course, that the Senator did not imagine that by calling attention to his remarks as I did I attributed any sinister motive or any other improper motive to the Senator when he was making that speech. I referred to it because, in the first place, I think it a perfectly frank statement, and one altogether creditable to the Senator. I mentioned it because it seemed to me very largely to answer his argument in favor of this bill. He recognized, as I gathered from that argument, that the bill would make the tariff duties so high that the manufacturers of this country would be limited really in their demands only by the ability of the consumer to pay.

I do not think that is the right standard, and I do not think we ought to put it in the power of the manufacturers to charge for their goods such prices as they might see fit to charge, limited only by the power of the consumer to buy the goods.

The statement is made by the Senator to-day very much in line with that position, as I understand it, that he was appealing to the manufacturer upon the basis that there could be no business done if the power to purchase the goods did not obtain and there would be no goods sold, there would be no goods of the manufacturer taken by the consumer where the consumer did not have the money to pay for the goods. What I am trying to suggest is whether or not it is a wise thing to build a tariff wall so high that the consuming public will be in the power of the manufacturer and we would have to depend upon our appeals to them to deal fairly and justly with their customers.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish the Senator would leave out the word "appeal."

Mr. FLETCHER. Well, argue to them.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not appealing to them.

Mr. FLETCHER. I mean appeal, of course, in the broad sense.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am simply stating that $2,000,000,000 will not buy $4,000,000,000 worth of goods.

Mr. FLETCHER. Well, argue to them, then. Ought we to enact a piece of legislation that will work provided the manufactures, for whose benefit the legislation is enacted, will so conduct themselves as to rid themselves of selfishness and greed and enable everybody in the whole country to be considered and dealt with justly. Is it a wise thing to trust them? Are we not depending upon a vain hope if we give the power to those protective interests to impose upon the public to their own advantage and benefit, exclusive of the general good? If we give them the power to do it, are we not depending, as I said, upon a false basis, a basis that we can not safely rest upon at all, to say that we can reason with them, we can argue with them, we can show them how it would be bad policy to indulge their ability to impose upon the public, and thereby we can get along satisfactorily with everyone?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, let me reply to that suggestion. We are giving them no such opportunity. If there was no competition between manufacturers in the United States, and if then we raised practically an embargo against the importation of products, of course the argument would be in point. But we have both of those factors in the United States. We have our competition for our home markets for the most part between very many manufacturers. We have tried, and I believe that we have succeeded, to write the bill in such a manner as to permit a reasonable amount of competition for imported articles along every line. If I could be shown that, outside of the dyes, as to which the licensing system is continued, the bill will cut off the importation of any class of goods, I would be in favor of an amendment.

But now let us look at the situation, and to which I direct my remarks at all times. The manufacturers in the United States as a class are not making money to-day. They all made it in 1920, some in 1921, but in most instances the profits are very meager in 1922 and in the latter part of 1921. They have been running on a high-wage scale. The wages are perhaps almost double what they were in 1914. The cost of the raw material would average at least 75 per cent higher than in 1914. When we produce with that higher price labor and that higher cost of raw material, we can not reduce down to the old standard, but it is necessary that it come down.

Unless the purchasing price of the agriculturists and the thousands of salaried people and clerks go up, it is necessary for other prices to come down in order to run our mills at their full capacity. There is more profit in running at full capacity than there is at half capacity, even though manufacturers receive almost double price for what they sell. The remarks which I made in the opening were directed along that line, that we might raise the tariff wall to the skies and still it would not enable our farmers to buy any more unless they got more for their products, and we sought to protect them as much as a tariff law can protect. I admit that in some instances the protection can be but little and in some instances it is greater, but I could not ask even the manufacturers to drop down suddenly. Their laborers would not stand for it. They could not do it if they would try to.

But I did suggest that wages and prices must come down gradually until we can get the purchasing public and the producing public on an equality. That was not begging. That was putting the facts just as they are, and in all this I tried to help the American laborer, who is also a purchaser and a consumer, to continue the very best wages that can be paid; the American farmer, who is both a producer and a consumer, to secure just as much as he possibly can secure for his product. I am simply objecting, if the Senator will allow me, to the use of the terms that were used in describing the reasons for which I made that statement.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, I did not employ any of those terms and therefore no explanation is due under that head. I want to ask the Senator this question: He said the manufacturers are not making any profit and have not been for some two years past. The Senator does not attribute that to importations. If we concede that the manufacturers of the country are not to-day, and have not been for a year or two past, making profits it is not because of the importations of products from foreign countries. That is a thing we want to effect by the tariff. We want to restrict and limit importations. It is not the incoming of products from foreign countries that is causing manufacturing to languish, as the Senator seems to indicate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I admit that the principal cause at present, up to the present time, is the inability of the great consuming public to pay the prices of products as they are to-day. I am trying to be perfectly fair in that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in so far as manufactures are languishing in the United States to-day at all—and they are not languishing to any very alarming extent—the cause of it consists not only in the fact that the American consumer has not the purchasing power, but it consists to a very much larger extent in the fact that the foreign consumer has lost his purchasing power.

So far as the farmers of the country are concerned, if we were to divide their present distress into five equal factors, we would find at least four of those factors which contribute to agricultural distress and depression consisting of the inability of Europe and Asia to purchase. That is owing to the fact that even in the present depression of agriculture in the United States the farmer has raised so much more than was sufficient for American consumption that he was compelled to export a price-fixing surplus.

How is the purchasing power of the foreigner to be restored? In the first place, of course, it must be by legislation in foreign countries, in so far as legislation anywhere has anything to do with it, and it has not much to do with it anywhere. But it must be chiefly owing to the fact that the foreigner restores normal conditions of production, transportation, and exchange, and thus recovers a part of his former purchasing power. The moment he recovers a part of his former purchasing power he restores to the American farmer a part of his former selling power, and this recovery of selling power can not be accomplished in any other way.

Now, what is the remedy, in brief and in summary, offered by the Senators of the protective school?

It is to help the foreigner pay what he owes and restore his exchange and trade with the world by cutting off to the utmost extent of our legislative power his capacity to sell to us; in other words, to raise the walls of the tariff to such an extent that at the customhouse we meet his goods with a veto, absolute or suspension.

How can he pay? He has not the money; he has not the credit; he has nothing but his labor; and his labor is represented in the markets of the world by his products, so that he can pay only with his products. Now you are trying to meet a situation where the American farmer chiefly and the American manufacturer partially are confronted with the lack of a market in Europe and Asia and Africa by denying to the foreigner a right to pay his debts here and to buy his goods here with money procured by selling his products here. Is not that true?

On one hand you are attempting to pass a great ship subsidy bill. It is, by the way, the first time in the history of the country that any man advocating it has dared even to call it a "subsidy"; you are trying to do that with a view of encouraging the foreigner to send his goods to our ports, and on the other hand you are saying to him through your tariff bill, "But if you do get your goods here, if an American merchant marine can bring them here, we will meet them at the port with a customhouse officer who will refuse to let them in or who will hamper their introduction to our market and sale in it by an increased cost."

Mr. President, to use the much-abused word "normalcy"—how are you going to return to "normalcy"? Are you going to do it by isolating the United States not only in its international relations, politically speaking and economically speaking, but by isolating it industrially at the same time? Are you going to say to the world, "We are willing to sell you anything we have; you are not paying us enough; we wish you would pay more; but we are not willing to let you sell us anything that whereby we can help you pay or buy?"

Under the worship of the false goddess Protection—who is really the goddess of protectionism, one of the numerous false goddesses that go with "ism" at the end of their names—we are saying to the world, "We would like to have your trade; we would like to have you pay us the billions of dollars that you owe us; we know you have not the money; we are not willing to credit you, because you have not the securities to render us safe in extending you credit; we know you can not pay except in products; we know that you can not support your labor in peace without revolution unless it is well enough paid; we know that if it is well enough paid its products must sell to a large extent in our markets and in the other solvent markets of the world"; and yet we want to throw a still higher Chinese wall about us, higher than the rates of the Dingley bill, as is confessed by the proponents of the pending measure.

Mr. President, some time ago I said upon the floor that I saw but one way to do what a great many Americans seem to want to do—isolate ourselves—and that was somehow or other to exterminate the populations of the other countries of the world, to get rid of them, and to get rich by swapping jackknives among ourselves. We can not do that. I do not care about the particular items of taxation under this bill; it is the general principle involved about which I am concerned; the utter stupidity, the utter stultification of attempting to carry on a profitable international commerce without permitting the other nations to sell us much of anything by making it too expensive for our suffering consumers to buy much of anything.

Above all things this bill has been chiefly constructed—I will not say with the idea of deluding the farmer; I will not say that, because I know at least one Senator upon the Finance Committee, who is the chairman of the committee, who would not attempt to delude the farmers, who, if he knew it, would not try to fool them, who, if he knew it, would not take any advantage of them; so I will not say that it is constructed with the idea of deluding the farmer; but it is constructed under a self-delusion of benefiting the farmer.

How are you going to benefit a man who can not sell his cotton, and his wheat, and his corn, and his other commodities, because the man who under normal conditions takes the surplus in foreign commerce and buys it can not now buy because he has neither cash nor credit, by saying to him, "We close our markets almost hermetically to your products, to the fruits of your labor, to the only thing in the world with which you can either pay or buy"? Must not my cotton, then, year by year sell for less because its price is fixed by the price of the surplus in the world's market? Must not the wheat of the Senator from North Dakota sell for less and less the longer this condition exists for the same reason, although not in the same degree, and yet for the same reason in kind, to wit, that the price of his wheat depends also to a great extent upon the price of the surplus which he sells abroad?

If you want to raise the price which the foreigner can pay for the surplus you must enable the foreigner to sell something. Where is he going to sell it? Are you going to leave bankrupt Russia, crippled Germany, devastated France, hampered Belgium to restore themselves to normal conditions by selling to one another? Mr. President, that time passed within 251 years after the discovery of America when that could happen. The prosperity of Europe began then to depend upon their colonial and foreign trade, even then there came into being the great transoceanic market for them, and they became at the same time the great market for the people who inhabited the countries which were across seas, and their greatest market became these United States of America and Canada and Australia and other countries of the New World enjoying great prosperity for the masses in comparison with Europe. That condition exists to-day.

Mr. President, if Canada and the United States and South America and Australia were all to unite in a common policy of restricting to the utmost possible degree all importations from Europe into their respective countries, Europe would either starve or go into revolutoin in 12 months' time; her statesmen could not help it.

What does this bill purport to do? It purports to "protect" manufacturer, agriculturist, everybody in the United States. Mr. President, in the first place, no bill is possible for human ingenuity to draft which can protect everybody without at the same time taxing everybody. If you protect me just as much as you do the Senator from North Dakota, and if you protect the wheat of the Senator from North Dakota and my cotton in no higher measure than you protect the products of the manufacturer of Massachusetts, and if you protect the mining properties of the West and of Pennsylvania to exactly the same extent that you protect the textile products of Massachusetts and the agricultural products of North Dakota and of Mississippi, then you have drawn up a bill which results in what? Merely in swapping dollars, minus the cost of administering the law; that is all. If you protect my constituents by the operation of law so that they can get 20 per cent more out of the constituents of the Senator from North Dakota and of the Senator from Massachusetts and of the Senator from Pennsylvania than my constituents could otherwise get out of their constituents, and if you protect their constituents so that they can get out of my constituents 20 per cent more than they could get without the operation of the law, and if you protect everybody else everywhere—the producers of Louisiana sugar, of Florida oranges, and of California lemons—so that they can get 20 per cent more out of all of us than they otherwise could get without any law, you have just given each one of us 20 per cent at the expense of each one of the balance of us, and you have swapped the money from one pocket to another, minus the cost of paying the salaries of the men who administer the law and collect the taxes, and minus the general overhead expenses and the added transportation costs which would necessarily come from the added value or, rather, artificial price of the product in the American market. There is no escape from that conclusion. There is nothing new about it, except that it is new in its application to present conditions.

The other day I noticed—and it was somewhat pathetic to me—that my friend, the Senator from North Dakota, said that his committee had undertaken a most difficult task. Mr. President, that is true. Any man who attempts the impossible has a difficult task. It is impossible in the present abnormal condition of the world, agriculturally, industrially, militarily, and politically, to frame any bill that will not be out of date within 12 months. The wise thing to have done would have been to recognize the fact and to have taken courage in hand and said: "It is beyond the ability of the human intellect to frame any bill at this moment, whether upon a protective theory or upon a tariff-for-revenue theory, that will answer the purpose beyond a year or two." Better let things work themselves out to some sort of stability. You can measure still water, but you can not for the life of you measure a mountain torrent's present capacity so as to be able to say what that capacity will be next week, unless you can control the snows and the rainfall. The stream is moving; it is revolutionizing itself; it is cutting banks; it is going now more swiftly, and now more gently. That is the present condition of the world's trade; and the wise thing to do would be to do nothing until you can at least halfway find out what to do.

PROMOTION OF TRADE IN CHINA—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 193).

Mr. CUMMINS submitted the following conference report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4810) to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That this act may be cited as the 'China trade act, 1922.'"

DEFINITIONS.

"SEC. 2. When used in this act, unless the context otherwise indicates—

"(a) The term 'person' includes individual, partnership, corporation, and association;

"(b) The term 'China' means (1) China including Manchuria, Thibet, Mongolia, and any territory leased by China to any foreign Government, (2) the Crown Colony of Hongkong, and (3) the Province of Macao;

"(c) The terms 'China trade act corporation' and 'corporation' mean a corporation chartered under the provisions of this act;

"(d) The term 'Federal district court' means any Federal district court, the United States Court for China, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia;

"(e) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Commerce; and

"(f) The term 'registrar' means the China trade act registrar appointed under section 3.

REGISTRAR.

"SEC. 3. The Secretary is authorized to designate as China trade act registrar an officer of the Department of Commerce. The official station of the registrar shall be in China at a place to be designated by the Secretary. All functions vested in the registrar by this act shall be administered by him under the supervision of the Secretary; except that upon appeal to the Secretary, in such manner as he shall by regulation prescribe, any action of the registrar may be affirmed, modified, or set aside by the Secretary as he deems advisable.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

"SEC. 4. (a) Five or more individuals (hereafter in this act referred to as 'incorporators'), a majority of whom are citizens of the United States, may, as hereinafter in this act provided, form a District of Columbia corporation for the purpose of engaging in business within China.

"(b) The incorporators may adopt articles of incorporation which shall be filed with the Secretary at his office in the District of Columbia and may thereupon make application to the Secretary for a certificate of incorporation in such manner and form as shall be by regulation prescribed. The articles of incorporation shall state—

"(1) The name of the proposed China trade act corporation, which shall end with the legend, 'Federal Inc. U. S. A.,' and which shall not, in the opinion of the Secretary, be likely in any manner to mislead the public;

"(2) The location of its principal office, which shall be in the District of Columbia;

"(3) The particular business in which the corporation is to engage;

"(4) The amount of the authorized capital stock, the designation of each class of stock, the terms upon which it is to be issued, and the number and par value of the shares of each class of stock;

"(5) The duration of the corporation, which may be for a period of not more than 25 years, but which may, upon application of the corporation and payment of the incorporation fee, be successively extended by the Secretary for like periods;

"(6) The names and addresses of individuals, a majority of whom are citizens of the United States and at least one of whom is a resident of the District of Columbia, to be designated by the incorporators, who shall serve as temporary directors; and

"(7) The fact that an amount equal to 25 per cent of the amount of the authorized capital stock has been in good faith subscribed and paid in cash, or, in accordance with the provisions of section 8, in real or personal property which has been placed in the custody of the directors.

"(c) A China trade act corporation shall not engage in the business of discounting bills, notes, or other evidences of debt, of receiving deposits, of buying and selling bills of exchange, or of issuing bills, notes, or other evidences of debt, for circulation as money; nor engage in any other form of banking business; nor engage in any form of insurance business.

CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION.

"SEC. 5. The Secretary shall, upon the filing of such application, issue a certificate of incorporation certifying that the provisions of this act have been complied with and declaring that the incorporators are a body corporate, if (a) an incorporation fee of $100 has been paid him, (b) he finds that the articles of incorporation and statements therein conform to the requirements of, and that the incorporation is authorized by, this act, and (c) he finds that such corporation will aid in developing markets in China for goods produced in the United States. A copy of the articles of incorporation shall be made a part of the certificate of incorporation and printed in full thereon. Any failure, previous to the issuance of the certificate of incorporation, by the incorporators or in respect to the application for the certificate of incorporation, to conform to any requirement of law which is a condition precedent to such issuance, may not subsequent thereto be held to invalidate the certificate of incorporation or alter the legal status of any act of a China trade act corporation, except in proceedings instituted by the registrar for the revocation of the certificate of incorporation.

GENERAL POWERS.

"SEC. 6. In addition to the powers granted elsewhere in this act, a China trade act corporation—

"(a) Shall have the right of succession during the existence of the corporation;

"(b) May have a corporate seal and alter it at pleasure;

"(c) May sue and be sued;

"(d) Shall have the right to transact the business authorized by its articles of incorporation and such further business as is properly connected therewith or necessary and incidental thereto;

"(e) May make contracts and incur liabilities;

"(f) May acquire and hold real or personal property necessary to effect the purpose for which it is formed, and dispose of such property when no longer needed for such purposes;

"(g) May borrow money and issue its notes, coupon, or registered bonds, or other evidences of debt, and secure their payment by a mortgage of its property; and

"(h) May establish such branch offices at such places in China as it deems advisable.

SHARES OF STOCK.

"SEC. 7. Each share of the original or any subsequent issue of stock of a China trade act corporation shall be issued at par value only, and shall be paid for in cash or in accordance with the provisions of section 8, in real or personal property which has been placed in the custody of the directors. No such share shall be issued until the amount of the par value thereof has been paid the corporation; and when issued each share shall be held to be full paid and nonassessable, except that if any share is, in violation of this section, issued without the amount of the par value thereof having been paid to the corporation, the holder of such share shall be liable in suits by creditors for the difference between the amount paid for such share and the par value thereof.

"SEC. 8. No share of stock of a China trade act corporation shall, for the purposes of section 7 or of paragraph (7) of subdivision (b) of section 4, be held paid in real or personal property unless (1) a certificate describing the property and stating the value at which it is to be received has been filed by the corporation with the Secretary or the registrar in such manner as shall be by regulation prescribed, and a fee to be fixed by the Secretary or the registrar, respectively, to cover the cost of any necessary investigation has been paid, and (2) the Secretary or the registrar, as the case may be, finds and has certified to the corporation that such value is not more than the fair market value of the property.

BY-LAWS.

"SEC. 9. The by-laws may provide—

"(a) The time, place, manner of calling, giving notice, and conduct of, and determination of a quorum for, the meetings, annual or special, of the stockholders or directors;

"(b) The number, qualifications, and manner of choosing and fixing the tenure of office and compensation of all directors; but the number of such directors shall be not less than three, and a majority of the directors and a majority of the officers holding the office of president, treasurer, or secretary, or a corresponding office, shall be citizens of the United States resident in China; and

"(c) The manner of calling for and collecting payments upon shares of stock, the penalties and forfeitures for nonpayment, the preparation of certificates of the shares, the manner of recording their sale or transfer, and the manner of their representation at stockholders' meetings.

STOCKHOLDERS' MEETINGS.

"SEC. 10. (a) Within six months after the issuance of the certificate of incorporation of a China trade act corporation there shall be held a stockholders' meeting either at the principal office or a branch office of the corporation. Such meeting shall be called by a majority of the directors named in the articles of incorporation and each stockholder shall be given at least 90 days' notice of the meeting either in person or by mail

The holders of two-thirds of the voting shares shall constitute a quorum at such meeting authorized to transact business. At this meeting or an adjourned meeting thereof a code of by-laws for the corporation shall be adopted by a majority of the voting shares represented at the meeting.

"(b) The following questions shall be determined only by the stockholders at a stockholders' meeting:

"(1) Adoption of the by-laws;

"(2) Amendments to the articles of incorporation or by-laws;

"(3) Authorization of the sale of the entire business of the corporation or of an independent branch of such business;

"(4) Authorization of the voluntary dissolution of the corporation; and

"(5) Authorization of application for the extension of the period of duration of the corporation.

"(c) The adoption of any such amendment or authorization shall require the approval of at least two-thirds of the voting shares. No amendment to the articles of incorporation or authorization for dissolution or extension shall take effect until (1) the corporation files a certificate with the Secretary stating the action taken, in such manner and form as shall be by regulation prescribed, and (2) such amendment or authorization is found and certified by the Secretary to conform to the requirements of this act.

"(d) A certified copy of the by-laws and amendments thereof and of the minutes of all stockholders' meetings of the corporation shall be filed with the registrar.

DIRECTORS.

"SEC. 11. The directors designated in the articles of incorporation shall, until their successors take office, direct the exercise of all powers of a China trade act corporation except such as are conferred upon the stockholders by law or by the artices of incorporation or by-laws of the corporation. Thereafter the directors elected in accordance with the by-laws of the corporation shall direct the exercise of all powers of the corporation except such as are so conferred upon the stockholders. In the exercise of such powers the directors may appoint and remove and fix the compensation of such officers and employees of the corporation as they deem advisable.

REPORTS AND INSPECTION OF RECORDS.

"SEC. 12. (a) For the purposes of this act the fiscal year of a China trade act corporation shall correspond to the calendar year. The corporation shall make and file with the registrar, in such manner and form and at such time as shall be by regulation prescribed, a report of its business for each such fiscal year and of its financial condition at the close of the year. The corporation shall furnish a true copy of the report to each of its stockholders.

"(b) The registrar shall file with the Secretary copies of all reports, certificates, and certified copies received or issued by the registrar under the provisions of this act. The Secretary shall file with the registrar copies of all applications for a certificate of incorporation, and certificates received or issued by the Secretary under the provisions of this act. All such papers shall be kept on record in the offices of the registrar and the Secretary, and shall be available for public inspection under such regulations as may be prescribed.

DIVIDENDS.

"SEC. 13. Dividends declared by a China trade act corporation shall be derived wholly from the surplus profits of its business.

REVOCATION OF CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION.

"SEC. 14. The registrar may, in order to ascertain if the affairs of a China trade act corporation are conducted contrary to any provision of this act, or any other law, or any treaty of the United States, or the articles of incorporation or by-laws of the incorporation, investigate the affairs of the corporation. The registrar, whenever he is satisfied that the affairs of any China trade act corporation are or have been so conducted, may institute in the United States Court for China proceedings for the revocation of the certificate of incorporation of the corporation. The court may revoke such certificate if it finds the affairs of such corporation have been so conducted. Pending final decision in the revocation proceedings, the court may, at any time, upon application of the registrar or upon its own motion, make such orders in respect to the conduct of the affairs of the corporation as it deems advisable.

"SEC. 15. (a) For the efficient administration of the functions vested in the registrar by this act he may require, by subpœna issued by him or under his direction, (1) the attendance of any witness and the production of any book, paper, document, or other evidence from any place in China at any designated place of hearing in China, or, if the witness is actually resident or temporarily sojourning outside of China, at any designated place of hearing within 50 miles of the actual residence or place of sojourn of such witness, and (2) the taking of a deposition before any designated person having power to administer oaths. In the case of a deposition the testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. The registrar or any officer, employee, or agent of the United States authorized in writing by him, may administer oaths and examine any witness. Any witness summoned or whose deposition is taken under this section shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"(b) In the case of failure to comply with any subpœna or in the case of the contumacy of any witness before the registrar, or any individual so authorized by him, the registrar or such individual may invoke the aid of any Federal district court. Such court may thereupon order the witness to comply with the requirements of such subpœna and to give evidence touching the matter in question. Any failure to obey such order may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"(c) No person shall be excused from so attending and testifying or deposing, nor from so producing any book, paper, document, or other evidence on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing as to which, in obedience to a subpœna and under oath, he may so testify, except that no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"(d) For the efficient administration of the functions vested in the registrar by this act he, or any officer, employee, or agent of the United States authorized in writing by him, shall at all reasonable times for the purpose of examination have access to and the right to copy any book, account, record, paper, or correspondence relating to the business or affairs of a China trade act corporation. Any person who upon demand refuses the registrar or any duly authorized officer, employee, or agent such access or opportunity to copy, or hinders, obstructs, or resists him in the exercise of such right, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $5,000 for each such offense. Such penalty shall be recoverable in a civil suit brought in the name of the United States.

"SEC. 16. In case of the voluntary dissolution of a China trade act corporation or revocation of its certificate of incorporation, the directors of the corporation shall be trustees for the creditors and stockholders of the corporation; except that upon application to the United States Court for China by any interested party, or upon the motion of any court of competent jurisdiction in any proceeding pending before it, the court may in its discretion appoint as the trustees such persons, other than the directors, as it may determine. The trustees are invested with the powers, and shall do all acts necessary to wind up the affairs of the corporation and divide among the stockholders according to their respective interests the property of the corporation remaining after all obligations against it have been settled. For the purposes of this section the trustees may sue and be sued in the name of the corporation and shall be jointly and severally liable to the stockholders and creditors of the corporation to the extent of the property coming into their hands as trustees.

REGULATIONS.

"SEC. 17. (a) The Secretary is authorized to make such regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect the functions vested in him or in the registrar by this act.

"(b) That the Secretary is authorized to prescribe and fix the amount of such fees (other than the incorporation fee) to be paid him or the registrar for services rendered by the Secretary of the registrar to any person in the administration of the provisions of this act. All fees and penalties paid under this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

PENALTIES.

"SEC. 18. No stockholder, director, officer, employee, or agent of a China trade act corporation shall make, issue, or publish any statement, written or oral, or advertisement in any form, as to the value or as to the facts affecting the value of stocks, bonds, or other evidences of debt, or as to the financial condition or transactions, or facts affecting such condition or transactions, of such corporation if it has issued or is to issue stocks, bonds, or other evidences of debt, whenever he knows or has reason to believe that any material representation in such statement or advertisement is false. No stockholder, director, officer, employee, or agent of a China trade act corporation shall, if all the authorized capital stock thereof has not been paid in, make, issue, or publish any written statement or advertisement in any form stating the amount of the authorized capital stock without also stating as the amount actually paid in a sum not greater than the amount paid in. Any person violating any provisions of this section shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"SEC. 19. No individual, partnership, or association, or corporation not incorporated under this act or under a law of the United States, shall engage in business within China under a name in connection with which the legend 'Federal Inc. U. S. A.' is used. Any person violating this section shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $1,000 for each violation.

JURISDICTION OF SUITS AGAINST CORPORATION.

"SEC. 20. That the Federal district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all suits (except as provided by the act entitled 'An act creating a United States Court for China and prescribing the jurisdiction thereof,' approved June 30, 1906, as amended) to which a China trade act corporation, or a stockholder, director, or officer thereof in his capacity as such, is a party. Suit against the corporation may be brought in the United States Court for China, or in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or in the Federal district court for any district in which the corporation has an agent and is engaged in doing business.

FEDERAL TAXATION.

"SEC. 21. Title II of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

'CHINA TRADE ACT CORPORATIONS.

"'SEC. 264. (a) That for the purpose only of the tax imposed by section 230 there shall be allowed, in the case of a corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, a credit of an amount equal to the proportion of the net income derived from sources within China (determined in a similar manner to that provided in section 217) which the par value of the shares of stock of the corporation owned on the last day of the taxable year by individual citizens of the United States or China, resident in China, bears to the par value of the whole number of shares of stock of the corporation outstanding on such date: Provided, That in no case shall the amount by which the tax imposed by section 230 is diminished by reason of such credit exceed the amount of the special dividend certified under subdivision (b) of this section.

"'(b) Such credit shall not be allowed unless the Secretary of Commerce has certified to the commissioner (1) the amount which, during the year ending on the date of filing the return, the corporation has distributed as a special dividend to or for the benefit of such individuals as on the last day of the taxable year were citizens of the United States or China, resident in China, and owned shares of stock of the corporation, (2) that such special dividend was, in addition to all other amounts, payable or to be payable to such individuals or for their benefit, by reason of their interest in the corporation, and (3) that such distribution has been made to or for the benefit of such individuals in proportion to the par value of the shares of stock of the corporation owned by each; except that if the corporation has more than one class of stock, the certificate shall contain a statement that the articles of incorporation provide a method for the apportionment of such special dividend among such individuals, and that the amount certified has been distributed in accordance with the method so provided.

"'(c) For the purposes of this section shares of stock of a corporation shall be considered to be owned by the person in whom the equitable right to the income from such shares is in good faith vested.

"'(d) As used in this section the term "China" shall have the same meaning as when used in the China trade act, 1922.'

"SEC. 22. Subdivision (b) of section 230 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) For each calendar year thereafter, 12½ per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in sections 236 and 264.'

"SEC. 23. Subdivision (f) of section 238 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by adding after the figures '262' the word and figures 'or 264.'

"SEC. 24. Subdivision (c) of section 240 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: 'A corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, shall not be deemed affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of this section.'

"SEC. 25. That section 2 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"'(12) A corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered a domestic corporation.'

"SEC. 26. Subdivision (b) of section 213 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (12) thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding after paragraph (12) a new paragraph to read as follows:

"'(13) In the case of an individual, amounts distributed as dividends to or for his benefit by a corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, if, at the time of such distribution, he is a citizen of China resident therein and the equitable right to the income of the shares of stock of the corporation is in good faith vested in him.'

"SEC. 27. Subdivision (a) of section 216, paragraph (6) of subdivision (a) of section 234, and paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) of section 245, of the revenue act of 1921, are amended by inserting in each after the word and figures 'section 262' a comma and the words 'and other than a corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922.'

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO AMEND.

"SEC. 28. The Congress of the United States reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal any provision of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "An act to authorize the creation of corporations for the purpose of engaging in business within China"; and the Senate agree to the same.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
T. J. WALSH,
FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. J. VOLSTEAD,
L. C. DYER,
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

MEMORIAL OF GEN. ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 22), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to purchase a floral wreath to be placed upon the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant at the unveiling ceremonies on April 27, 1922, the expense of such wreath to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

MONROE B. SHEALY.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration a bill on the calendar, and if there is any objection to it I will withdraw it. It is House bill 7272.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent out of order to proceed with the consideration of H. R. 7272, for the relief of Monroe B. Shealy. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Monroe B. Shealy, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $414.66 for damages to his automobile by an Army truck belonging to the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 25, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 24 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

John Foster Symes, of Colorado, to be United States district judge, district of Colorado, vice Robert E. Lewis, appointed circuit judge. (Mr. Symes is now serving as United States attorney, district of Colorado.)

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 24 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

William Henry Hay to be brigadier general.
Edmund Wittenmyer to be brigadier general.
Ira Adam Crump to be captain, Ordnance Department.
John Colford Daly to be captain, Cavalry.
John Joseph Campbell to be chaplain, with rank of captain.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Etta Thomas, Lost Hills.

GEORGIA.

Martha C. Vinson, Byron.
Jacob L. Roberts, Pinehurst.
Ezekiel E. Sego, Rebecca.

KANSAS.

William S. Smith, Rozel.

MISSOURI.

Anna A. Brown, Bunker.

UTAH.

John A. Israilsen, Hyrum.
Reid H. Gardner, Lehi.
Victor A. Neilson, Magna.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 24, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we thank Thee that there is nothing that is able to separate us from divine love. We bless Thee that whatever is strong, excellent, or noble in us are the gifts of our God. For the promise and the beauty of the springtime, we give Thee thanks. Help us to be in harmony with all the signs and tokens which it suggests. Bless all instruments of usefulness and may they carry intelligence and justice to all. Stay the things that minister to evil and may they be suppressed and done away. Be gracious to all children and shield them from all enemies; give wisdom and direction to all parents and be the heavenly guest in the households of our land. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 21, 1922, was read and approved.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, filed for printing, under the rule, conference report and accompanying statement on the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and sundry independent bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 103. An act for the relief of Morgan Miller;
S. 1245. An act for the relief of Robert June;
S. 496. An act for the relief of George A. Robertson;
S. 32. An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors and material men who suffered loss by reason of Government orders;
S. 1655. An act for the relief of Orin Thornton;
S. 2372. An act for the relief of Alfred Sjostrom;
S. 2017. An act for the relief of John H. Gattis;
S. 1651. An act for the relief of Prairie View State Normal and Industrial College;
S. 2563. An act to provide for the completion of the bridge across the Little Colorado River near Leupp, Ariz.;
S. 151. An act to amend sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes relating to compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries;
S. 256. An act to reimburse the State of Montana for expenses incurred by it in suppressing forest fires on Government land during the year 1919;
S. 583. An act for the relief of Lyn Lundquist;
S. 2436. An act to amend section 25(a) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act;
S. 3291. An act for the relief of Henry Cordes;
S. 3163. An act to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to athorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes";
S. 514. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate claims which the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes;
S. 907. An act for the relief of Ellen B. Walker;
S. 2460. An act to extend the provisions of section 18a of an act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat., p. 437), to certain lands in Utah;
S. 2584. An act for the relief of John H. Walker;
S. 889. An act further to assure title to lands granted the several States, in place, in aid of public schools; and
S. 2743. An act to amend an act approved June 20, 1910, entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government, and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 4382. An act to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 7415. An act to correct and amend the service and military record of Herbert Langley, United States Marine Corps;
H. R. 8690. An act to add a certain tract of land on the island of Hawaii to the Hawaiian National Park;
H. J. Res. 274. Joint resolution authorizing the commissioning in the Marine Corps of midshipmen under certain conditions;
H. R. 5588. An act to repeal section 5 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, in the State of California, and for other purposes," approved August 9, 1916;
H. R. 5820. An act to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps;
H. R. 9671. An act to amend section 87 of the Judicial Code;
H. J. Res. 57. Joint resolution making the provisions of section 2296 of the United States Revised Statutes applicable to all entries made under the homestead laws and laws supplemental and amendatory thereof;
H. R. 1009. An act for the relief of H. C. Mullins, his wife and minor children;
H. R. 3346. An act for the relief of the heirs of Oscar Chrysler; and
H. R. 6686. An act for the relief of George Ciszek and Anna Ciszek.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 103. An act for the relief of Morgan Miller; to the Committee on Claims.
S. 1245. An act for the relief of Robert June; to the Committee on Claims.
S. 496. An act for the relief of George A. Robertson; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 32. An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors and material men who suffered loss by reason of Government orders; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 1655. An act for the relief of Orin Thornton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2372. An act for the relief of Alfred Sjostrom; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2017. An act for the relief of John H. Gattis; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1651. An act for the relief of Prairie View State Normal and Industrial College; to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 151. An act to amend sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes relating to compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 256. An act to reimburse the State of Montana for expenses incurred by it in suppressing forest fires on Government land during the year 1919; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 583. An act for the relief of Lyn Lundquist; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2436. An act to amend section 25 (a) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

S. 3291. An act for the relief of Henry Cordes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3163. An act to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 889. An act further to assure title to lands granted the several States in place in aid of public schools; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 514. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate claims which the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 907. An act for the relief of Ellen B. Walker; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2584. An act for the relief of John H. Walker; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2743. An act to amend an act approved June 20, 1910, entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government, and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States"; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2460. An act to extend the provisions of section 18a of an act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat., p. 437), to certain lands in Utah; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2563. An act to provide for the completion of the bridge across the Little Colorado River near Leupp, Ariz.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, on what subject?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Porto Rico.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On the resolution pending?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, that is such a debatable question——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I wanted to get an opportunity to debate it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman has already debated it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I have some more observations to submit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not care to submit mine, and therefore I shall be constrained to object at this time.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to inquire if there are not some bills here on which it will be necessary to go into Committee of the Whole House?

Mr. WHEELER. There are probably two.

Mr. DYER. Then, Mr. Speaker, temporarily I object until we get into committee.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of the working of the prohibition law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to insert his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. To-day the business of the District of Columbia is in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill S. 2616.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LAND.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the bill S. 2616, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2616) to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey certain land.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the District of Columbia Committee what has become of the bill that we had up last District day, on which there has been considerable debate, the bill known as the pawnbrokers' bill?

Mr. WHEELER. I will state to the gentleman that the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia is out of the city, and he requested that consideration of that bill be deferred until he returned. There seems to be some opposition to that bill, and so the committee, with that advice and in deference to the chairman, decided not to call it up.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I think this ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole. I object.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2616. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Has the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] any request for time on this bill, S. 2616?

Mr. GILBERT. We would like to have an hour.

Mr. WHEELER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be limited to two hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] and the other half by myself, to be confined to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object to that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object to the debate being confined to the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Well, then, let us modify that request and limit the debate to two hours, half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the debate be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2616, with Mr. BURTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 2616. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to convey to the owners of the abutting property the land contained in the bed of Seaton Place and in the bed of S Street east of Fourth Street NE., and extending to the line of the Metropolitan branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., in the city of Washington, D. C., upon the payment therefor to the District of Columbia of an amount not less than $1.50 per square foot, the amount so paid to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a Senate bill, unanimously passed by the Senate, which provides that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be authorized to convey to the owners of the abutting property the land contained in the bed of Seaton Place and in the bed of S Street east of Fourth Street NE.

The subcommittee to which this bill was referred personally inspected this land. They find that it is a triangular piece of property abutting on the Metropolitan branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. The street is now closed by the railroad tracks running into Union Station, and all of the property on both sides of these two small plats of land is owned by the Sanitary Grocery Co., which desires to erect a large warehouse on this square. The Senate amended the bill to provide that the commissioners should not convey the land at less than $1.50 per square foot.

We took up the matter with the assessor's office of the District of Columbia and found that no land has ever been sold in that square for more than $1.40 per square foot; so that the restriction on the District Commissioners to convey this land at $1.50 per square foot is in excess of any price paid in that square. The land that is now lying vacant is shut off by the railroad company's track, and that portion of the land which rested in the bed of what was S Street is a small triangular piece, while the small tract in what was the bed of Seaton Place is 50 by 134 feet.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman referred to sales of adjacent property at $1.40 per square foot.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. When was the last of those sales made?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Some of them were made within the last few months.

Mr. CRAMTON. Can the gentleman state the reason why it is proposed to credit this money to the revenues of the District of Columbia rather than to miscellaneous receipts of the Federal Treasury? Is not the land the property of the United States?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. That is a debatable question, I will say to the gentleman. I have no knowledge as to why that language was inserted in the bill. I understand it is the usual language.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are some people in the District who are always protesting because the Federal Government owns half or more of the land in the District. Does not that include the land in the streets? What reason is there, if this sale is to be made, why the money should be turned over to the revenues of the District of Columbia?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I presume it has been the custom to turn over to the credit of the District of Columbia in the Federal Treasury moneys received from lands of this nature. I have no fixed idea as to that. I have no objection to the gentleman modifying that provision by an amendment if he desires to do so.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. McSWAIN. Were there any hearings had on this bill?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No; the subcommittee inspected the land. There is no one interested that I know of, except the Sanitary Grocery Co., which owns the adjoining property. We took the matter up with the District Commissioners and with the assessor of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McSWAIN. We do not know whether other people would be interested or not if we should give them a chance to become interested.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that I do not think so.

Mr. McSWAIN. I should like to see this plat. The gentleman refers to this as a small piece of land. The word "small" is a relative term. Two acres would be small in Texas.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, if there are no further questions to be asked, I will yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WHEELER. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] to use some of his time now if he desires to do so.

Mr. GILBERT. I yield so much of my hour as may be necessary to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-nine Members present; less than a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Drewry	Kleczka	Riordan
Andrew, Mass.	Driver	Knight	Rossdale
Ansorge	Dunn	Kreider	Ryan
Anthony	Echols	Kunz	Sanders, Ind.
Benham	Ellis	Lampert	Sanders, N. Y.
Bird	Fairfield	Langley	Sears
Bixler	Fenn	Lee, N. Y.	Shelton
Bland, Ind.	Fess	Lehlbach	Shreve
Bland, Va.	Fields	Logan	Sinnott
Blanton	Fish	London	Sisson
Bond	Focht	Lyon	Slemp
Bowers	Fordney	McArthur	Smithwick
Brand	Foster	McClintic	Snell
Briggs	Frear	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Snyder
Britten	Goldsborough	McLaughlin, Pa.	Stafford
Brooks, Pa.	Gorman	Maloney	Stiness
Brown, Tenn.	Gould	Mann	Strong, Pa.
Burke	Graham, Pa.	Mansfield	Sullivan
Burroughs	Greene, Mass.	Mead	Sweet
Butler	Griest	Michaelson	Swing
Cantrill	Griffin	Montoya	Tague
Chalmers	Hardy, Tex.	Moore, Ohio	Taylor, Ark.
Chandler, N. Y.	Henry	Moore, Va.	Taylor, Colo.
Clark, Fla.	Hickey	Morin	Taylor, N. J.
Classon	Hicks	Mott	Taylor, Tenn.
Cockran	Himes	Mudd	Tinkham
Codd	Hogan	Newton, Mo.	Towner
Cole, Iowa	Hudspeth	O'Brien	Treadway
Cole, Ohio	Husted	O'Connor	Upshaw
Collier	Hutchinson	Olpp	Vare
Connell	Jefferis, Nebr.	Paige	Voigt
Connolly, Pa.	Johnson, Miss.	Perlman	Volk
Copley	Kahn	Petersen	Ward, N. Y.
Crago	Kelley, Mich.	Porter	Wingo
Cullen	Kelly, Pa.	Pringey	Winslow
Darrow	Kennedy	Rainey, Ala.	Wood, Ind.
Deal	Kiess	Rainey, Ill.	Woodyard
Dempsey	Kindred	Reber	Wyant
Doughton	Kirkpatrick	Reed, N. Y.	Yates
Drane	Kitchin	Riddick

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill S. 2616, and finding itself without a quorum, he had ordered the roll to be called, whereupon 271 Members responded to their names, and he presented a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, during the last two or three District of Columbia days in the House the time has been spent in discussing what is known as the pawnbrokers' bill. That is on the calendar as unfinished business. Much has been said about it and much misinformation given. A diligent propaganda is at work on one side of this question. I served 14 years on the Committee on the District of Columbia, during 8 years of which I was chairman. I have grown up with this matter; and, feeling that I know the history of it, I deem it best that the House should have the benefit of that history.

Some years back, in 1913, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] introduced a bill for the purpose of regulating the loan sharks. That bill was referred to the District Committee; was reported to the House; and, with some amendments, became law. That bill now is the law relative to the lending of money in the District of Columbia, except such as is loaned by bankers, building and loan associations, and perhaps some others.

But one important feature, and the most important feature of this controversy, has never been given to the public. We have in Washington what is known as the Monday Evening Club, the membership of which is composed of some of the best people in the world and some of the ugliest. [Laughter.] That organization has been taken advantage of for the purpose of exploiting and helping along an unsavory scheme. One important fact to be borne in mind is that upon one occasion a man by the name of Exnicios, then a loan shark in the War Department (first hearing, page 76), joined the Monday Evening Club. About the same time a man named William H. Baldwin, then an employee in the Department of Corporations (first hearing, page 46), also joined the Monday Evening Club. Through the management of these two men a man by the name of Hamm, from New York, interested in extending societies all over this country for the lending of money to small borrowers, came to Washington and appeared before the Monday Evening Club and made a speech. (Second hearing, page 46.)

Accompanying him and also making a speech before the Monday Evening Club was a man whose name has been given in the hearings merely as "Mr. Finley," from Baltimore (second hearing, p. 46). I understand that he was president of a loan association in Baltimore. I said his residence was in the city of Baltimore. I am informed that since he appeared before the Monday Evening Club with Mr. Exnicios and Mr. Baldwin he has been sent to the penitentiary for stealing money from one of these loan societies. I understand that recently he has been released before the expiration of his term. But Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Exnicios are still here. Except for these two men I believe there would be little opposition to this bill.

Who is Mr. Baldwin? My information is that he came first from Ohio with a good reputation; but, after leaving Ohio, he fell into the hands of this bunch of money lenders here in Washington, and is now their main reliance. Who is he? He himself gives his residence as New York (second hearing, p. 44), but spends his time here, not to lower the rate of interest but to raise it. He lives in New York, so he says, where, I understand, the rate of interest is 10 per cent a month; but he appeared before the good people of the Monday Evening Club as seeking to destroy the loan-shark business in Washington, but really for the purpose of increasing rates rather than lowering them. On coming to Washington he passed through the city of Philadelphia, where, I am informed, the rate is 10 per cent a month; but he did not stop there to regulate rates. He passed through Baltimore, where again, I understand, the rate is 10 per cent a month. He passed them unnoticed in his work for humanity, came to Washington, and stopped within a few hundred yards of the Virginia shore, where, again, 10 per cent a month is the legalized rate. But I may say, if I am correctly informed, that at the other end of the bridge no loan has been made by that pawnbroker at exceeding 3 per cent a month. But Mr. Baldwin passes through those cities, and comes within a few hundred yards of the Virginia shore to regulate the rate of interest.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman does not intend to leave the impression that Mr. Baldwin is asking for a bill providing for 10 per cent interest?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I do not. I intend to leave the impression in the House that Mr. Baldwin seeks to double the rate of 1 per cent a month and to exclude others, thereby destroying competition in lending money to small borrowers.

Mr. Baldwin appeared on two different occasions before the District Committee—in 1913, 1914, or 1915, I forget which was the first time, and again in 1920—when the bill now before the House was being prepared. In answer to questions, he said that his residence was in New York. (Second hearing, p. 42.) He said that he was not a wealthy man, that he had no occupation and no business other than promoting the schemes to which I have just made reference. (Second hearing, p. 42.) When he was before the committee last I noticed that he had a young woman by his side, and that he had a great mass of papers before him. Whenever he wanted a paper that young woman was so familiar with them that she could turn to the papers he had before him and hand him any paper instantly that he wanted. I said to him:

Mr. Baldwin, you have a great mass of stuff before you, typewritten, and you have a young lady here by your side who is so familiar with them that she can turn to any paper you need and hand it to you in an instant. May I ask you in what capacity she is here with you?

He replied that she was his secretary. I said:

I hesitate to inquire into your private affairs, but may I ask you how much you pay her?

He said that he paid her $100 a month to help him. (Second hearing, p. 45.) Therefore, we have Mr. Baldwin living in New York, spending his time here lobbying for a bill which will exclude the pawnbrokers from entering into competition with Exnicios's company; not a wealthy man, having no business, no occupation, but employing out of his own pocket at $100 a month a secretary. If any gentleman wishes to know upon what page of the hearings the assertions which I am now making can be found, I hope I have before me sufficient memoranda to enable me to turn to the page and read Mr. Baldwin's testimony and that of others.

The act of 1913 passed and became a law, limiting the rate of interest to 1 per cent a month. Every small lender of money went out of business, every pawnbroker went out of business; but shortly thereafter Mr. Exnicios, who was running the loan-shark business while he was a clerk in the War Department, set up an outside institution, and it is that institution that all these years Mr. Baldwin has been defending and protecting and sending out erroneous propaganda for.

Virginia at one time was called the mother of Presidents. I believe Ohio now challenges the title; but however that may be, the Monday Evening Club is the mother of officials for the District of Columbia. During the administration which preceded the present one very few appointments were made to official positions in the District of Columbia that the appointee did not come out of the Monday Evening Club. The Commissioners for the District of Columbia, corporation counsels for the District—every position nearly that you can name—came out of the Monday Evening Club, and it was to the Monday Evening Club that these gentlemen, with sinister designs upon the public and for selfish purposes, went to obtain influence.

Mr. Baldwin, in giving his testimony, stated that neither he nor anyone associated with him relative to Mr. Exnicios's loan concern was in any way, directly or indirectly, concerned in the loan business, or in the lending of small sums, as I prefer to put it. One of the best women in all the world—Mrs. Hopkins—belongs to the Monday Evening Club; and, to give Baldwin and Exnicios standing in the community, she in some way or somehow was made a member of a so-called "citizens' committee." Mr. Baldwin testified that in no way was he connected with the loan concern, and to bolster up his case he brought this good woman before the committee to file her as an exhibit, or else to have her make statements which perhaps might not be sufficiently inquired into to develop the real situation.

When Mrs. Hopkins testified about Mr. Exnicios she said that he was associated with the Russell Sage Foundation, which lends money all over the country to the smaller loan concerns and they rob the public with it. The Russell Sage Foundation! We know how that great fortune was amassed. Since you all know, and since because of circumstances I decline to say, I shall drop it with that. Mrs. Hopkins in testifying said, "We now have 32 remedial loan associations," and then she seemed to doubt her own statement. She then turned to Mr. Baldwin as if for confirmation; and finally Mr. Baldwin said, "Thirty-four." (First hearing, p. 109). Therefore his statement stands contradicted by as good a woman as lives, and who, in my judgment, has been imposed upon with the other good people of that club to foster and push along this Exnicios scheme. Many of you have received communications from Mr. Baldwin on a stationery across the top of which was either printed or engraved, I remember not, "The Citizens' Association," and those communications have been signed by William H. Baldwin as chairman or president, I forget which, of the "Citizens' Association." Every one of you who has received one of those letters, every one of you who has heard him testify at hearings, every one of you who has seen his articles in the local newspapers, every one of you who has seen reference made to him as "chairman of the Citizens' Association" believed there was such a thing in existence. The cold matter of fact is that there is no such association, there is no such committee, and Mr. Baldwin is the self-constitutor of the thing to which he subscribes himself. (Second hearings, pp. 43, 52–54.) There is no such concern at all. That fraud daily is being practiced upon you and is daily being practiced upon this community.

On the evening when Mr. Exnicios and Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Hamm, from New York, and Mr. Finley, recently of the Maryland Penitentiary, met down here at the Monday Evening Club that club appointed a committee of five persons to look after remedial loans, and in response to the speeches of Mr. Hamm, from New York, and Mr. Finley, recently from the penitentiary, they made Mr. Baldwin the chairman of the committee of "five." Mr. Baldwin himself admits that for a while he sailed before this public as the chairman of that committee of "five" (second hearing, p. 52), but later along he abandoned that and struck out for himself independent of the Monday Evening Club (p. 52), and he appointed a committee of 20 of the reputable citizens of this city with which to surround his own name, in order that the Exnicios concern might be able to continue extortion from this public. Mr. Baldwin admitted that the so-called "citizens' committee" is self-constituted (p. 52). When he had gotten away from his committee of five, as he himself admitted under cross-examination before the committee, he commenced to pick out various and sundry people (second hearing, pp. 52–54). Ambassador White was before the committee, or Mr. Baldwin had Ambassador White before the congressional committee to give tone to his self-constituted committee. When Mr. White was asked how he became a member of the committee he did not know exactly how, but that somebody had said to him that he was to be a member, and next his name was found upon their letter heads and stationery. Then there was Mr. Galliher, president of one of the banks downtown, who was also a member of the committee. He came before the committee at the request of Mr. Baldwin, but after he had sat in the room and heard the testimony that was being given relative to the matter, to his praise, after a few words in support of a pawnbrokers' bill, he got up and walked out; and as he went out—but this does not appear in the record—he said to somebody that he did not know the exact nature of the matter in controversy, and away he went. Mr. Galliher said, however, that he did not get his appointment from the Monday Evening Club, but that Mr. Baldwin asked him if he would be interested in a proper pawnbrokers' bill. He answered affirmatively, in substance. Then, ipso facto, he became a member of Mr. Baldwin's self-constituted "citizens' committee" (p. 65).

Now, let us get down to a more material thing. Mind you, now, that the District Building was filled with people from the Monday Evening Club—commissioners, attorneys, and many others. When this 1 per cent a month law went into effect all the money sharks closed up. A man by the name of Horning was running a pawnbrokers' shop down at Ninth and D Streets. He said that he could not operate under the 1 per cent a month. He went over to the other end of the Highway Bridge and on Virginia soil set up a pawnbrokers' shop. Then he was a little too far away for the patrons of such institutions to reach him conveniently. Then he advertised that all those who wished to go over to his place for the purpose of transacting business would find an automobile at his old stand at Ninth and D Streets and that this automobile of his would take them across the river free of charge, where they might transact their business and then be returned. A warrant was gotten out for Mr. Horning upon the suggestion of Mr. Baldwin. Horning was arrested, the charge being that he was doing a business in part in the District of Columbia by soliciting; that he used his automobile to send contemplated borrowers across the river that there they might borrow. He was tried for that offense and acquitted. In a little while he was arrested again. Mr. Baldwin was still persistent down at the District Building to get Horning into such legal trouble as he might. While he knew the fact, as I will state presently, that his man Exnicios was charging an illegal rate, he never sought to have Exnicios arrested. But Mr. Horning was arrested a second time and tried and acquitted upon this charge. He had now been tried twice and acquitted.

Then Mr. Baldwin went to one of the assistant corporation counsel whose name appears in the hearings, and then he went to the judge of the court. The judge and the assistant corporation counsel, before a warrant was issued, before an information was filed, agreed together exactly what the judge was to do when the information should have been filed, after the arrest, and when the man was brought to trial. When he was brought to trial, there, upon motion of the assistant corporation counsel, or without motion—I am not sure—the judge quashed the information, so that the man could not have the right of trial by jury, as he had had upon these two former occasions. Then that case was taken to the upper court. The upper court held that the actions of Mr. Horning in running his automobile across the river for the purpose of carrying prospective borrowers was a violation of the law. Then the case came back to the original court. This man Horning was then put upon trial for the third time before a jury. The jury was instructed, and retired. After they had been out some hours and had not reached a verdict, the judge sent for them to come into court. They came, and he insisted that they should find a verdict. They went out again and were gone hours, when he called the jury back and insisted they should find a verdict. Then, after they had been out 11 or 12 hours the court called them back, and again he gave them instructions. I will read you the instructions that he gave the jury which found Horning guilty. Here is what he said to the jury:

The court of appeals has decided that such course of dealing is a violation of the law. Their decision is binding upon me and upon you alike. It is my duty to be controlled by it. It is your duty under your oaths as jurors to accept as correct and be governed by the exposition of the law which I give you. In a criminal case the court can not peremptorily instruct the jury to find the defendant guilty. If the law permitted it, I would do so in this case. In conclusion—

Says the court—

I will say to you that a failure by you to bring in a verdict in this case can arise only from a willful and flagrant disregard of the evidence and the law as I have given it to you and a violation of your obligation as jurors.

Then Mr. Davis, counsel for Mr. Horning, interrupted and said:

I except, if your honor please, to this as a peremptory instruction to the jury to render the verdict, and give notice on that ground that I shall take the usual course as prescribed by statute.

Then the court said (second hearing, p. 275):

Of course, gentlemen of the jury, I can not tell you in so many words to find the defendant guilty, but what I say amounts to that. The facts proved before you are in accord with the information. The court of appeals has said that that constitutes a violation of the law, and that is all there is to the case.

As a matter of course, Horning was convicted. Now, in the existing law there is a provision which says that if a man has ever been convicted for violating that law that never thereafter shall he be granted a license to do business in the District of Columbia.

There are two bills pending, the present bill, relative to pawnbrokers, and the one sailing under the misnomer of being the "commissioners' bill." But even if it could be called a commissioners' bill, it came from the Monday Evening Club, through the District Building, from the guiding hands of Mr. Exnicios and Mr. Baldwin, alias the "citizens committee," to the commissioners, with the recommendation that the rate be increased. (P. 202). Mr. Baldwin does not want this bill passed, because if it should pass, then Mr. Horning, who was convicted under the instructions I have just read, can not come back into the District of Columbia and do business at the rate provided in the bill.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. ROSE. I have been very much interested in the details of these several trials of Mr. Horning, and was waiting to see whether his attorney would take exception to the ruling of the court. Was that the end of the case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; it was not. Mr. Davis, the attorney for Horning, took it to the Supreme Court of the United States.

There, by a divided court, the court said in substance that no wrong had been done the defendant by the instructions, because the information, which in our country we call the "warrant," had set up facts that they thought constituted an offense.

The opinion was rendered by only five of the court. It was dissented from by Mr. Justice White, Mr. Justice Brandeis, and, perhaps, Mr. Justice Holmes, and the other I do not remember. But now, mind you, with this conviction brought about in this way, if Mr. Baldwin's bill should be passed Horning can not come back into the District and do business. This is a selfish movement on the part of Mr. Exnicios and Mr. Baldwin to crowd out of the District of Columbia everybody except Exnicios's concern.

The accountant from the Interstate Commerce Commission, E. R. Leibner, appeared before the committee and testified that one of Exnicios's loans had been presented to him; that he had figured it out, and that it showed a rate of 22 per cent. (P. 37 of first hearing.) Mr. Baldwin testified that according to his figures it was only 16.2 per cent that Exnicios, his protégé, was getting. (Second hearing, p. 48.) Therefore Mr. Baldwin knew that he was upholding a concern that was doing an unlawful business.

During the hearings it was brought out beyond any sort of controversy that Exnicios's concern was doing an unlawful business. I say that even Mr. Baldwin admitted that he was getting 16.2 per cent. Then the discussion was running along lines of why Horning was prosecuted and why Exnicios was not.

A member of the police force, Lieutenant Evans, had had something to do with it theretofore, and he testified. His testimony can be found on page 305 of the second hearings which were had. Without taking the time to read all of Lieutenant Evans's testimony, he testified that he went down to the District Building; that he went to the corporation counsel and told him how Exnicios's concern was violating the law. He went to the assistant corporation counsel and told him how the law was being violated by Exnicios; and he demanded a warrant for Mr. Exnicios's arrest. Then Mr. Stevens, who is now the present corporation counsel, was appealed to for his opinion as to whether Exnicios was doing a lawful or an unlawful business. He pronouncedly said that Mr. Exnicios was doing an unlawful business. But Mr. Stevens was not then corporation counsel. He was merely an assistant, and associated with him was the other assistant corporation counsel, who had arranged with the judge exactly what would be done to Horning before he was ever arrested, before the warrant was ever issued for his arrest. Lieutenant Evans came back to that committee and testified that the authorities there, in the face of that information and in the face of his demand, refused to let a warrant go for the arrest of Exnicios. Beyond any sort of question he was given protection by the authorities in the municipal building. The principal part of his testimony is on page 306 of the hearings to which I just referred.

Can any fair-minded man tell me why those upon whom the execution of the law is imposed should arrest Horning twice for the same offense, and, in addition, arrange for his arrest the third time, and also arrange for his conviction, and when an officer of the law appeared before them and demanded the arrest of Exnicios, refuse to issue a warrant for his arrest?

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. ROSE. Are these charges of collusion which the gentleman is giving us against this judge and corporation counsel supported by testimony before the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Absolutely. (Second hearing, pp. 305–306.)

Mr. ROSE. Well, I have never heard anything to equal it in my life.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Is this gentleman still employed in the Army?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Lieutenant Evans was not in the Army, he was on the police force.

Mr. STEPHENS. I mean Exnicios.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He separated himself from the War Department, or they separated themselves from him, I do not know which; but he is out. Mr. Baldwin, who persecuted Horning and has the other man protected by the highest authorities in the District of Columbia, said on the witness stand that he knew the expenses of the Exnicios concern's salary and office expenses amounted to 12 per cent on their capital stock.

How, in the name of heaven, Mr. Baldwin, can you defend a thing as being within the law when you yourself state that the salaries and expenses of the concern amount to 12 per cent of its capital stock? (First hearing, p. 203.)

But that is not quite all of this unholy affair. Mr. Baldwin testified before the committee that he was familiar with the Exnicios company's affairs, and he knew that it could not make any money. In the face of his own knowledge Exnicios induced this good woman, Mrs. Hopkins, to prevail upon her own sister to put $500 of her savings in Exnicios's concern. (First hearing, pp. 109–111, 206.) In addition to that, he took in a minister of the gospel here in town, who put his money into that concern, so thoroughly had he intrenched himself before the public by associating the good men and the good women around him in this nefarious scheme. (First hearing, p. 120.)

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. It sounds from what the gentleman says as though Mr. Exnicios has got the key to the Augean stables. Does he propose any way to get it out of his hands and get the stables cleaned out?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I want to say that the bill introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], which was the first loan-shark bill, was intended to get the loan sharks out, and it would have gotten them out even if it had passed without amendment. But I endeavored to see the rate of interest put as low as possible and made a fight in the committee that the bill should not be reported out giving a rate of interest above 1 per cent. They outvoted me in committee, and the bill as finally reported to the House permitted a rate of interest at 2 per cent a month. On the floor, perhaps with some help of mine, the 2 per cent rate was stricken out and the 1 per cent rate put in. Now, as long as the 1 per cent rate prevails every other concern excepting the protected one—Exnicios—is out of business in the District of Columbia; and as long as the other bill stands, Horning having been convicted, he can not come back; and as long as Mr. Baldwin has the pull that he has been exercising Exnicios's concern, which has always been under his protecting wing, will have the business without competition.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Has the gentleman looked up the published statements of the assets of the Exnicios concern?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I have.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Does it not show that the assets of that concern have quadrupled?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes. They started out with $62,600, and they now have assets, according to their statement, of about $750,000. After the fight got so warm that it was uncomfortable for Mr. Exnicios and his protectors, Mr. Baldwin and the others down at the District building, he closed up that particular concern and called it by another name. He now calls it some sort of a banking concern. I forget what the name is, but my information is that the same old robbing scheme goes on.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. In what way do they secure business? How do they advertise it? Do they advertise as pawnbrokers?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can not answer the gentleman's question, but I say that if he has followed the columns of the local press, particularly one of them, he will see that every avenue for publicity has been given in favor of Mr. Exnicios's concern. You have seen articles in one of the afternoon papers here time and again in the last few weeks. Every one of those articles except one can be shown to have been written by Mr. Baldwin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Who is this Mr. Exnicios?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. His name is Exnicios; that is all I know.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Where does he live?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Where does he work?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not even know his address, but if the gentleman will get the name of his banking institution—and I can get it for him—he will find it, no doubt, in the telephone book.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is he the man that the gentleman said was a clerk in one of the departments?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He was a clerk in the War Department, and according to the admission of Mr. Baldwin, and I think of Mr. Exnicios himself, was running a loan-shark business while in the War Department (first hearing, p. 76).

Mr. ROSE. I merely want to state, if the gentleman will allow me, that a gentleman by the name of Exnicios is now taking a very prominent part in the prohibition enforcement. I do not know whether it is this man or somebody else.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know, but I will venture to make this assertion without fear of contradiction, that if Mr. Exnicios, or Mr. Baldwin either, can associate himself with any number of good people who are on the popular side of any question he will be found knocking at the door for admission.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understood the gentleman to say that this man Exnicios is the head of this corporation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He is the president of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He is the president of that $750,000 corporation at this time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is what they say.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He is the head of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How can he consistently be in Government employ?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But he is not now in Government employ.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understood the gentleman to state that he is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I stated clearly that he has been separated from the Government service.

Mr. ROSE. I wanted to have that matter cleared up on account of the work that a gentleman by the name of Exnicios is doing in prohibition enforcement in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In my opinion, he is working every State he possibly can.

Mr. ROSE. I mean the Mr. Exnicios I have in mind.

Mr. TEMPLE. I think it ought to be clearly understood that the Mr. Joseph T. Exnicios in Washington and the Mr. John Exnicios, prohibition-enforcement officer in Pittsburgh, are two different men.

Mr. ROSE. That is what I wanted to have cleared up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I said I did not know anything about that part of it.

Now as to the propaganda you have seen in the papers: This genuinely good woman, Mrs. Hopkins, recently had an article in the paper urging the defeat of this bill and the passage of the other which would put Horning out of business and give the exclusive right for loans here to the Exnicios company.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Does the gentleman contend that Horning ought to come back into the District and do business here?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am not making any contention about that just now. I am telling the history of the scheme. Horning is better, and does a cleaner business than Exnicios does.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Is there any other feature of the present law that is objectionable to the gentleman, with the exception of the limitation of the rate of interest to 1 per cent a month?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. How is that?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Are the other provisions of the law——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Which law?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The present law, which provides only 1 per cent a month—are any of the other provisions of that law objectionable to the gentleman?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I think not. Oh, yes; under the present law two violations of the law must be shown in order to convict for "being in the business."

Mr. UNDERHILL. Then why all this fuss? Why can not that bill simply be amended by striking out 1 per cent and inserting 2 per cent and allowing each one to do business?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is just exactly the thing that Exnicios and Baldwin want done. They want to strike out 1 and get 2. They are already getting nearly 2, and if that were done God knows where they would go to; they have been getting 22 under the law now, and then they would get 44 from the way they are doing it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. If the gentleman has all that information, is not the district attorney's office the place to lodge it and put these people out of business?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. How under the name of high heaven is that going to be done when Lieutenant Evans went down there ready to swear out a warrant and they would not let him do it?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Does the the gentleman imply that that was done with the knowledge and consent of the district attorney?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The district attorney has nothing to do with it. The counsel for the District of Columbia, called the corporation counsel, and the assistant corporation counsel are the ones that handle this business. I was about to say that this good woman, Mrs. Hopkins, had been prevailed upon to issue a statement in the paper. Then Mr. Gude issued a statement in the paper as a part of the propaganda. Mr. Gude's name appears in Mr. Baldwin's self-constituted committee—the "citizens' committee"—which is not in existence and never has been. Mr. Baldwin gives the business location of the so-called citizens' committee as at his own private residence here in Washington. As I say, Mr. Gude gave a statement. I know Mr. Gude; he is a flower man. In his part of the propaganda he goes into detailed statements, and he quotes the hearings and gives the pages where such and such things can be found. I believe that I know as well as I am standing here that Mr. Baldwin wrote it. He is a digger. He will dig into archives to find anything that he needs as a lobbyist, and he will search until he finds, if it can be found. Mr. Gude does not say in a newspaper article what he wishes to say; he says it "with flowers." Mr. Gude does not know anything more about this matter or what was in that paper than does the man in the moon.

Another piece of propaganda has been issued by the then corporation counsel defending the bill for which Exnicios and Baldwin stand. He endeavors to defeat the one that has come before the House as a compromise measure from the Committee on the District of Columbia. He, so Lieutenant Evans says, refused to permit Exnicios to be prosecuted. One of the assistant corporation counsel who was in the office when this warrant was applied for and denied also has been helping along in that propaganda.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Just for information, I would like to ask is this Mr. Gude the same Mr. Gude that was a member of the Rent Commission?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think so. And I might say that Mr. Gude is the same man who several years ago came before the Committee on the District of Columbia in behalf of the erection of a bridge across the river from the steel mills to the other side, and who sat on the opposite side of the table from me, and to whom I put a number of questions, and then went out and denied that he had ever been there or had ever seen me.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Is it not true that this Mr. Gude died a few weeks ago?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not that I know of.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. He kept a flower store.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There are two of them.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. One of them died a few weeks ago.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I want to say that I did not recall that any Mr. Gude had died or I would not have referred to him. Whether it is this man or not, I plead ignorance as to his death and apologize for having mentioned him if he be dead. But dead or alive there appeared in one of the papers only a few days ago the article which I said I believed was written by Mr. Baldwin.

But to get back to where I was. The propaganda comes from the very people themselves who have kept the hands of the law off Mr. Exnicios and his concern; while he and his lobbyist demand the passage of the other bill and the defeat of this.

This is a pawnbrokers' bill and confined only to pawnbrokers. It provides that for the first $35 the pawnbroker may charge 3 per cent a month and over and above $35 a smaller sum, into all of which it is not now necessary to go.

Let me tell you more about this Exnicios concern. Everybody testifying before the committee stated that there is no possible way where a small sum of money can be borrowed (p. 207, first hearing, and p. 42, second hearing). The average loans of the Exnicios concern run from $60 up to $125 (p. 207). The Exnicios concern would not lend to a negro (p. 109), neither would it lend small amounts. It is in the testimony before the committee that the Exnicios concern up to this time had loaned $585 in $5 sums (p. 207); that it had $200 loans in $10 sums that would amount to $2,000. So out of the $750,000 they have got in this business they have $2,585 invested in $5 and $10 loans. Where is the negro or the white man or anybody else who is in destitution to get a $5 or $10 loan if you do not let the pawnbrokers loan it? If you allow this concern of Exnicios to control the money-lending business, where are they to get small sums? The borrowers of small amounts have been driven to secondhand dealers. Instead of taking a watch or a ring and getting a few dollars on it as their destitution may call for, the poor are compelled to go with furniture to the secondhand dealer and there borrow. One of those whose names appear upon Mr. Baldwin's literature testified that one should be permitted to mortgage his bed (p. 65). And yet the propagandists for this philanthropic (?) concern are insisting that nobody but Exnicios shall do business in the District of Columbia in making small loans.

As my time is about to expire, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] has expired.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise at this time to discuss the pending pawnbrokers' bill, because I am frank to say that I do not know very much about the measure. My purpose in rising at this time is to say a word in behalf of Mr. Baldwin, who has been attacked on this floor by the gentleman from Kentucky who just preceded me. For many years I have known William H. Baldwin. My first recollection of him goes back to the time when as a little chap I attended the Sunday school where he had a large class of boys who would gather around him every Sunday afternoon. His splendid Christian spirit and manhood left an impression upon these boys which I am sure will never be forgotten. For many years he was a prominent business man and manufacturer of eastern Ohio, contributing much to the building and promoting of the great industrial district in which I live and have the honor to represent in Congress at this time. He is now one of the trustees of the Western Reserve University, located in Cleveland, Ohio, and only a short time ago his name was mentioned in connection with the presidency of this splendid institution of education.

Mr. William H. Baldwin is known from one end of the country to the other for his philanthropic work, for the unselfish service that he has rendered for the benefit of mankind. He has spent thousands of dollars of his own money in going from one end of this country to the other trying to better the conditions and to build up communities and make them better places in which men and women can live. I do not know anything about the so-called loan shark bills, but knowing Mr. Baldwin as I do, I want to say to the Members of this House that with my personal knowledge of him, knowing his honesty and fine splendid character, I can not stand by and hear it intimated that he is now in the District of Columbia trying to put through some crooked deal relative to a pawnbrokers' bill which has been reported and is now on the House Calendar.

I believe a little later on the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] who now occupies the chair will speak on this question. He knows Mr. Baldwin just about as well as I do, and I am sure that he will concur in what I have said about this man and the wonderful philanthropic and social work that he has carried on throughout the country in the last 20 years.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I am not acquainted with Mr. Baldwin, Mr. Exnicios, Mrs. Rogers, nor any of these people, but I am acquainted with the testimony offered before the committee regarding this pawnbrokers' bill. Just remember that this is not a loan shark bill, this is a pawnbrokers' bill. One would think that these philanthropists (?) who wish to establish a pawnbrokers' business in the District of Columbia are the beneficiaries of mankind, to hear them talk, but the particular interest which they displayed before the committee was that 1 per cent a month, 12 per cent a year, is not sufficient return on which to do business, insisting that they wanted 3 per cent a month, or 36 per cent a year, in order to make a dollar.

The gentleman who served so long on the committee, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, when the Dyer bill was introduced, according to his own statements, opposed the 2 per cent which the Dyer bill carried and asked for a reduction to 1 per cent, which the House at that time established, and which is the present law. The law to-day covers every phase of the situation. It covers every requirement that is necessary to carry on and control the pawnbrokers' business. The only thing that everybody seems to be united upon is that 1 per cent a month is not a sufficient return to the pawnbroker to induce him to do business. Any Member of this House who would offer an amendment to the present law replacing the 1 per cent with 2 per cent would accomplish all that is desired in this long bill. Not another thing is necessary, and I say it is my firm conviction that if a pawnbroker can not do business successfully and profitably on 2 per cent a month, we ought not to inflict that philanthropist on the community.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. SIEGEL. While the New York Philanthropic Organization in New York charges only 1 per cent a month and has conducted a very successful business there for a number of years, why can it not be done here? What is the difference between their conducting their business in New York and a similar business being conducted in a city like Washington?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, there is hardly a large city in the country to-day that is not blessed with some banking organization, such as the Morris plan, or which does not have credit loan associations carried on by large business organizations, in some instances by wealthy men and in some instances by philanthropic men. It was almost disgusting to have these good people come before the committee and plead for the poor man and then, when you ask them if they had tried to do anything toward forming one of these associations, to hear them say that they had never concerned themselves about the matter.

In the city of Boston the pawnbrokers have been practically driven out of existence, not by legislation but by the establishment of these organizations. There were formerly scores of pawnbrokers in the city of Boston, and I believe now there are less than ten.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Can the gentleman from Massachusetts tell us how many there are in the business here in the city of Washington?

Mr. UNDERHILL. According to the testimony offered before the committee, none.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Does the gentleman know whether or not Mr. Horning, just over the bridge, is doing a land-office business in the pawnbrokerage business?

Mr. UNDERHILL. It was so stated, and it was also denied.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Could the gentleman inform the committee as to just what bill Mr. Baldwin is back of?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I never heard of Mr. Baldwin until this afternoon.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I understand that he is back of a bill which has been indorsed by the District Commissioners, by the citizens' committee on remedial loan law, and also by the Washington Chamber of Commerce. They have all gone on record indorsing the bill which I believe Mr. Baldwin favors, which provides for 2 per cent a month.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I shall not deny the gentleman's assertion. I know nothing to the contrary. I take the position that this whole bill, all this discussion, all this time is practically wasted, that one little action on the part of anybody who is enough interested to do it, in the form of an amendment to the present law, substituting 2 per cent for 1 per cent, would accomplish all that is desired and all that is necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] a moment ago, in addressing a question to you, said that this bill behind which Mr. Baldwin stands had been indorsed by the citizens' committee. The gentleman from Ohio evidently was not in the House or did not understand me when I said there is no such committee. It is self-constituted by Mr. Baldwin. He prints false stationery and falsely signs himself, and then—I may be misinformed about it, but I have been told that—when the chamber of commerce or the board of trade or whatever it was that indorsed his so-called commissioners' bill met, there were only 13 members present, and they had been asked to be present by Mr. Baldwin and his associates.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I am not interested or influenced by the citizens' committee or the chamber of commerce or any other organization. I draw my own conclusions. There is so much legislation passed in consequence of what is called "propaganda" that it is a disgrace to our form of government. We no longer legislate on the merits of a bill; we legislate almost entirely upon the amount of pressure which can be brought to bear through legitimate channels for or against various bills.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Can the gentleman specify legislation that has been passed by Congress in consequence of propaganda?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes; the maternity bill and the bonus bill; two of them.

Mr. TINCHER. That is the legislation that the gentleman is ashamed of his associates for passing?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes; I am rather ashamed of it.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. There are two classes of loans—one that of the pawnbrokers and the other the small loans?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Now, is it not the judgment of the gentleman and of the District Committee that for the small loan 1 per cent a month is sufficient, whereas the pawnbroker is hampered by being required to make reports and things, and he does not do business on 1 per cent per month, so that there is no necessity for increasing the rate of interest charged on the small loans, according to the Morris plan and all that? The amendment simply allows the small-loan man to charge more than he is entitled to, whereas on that same rate the pawnbroker can not exist.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I am not in favor of either one of the propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I would be glad to yield if I had the time.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. The gentleman spoke of the amount of legislation passed here as the result of propaganda. Did he mean to include the rent bill in that?

Mr. UNDERHILL. That has not passed.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Oh, yes; twice.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It is awaiting action.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The only thought I had in calling the attention of the committee and of the gentleman to the action of the chamber of commerce and the citizens' committee and the District Commissioners in indorsing the 2 per cent bill was this, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] tried to leave the impression on the minds of the members of the committee that there was no one back of this bill, only Mr. Baldwin and his friend, Mr. Exnicios, whatever the name is.

Mr. UNDERHILL. My impression is that the men behind this bill wanted to go into the pawnbroker's business and wanted to get 3 per cent per month out of the poor people of the community, and I am against it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I dislike to take part in personalities, and I think this House gives altogether too much of its time to little things. But I am here to enter a vigorous protest against the attack made upon Mr. Baldwin. If my neighbor's dog had been treated in such a way I would have gone across to defend him.

There is no man who has come out of Ohio who leads a purer life, with higher aims, than W. H. Baldwin. I do not think the breath of scandal or suspicion has ever been raised against him except upon the floor of this House to-day. I can not refrain from raising my voice against using the privilege which Members of the House of Representatives have to make a personal attack of that nature. Mr. Baldwin is at present on a sick bed, hovering between life and death. The last 20 years of his life he has given to philanthropic work. He was the promoter here of a bill which has now been followed by numerous States, requiring the registration of tubercular patients. The doctors at first opposed it, but after its passage here it has become a model in other States. He is the treasurer and actively interested in the Anti-Tubercular League of the United States.

Oh, how touching it is, the appeal that has been made for this martyr, Mr. Horning, who is doing business over in Virginia, where they can charge 10 per cent a month. Let us hear what the Supreme Court of the United States said in regard to Mr. Horning and his business. I read:

> If an essential part of it is done there and a Washington office is used as a collecting center, it does not matter that care is taken to complete every legal transaction on the other side of the Potomac. We can not suppose that it was intended to allow benefits so similar to those coming from business done wholly in the city to be derived from acts done here and yet go free. We are of opinion that upon the undisputed evidence the defendant was guilty of a breach of the law.

That breach of the law was that he put a sign up over his Washington office, inviting applicants for pawnbroker's loans to go over to Virginia, where he could charge any rates.

The appeal is made that there is a provision in the old law that one who has been convicted of a crime or offense under it can not engage in business again. Ordinarily that is a very salutary provision.

Now, let us eliminate Mr. Exnicios, this bogey man who is brought up here. I do not know him. I do know that Mr. Baldwin has stated to me that he has now no connection or association with him, and I believe Mr. Baldwin in that respect. I do not see how Mr. Exnicios could make these illegal loans here in the District, because, as I recall, the penalty for usury is the forfeiture of the whole debt. There may have been an increase in his deposits from $60,000 to $700,000. I do not care about that; but what is all this to-do about? A law was passed here in 1913 providing that on pawnbrokers' loans and on loans of less than $200 the maximum rate of interest allowed should be 1 per cent a month. That law has proven absolutely ineffective. Special rates are allowed for loans of that kind in other jurisdictions. Mr. Reginald Heber Smith, who has given a great deal of study to this subject, has put out pamphlets in which it is stated that the amount that should be charged is 3½ per cent a month. The Sage Foundation favors that rate. I do not believe it. I think 2 per cent is the rate that ought to be adopted here in the District of Columbia. Mr. Baldwin favors a law, and so does everyone in the District with whom I have talked, and so do the District Commissioners, and so do the legal force, and so does the unanimous voice of the newspapers—and I think we will hear from this discussion in the press of the city before many days—favor a law by which the rate of 1 per cent a month, which has proven impracticable, may be raised to 2 per cent a month.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MAPES). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON. I should like five minutes more.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BURTON. The committee, whose bill apparently the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is defending, bring in a bill here recommending 3 per cent for loans of $30 and less, or $35, I have forgotten which, and above that a rate of 2 per cent. That treats only of pawnbrokers' loans. Now, I can not agree with what I think was the spirit of the question of the gentleman from South Carolina that the rate should be less on a loan of $200 or less where there is no security, where a great risk is taken, than where adequate security is taken, as by the pawnbroker. Mr. Baldwin favors a law limiting to 2 per cent loans of these two kinds. The committee has reported in favor of a rate of 3 per cent up to $35, which would include the great majority of the loans made to poor people, and because of that, because of his favoring a 2 per cent rate instead of 3 per cent, this flood of accusation and vituperation is emptied on Mr. Baldwin's devoted head.

I appeal to the justice of this House. How about the other side? In the hearings conducted a few years ago by the committee headed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] it appeared that a slush fund, or whatever you may call it, of $5,000 was raised by Mr. Horning and his associates to defeat any legislation here. They were having a good time, and if they could not do business here they could go over into Virginia, where they could charge 10 per cent a month, as I understand the law to be.

Gentlemen of the committee, when we are discussing a subject, let us cling to cold facts. Let us compare these two measures. Let us seek to eliminate this flood of accusation, which does not have anything to do with it. Propaganda has been circulated, and a very able lawyer engaged at $5,000 or more, it was shown, to defeat this bill which Mr. Baldwin has brought forward, and I am afraid that, unconsciously perhaps, some Members of this House have been influenced by that coterie and that slush fund.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman recall that the $5,000 to which he has just referred was paid to an attorney by the name of Davis?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Who went before President Taft for the purpose of inducing him to veto the bill, but which the President did not?

Mr. BURTON. I did not understand from the hearing, and I do not think it will so appear, that it was limited to any special purpose. If they could raise $5,000 to get an attorney to go to President Taft for that single purpose, to urge him to veto a bill, it looks as if there were unlimited resources behind them, as if they were raising a great deal of money. Now, this discussion does not come up upon the bill that is before the House at all. It is interjected here. When we come to the so-called pawnbrokers' bill we will discuss it. I believe the Baldwin bill, supported by the District Commissioners, by Mrs. Hopkins, by those who have had the welfare of the people of the District at heart, will meet with your approval. My reason for rising here, Mr. Chairman, is that when reputation, the immortal part of a man is attacked, and attacked unjustly, I am ready to rise in my place to protest. [Applause.] That is all I have to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman speaks of interjecting speeches at this particular time relative to this subject. The gentleman himself some two or three weeks ago made a speech upon this subject.

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wish to ask him who wrote a large part of the matter composing the gentleman's speech, and which went into the RECORD?

Mr. BURTON. I will assure the gentleman most decidely that no speeches go into the RECORD under my name unless they are written by myself. There was a memorial from certain associations in the District which was included, which was clearly shown on the face of the matter itself. The rest of the material was my own. I indulged in some dissertations about the general policy in regard to usury laws and said there were some arguments against them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The memorial to which the gentleman refers was an argument on this subject, was it not?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May I ask where the gentleman got it?

Mr. BURTON. It came from Mr. Baldwin.

Mr. WHEELER. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has 28 minutes remaining.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I saw a telegram from Mr. Barcelo, the president of the Porto Rico Senate, addressed to the Resident Commissioner here, Judge FELIX CORDOVA DAVILA, in which he said that the Associated Press carried the information that Gov. E. Mont Reiley was to remain on the job in Porto Rico. In that telegram he said if that be true, the flag of mourning will be raised throughout the island of Porto Rico.

It occurred to me then to look up the record somewhat to see just what happened in 1898 when our troops entered Porto Rico, and I found that on the 28th of July, 1898, Gen. Nelson A. Miles, major general, commanding the United States Army, issued this proclamation to the people of Porto Rico:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Ponce, P. R., July 28, 1898.

To the inhabitants of Porto Rico:

In the prosecution of the war against the Kingdom of Spain by the people of the United States in the cause of liberty, justice, and humanity, its military forces have come to occupy the island of Porto Rico. They come bearing the banner of freedom, inspired by a noble purpose, to seek the enemies of our country and yours and to destroy or capture all who are in armed resistance.

I believe the general spoke the truth in that declaration. No soldier in the history of this world, no crusader, ever answered the call of his country inspired by a loftier purpose, or took up the gauge of battle in a more unselfish cause than did the men who came to the colors in 1898. We coveted nothing the Spanish Empire possessed. Her sins were against others, but out of the Caribbean there came a voice of the oppressed calling to us for succor, and though the cry was in an alien tongue, it begged for liberty and we understood and answered it.

Continuing, he said:

They bring you the fostering arm of a Nation of free people, whose greatest power is in its justice and humanity to all those living within its fold. Hence the first effect of this occupation will be the immediate release from your former political relations, and it is hoped a cheerful acceptance of the Government of the United States. The chief object of the American military forces will be to overthrow the armed authority of Spain and to give to the people of your beautiful island the largest measure of liberty consistent with this military occupation. We have not come to make war upon the people of a country that for centuries have been oppressed, but, on the contrary, to bring you protection, not only to yourselves, but to your property, to promote your prosperity, and bestow upon you the immunities and blessings of the liberal institutions of our Government. It is not our purpose to interfere with any existing laws and customs that are wholesome and beneficial to your people so long as they conform to the rules of military administration of order and justice. This is not a war of devastation, but one to give to all within the control of its military and naval forces the advantages and blessings of enlightened civilization.

NELSON A. MILES,
Major General, Commanding United States Army.

That proclamation was issued by our commanding general some 24 years ago. Now I find in this message from the president of the Porto Rico Senate that they are about to fly the flag of mourning throughout the island. It would be interesting to note just what the conditions were when we landed in Porto Rico and how we were received.

On the 5th of December, 1898, President McKinley, in his message to Congress, said:

At most of the points in the island our troops were enthusiastically welcomed. Protestations of loyalty to the flag and gratitude for delivery from Spanish rule met our commanders at every stage.

And Richard Harding Davis, who was with the Army, wrote:

The people of Ponce were certainly the most friendly souls in the world. Nothing could surpass their enthusiasm or shake their loyalty.
* * * *
The natives gave our men freely of everything; and the richer and better class of Porto Ricans opened a Red Cross hospital at their own expense and contributed money, medicines, cots, and doctors for our sick soldiers.

They did not raise the flag of mourning then, they raised the flag of mercy, the flag of brotherly love.

This was the welcome our Army received from the people of Porto Rico. I read further from the McKinley message to show what the conditions were there politically:

The system of civil jurisprudence now adopted by the people of this island is described by competent lawyers who are familiar with it as thoroughly modern and scientific, so far as it relates to matters of internal business, trade, production, and social and private right in general.

This was the condition, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, which obtained in Porto Rico when our invading Army landed.

Further on in this same message he says:

I have not thought it wise to commit the entire government of the island to officers selected by the people, because I doubt whether in habits, training, and experience they are such as to fit them to exercise at once so large a degree of self-government; but it is my judgment and expectation that they will soon arrive at an attainment of experience and wisdom and self-control that will justify conferring upon them a much larger participation in the choice of their insular officers.

Following this good lead, through 20 years Congress did from time to time enlarge the measure of their participation in the government of their island, and in 1917, believing that the judgment and expectation expressed by Mr. McKinley had been realized and that they had attained that experience and wisdom in self-control that would justify conferring upon them a much larger participation in their choice of insular officers, we enacted the Jones law.

During all these years until now the joy with which the Porto Ricans greeted our soldiers as their deliverers has found its full warrant in our experiences together, and, while they naturally, and it may be justly, believing themselves entirely capable of self-government, were sometimes impatient in their years of waiting for local self-government, the ties that bound them to our flag were strengthened and the spirit of Americanism, with all that it means to those who seek for liberty, grew increasingly with the process of the suns.

In commenting in his second inaugural, Mr. McKinley, then speaking of the Spanish War, said:

The result was singularly favorable to the American arms and in the highest degree honorable to the Government. It imposed upon us obligations from which we can not escape and from which it would be dishonorable to seek to escape.

I want to call especial attention to that particular paragraph in Mr. McKinley's message—"it imposed upon us obligations from which we can not escape and from which it would be dishonorable to seek to escape."

The Senate of Porto Rico, speaking the voice of Porto Rico, states to this House that the rights and the liberties that were given to them in the Jones Act, which is the organic act, are being denied to them—are being not only disregarded but are being taken away from them by the unlawful and unwarranted action of the Governor of Porto Rico. They ask us to investigate. They do not ask that we accept their unsupported declaration. They ask us to set up a tribunal before which they can appear and submit the proof; and the only answer we have made to them is that it is a matter for the Executive and not for Congress; that, regardless of these obligations, which Mr. McKinley acknowledged, we will pass the buck to the President.

Mr. Chairman, this is exactly the procedure that was followed by Pontius Pilate, and I hope that he may be permitted to enjoy the monopoly of the glory and credit which go with that kind of conduct. He said he would wash his hands of his responsibility. Can we wash our hands more successfully of our responsibilities? The President of the United States did not give the rights and guaranties to Porto Rico contained in the organic act.

They were given by the Congress of the United States and they are being denied to these people now, if their charges are correct. What they ask is that a tribunal be set up before which they may appear and submit the proof. We were told the other day by the chairman of the Committee on Rules, who holds this matter in the hollow of his hand, that if the governor should make the request—or, rather, he strongly intimated that—that then an investigation would be had; but neither the governor nor any of his friends has appeared to make that request. The only answer we have from the governor is that all this trouble is caused because when he went there he raised Old Glory and hauled down the flag of Porto Rico. I deny that absolutely. The men who raised our flag in Porto Rico were the men of the Sixteenth Pennsylvania and the men of the Second and Third Wisconsin and their brave comrades, who fought on the battle fields in the hills about Coamo and in the mountain passes around Aibonito in 1898. They are the men who raised the flag in Porto Rico. [Applause.]

And now we see this Governor of Porto Rico, this counterfeit, this vice of governors, dressed in his little brief authority, cutting such fantastic tricks before high heaven as make the angels weep, walking up and down the earth proclaiming to a trembling world, "I did it." [Laughter.] I deny that. The flag which the Governor of Porto Rico has raised is not the Stars and Stripes. He pulled down the flag of Porto Rico in the presence of the people there and denounced it as a "dirty rag," but the only flag that has been raised there since he came that was not there when he arrived is the flag of mourning.

These gentlemen from Porto Rico, these officials, the senate, who alone can speak for Porto Rico, have made their charges against the governor, and have specified wherein he has violated their laws. They have filed their bill of particulars, and our only answer to them is that it will take too much time to make the investigation. We have had time and have investigated everybody else on the face of the green earth. Not only have we had the time, but we have had the money with which to do it. We have investigated the Shipping Board, we have investigated Hog Island, we have investigated Muscle Shoals, we have investigated aircraft production, and all of the infinite varieties of activities in the War Department at the expense of great time and much money, because we thought that somebody perhaps was taking some of our money away from us; but when the charge is made officially to us by our fellow citizens in Porto Rico, not that their money is being taken from them but that their liberties are being taken away, our answer is to them that we have not the time to make the investigation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is this one of the offices the incumbent of which is liable to be subject to impeachment?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is. He is the governor, appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. He is subject to impeachment when upon investigation we find that he is guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors.

Mr. WALSH. He is on trial for impeachment, when you find that out, is he not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Oh, no. We will find out, if we make this investigation, whether these charges be true or false.

Mr. WALSH. But impeachment is not usually preceded by an official investigation upon the part of the House. It is usually preceded by an investigation upon the part of somebody who, upon his responsibility, later rises and impeaches the official.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think perhaps the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is somewhat in error as to the modern practice. My recollection is that before a formal impeachment—that is to say, an impeachment by the Judiciary Committee itself bringing in the articles of impeachment—of a Federal judge in Georgia, there was a somewhat elaborate preliminary investigation made by a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I think the same thing is true in respect to the impeachment of Judge Archibald, from Pennsylvania. Those are two cases I recall in recent times, in which, before the formal articles of impeachment were filed with the House or adopted by the House, there was an extensive preliminary examination.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is all we ask for here. My resolution provides that the Committee on Insular Affairs make the investigation. Have we the time? Why, the Committee on Insular Affairs has not had a half dozen meetings since this Congress assembled in December, and there is no prospect that I know of, and I am a member of that committee, of our having any meetings in the future. We have nothing else to do. Why have we not the time to make this investigation to determine if these charges are true or false, so that the House may then proceed intelligently?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I understood the gentleman to say that the chairman of the Committee on Rules suggested the asking of an investigation by the governor himself. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi if the conversation between him and the chairman of the Rules Committee indicated to him that the chairman of the Committee on Rules was serious in suggesting that the governor under these circumstances would ever or could be expected to ask for this investigation?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It was not a private conversation. It was a colloquy on the floor of the House which I had with the chairman of the Committee on Rules the other day. He said it would be impractical to make this investigation now to impeach the governor, because it would take too much time.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Has the gentleman information as to facts or policies of the Government or Congress upon which he thinks such an investigation can be seriously made, where the man under charges of that sort would be expected to ask the investigation himself before the Congress could act?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I have a very strong personal attachment for the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and a very high regard for his ability as a Member. I would not say that what he said was not said seriously. I take it that it was said seriously; but the fact remains that there has been no investigation ordered, and neither the governor nor any of his friends have requested one. As I say, we investigated everybody in this country that we thought probably was taking some of our money, and now the grand jury in Porto Rico have met and after investigation officially suggested that possibly the governor and his auditor and his private secretary, whom he took with him all the way from Kansas City, might be guilty of misappropriation, or at least of the misuse of public funds. Under the system of criminal procedure there the grand jury makes a report to the court, setting forth the facts. That is turned over to the district attorney, and the district attorney frames an indictment. That indictment is then presented to the grand jury, and they indorse upon it either "dismissed" or "a true bill." This grand jury made an investigation and made a full report. For instance, they said that the governor had drawn $5,000 out of the public funds to pay the expenses of the trip to Washington, the expenses of himself and his retinue that he brought with him.

The round trip from here to Porto Rico on the steamer is $180. I do not know whether these facts are true or not. The grand jury, however, charged that he drew out of the public funds this $5,000, and after they began the investigation the governor came before them and said:

I have $2,000 of that money left—

Which he pulled from his pocket and exhibited—

and the reason that I have not made any account of it is because Judge Bonner, the former auditor, has not rendered an itemized statement of his expenses, but as soon as that is done I will make a report.

Judge Bonner said he told the governor to start with that he would not permit his expenses to be paid out of money from the public treasury, because it was an unlawful use of public funds, and that he was not going to render an expense account to him. He said he told the governor that to start with.

When they began to investigate the matter of the use of public funds for his household necessities they found he had drawn unlawfully some $1,500 for that purpose, but the governor sent a check to the treasury to cover that. The check was dated before the grand jury began its investigation, but for some reason it failed to arrive at the treasury until after the investigation had proceeded some days.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. DAVILA. The gentleman knows that the Governor of Porto Rico removed the district attorney before the indictment was made ready to be presented to the grand jury?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; the story of that is, as I am advised, about like this: Under their law, as stated, upon the filing of the report of the grand jury in the nature of an information, the district attorney is required to prepare the indictment.

Before this was done the governor removed the district attorney. His statement is that he removed the district attorney because that officer came to him and asked to be assigned to some other position in the island. This fact is also attested by the attorney general, who was present at the conference. But on the day following this conference the governor wrote the district attorney to proceed with the indictment, and it was not until a day or two after that when the district attorney was preparing the indictment to be delivered to the grand jury that the governor removed him. The district attorney refused to vacate the office, because he claimed that under the law he could not be removed by the governor in this summary way. The governor thereupon sent the police to the district attorney's office and ousted him and took possession of all the papers in the matter which had been turned over to the district attorney by the grand jury.

Those are the facts as they have come to me in the newspapers and through other sources.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman give me five minutes more?

Mr. WHEELER. I am sorry I can not, but I can give the gentleman three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BURTON). The gentleman is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The judge of the court, who had just been appointed by the governor, thereupon dismissed the grand jury altogether, although the grand jury protested that they were not yet through with the business. Thus endeth the first chapter; and so the governor and the auditor and the private secretary remain unindicted.

Before I close let me read one more sentence from the last message which William McKinley ever sent the American people. In his second inaugural he said:

The American people, entrenched in freedom at home, take their love for it wherever they go, and they reject as mistaken and unworthy the doctrine that we lose our own liberties by securing the enduring foundations of liberty to others. Our institutions will not deteriorate by extension, and our sense of justice will not abate under tropic suns in distant seas.

God save the mark!

As heretofore, so hereafter will the Nation demonstrate its fitness to administer any new estate which events devolve upon it, and in the fear of God will—

Take occasion by the hand, and make
The bounds of freedom wider yet.

Once again, the cry comes to us out of the Caribbean, but this time the call is not in an alien tongue. It is the call of our fellow citizens. Will we heed it as we did that voice which called in '98?

Gentlemen of this Congress, occasion now stands before you and proffers her hand, to see if our sense of justice has been lost under tropic suns in distant seas. Will you take that hand so proffered or will you say, "Excuse me; we have not time?"

I thank you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHEELER] has six minutes remaining.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to use the five minutes allotted to me to enter a protest, on behalf of the 600,000 ex-service men who are still carrying war risk insurance, against an order, or a statement, issued by the Veterans' Bureau recently, relative to the time in which their insurance policies may be converted.

In a pamphlet recently sent out by the bureau to those who hold these policies this statement is made:

The premium for yearly renewable term insurance increases with the age of the insured, and becomes prohibitive at the older ages. It was necessary, therefore, to provide for conversions into insurance at level premium rates. Provision was made in the original act for the conversion of the yearly renewable term (war-time) insurance into permanent United States Government life insurance at any time within five years after the date of the termination of the war as declared by proclamation of the President of the United States.

In that same article it is stated that—

It will be necessary, therefore, in order to retain life insurance with the United States Government, that the yearly renewable term insurance be converted on or before March 3, 1926, at which time all yearly renewable term insurance will automatically terminate.

I wrote to the Secretary of State to find out just when the war did terminate, according to the President's proclamation, and I have a letter from him inclosing both proclamations, the one issued on November 14, 1921, terminating the war with Germany, and one issued on November 17, 1921, terminating the war with Austria-Hungary. In both of them it is stated that the war "terminated on July 2, 1921," instead of the 3d day of March, 1921. I took this question up with the Veterans' Bureau, and they replied that their ruling was based on the joint resolution of Congress, approved on March 3, 1921, nullifying certain laws, the termination of which was contingent upon the close of the war.

My contention is that that resolution does not cover war-risk insurance, and if it is made to do so it will be merely by a technical construction, thereby depriving these boys who have struggled along and kept up these policies of four or five months they are justly entitled to carry them at the present rate under the law. I do not feel that, as a Member of Congress who knows these facts, I ought to sit quietly by and acquiesce in this order or statement until these policies begin to terminate and the boys begin to raise the question, and then have it said to us that we admitted by our silence that this order was correct, because none of us protested at the time.

I shall introduce a resolution asking that July 2, 1926, be fixed as the date upon which these policies shall terminate unless they are converted into term insurance. A good many of these boys have strained a point to carry these policies up to now. They have gone through this period of depression, and a great many of them will never be able to convert their policies, because when this term lapses or expires then they are going to be forced, in a great many instances, to drop them.

I just wanted to enter my protest here and to say to the House that I expect to introduce a resolution asking that the date of the termination of these policies, or the last day on which they may be converted, be fixed not at March 3, 1926, but at July 2, 1926.

Let us give these boys the full benefit of the law and also the benefit of the doubt. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLSPAUGH].

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the subcommittee which went out to investigate the piece of land with which this bill deals, and found it was a part of a triangular piece of land, at present unoccupied, through which a street formerly ran, but it is now closed by the Metropolitan branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Road, and also a small apex of the triangle at the south, which was formerly a part of S Street. It would be very advisable, indeed, to dispose of this land, and the company to whom it will be sold propose to build a warehouse there, covering the entire tract, and utilizing it in that way instead of leaving it unoccupied, as it is at the present time.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I notice this money is to be paid into the District treasury. How did the District government get the title to this land?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. An amendment will be offered to put it into miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. SISSON. That will put it into the United States Treasury then?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this bill is exhausted. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to convey to the owners of the abutting property the land contained in the bed of Seaton Place and in the bed of S Street east of Fourth Street NE., and extending to the line of the Metropolitan branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., in the city of Washington, D. C., upon the payment therefor to the District of Columbia of an amount not less than $1.50 per square foot, the amount so paid to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLSPAUGH] stated that this was intended to cover a triangular piece of land, and also the apex of a triangle which is to be conveyed. I think perhaps he inadvertently stated that it was a triangular piece of land when he meant the rectangular piece of land which is now Seaton Place.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I intended to say that this sale covered a part of a triangular piece of land.

Mr. WALSH. Who is it expected will purchase this property, and is it to be sold at private sale or is it to be offered to the highest bidder?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. If the gentleman will permit me, it is my impression that under the language of this bill the District Commissioners are authorized to sell it at private sale at a price not less than $1.50 per square foot. They can sell it to the highest bidder if they see fit, or to the purchaser who offers the most money.

Mr. WALSH. But it is confined to the property owners abutting on the land contained in the bed of Seaton Place. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad is one of the abutters. Who abuts on the other side of Seaton Place?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The property of the Sanitary Grocery Co.

Mr. WALSH. On each side?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. On each side.

Mr. WALSH. So it must be either the Sanitary Grocery Co. or the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes; Fourth Street being on the other side.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman believe $1.50 a foot is adequate compensation for land in that section—land bordering upon the railroad yard and also upon the public street?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that the committee took the matter up with the District officials, and the District assessor assures us that $1.50 is a very fair price for the land and is more than any land in the neighborhood has brought at either private or public sale.

Mr. WALSH. How long since there has been a sale there? That would make some difference. Has there been a sale there recently?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. There have been sales there within the past few months. The highest price paid for land in that section of which we can find any record is $1.40 per square foot.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose this land will be conveyed in accordance with the provisions of the District Code, under which the commissioners are authorized to give deeds?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I presume so. They are authorized to convey to the purchaser, which I suppose they will do in regular form.

Mr. WALSH. What kind of a deed are they going to give—a quitclaim deed?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I can not answer that. There is no provision in the bill as to that.

Mr. WALSH. I think the District Code has some provision that the District Commissioners in conveying land previously laid out or occupied for street purposes shall do so by means of a quitclaim deed. There is nothing in this bill to indicate that it is to come under the general provisions of the code, but I assume that the commissioners intend so to convey it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I presume so.

Mr. WALSH. Did the committee make any inquiry as to that?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. We made no inquiry as to the method by which it was to be conveyed.

Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIHLMAN: Page 1, line 11, after the word "be," strike out the language "deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia" and insert in lieu thereof "be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment repeats the word "be."

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is unnecessary to repeat it. It should be—covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the proper modification. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ZIHLMAN the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2616) to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey certain land, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to the final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ZIHLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROMOTION OF TRADE WITH CHINA.

Mr. VOLSTEAD, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4810) to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China, presented the conference report for printing under the rule.

FANNIE ARMINDA CORDELL.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 288.

Resolved, That there be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $900 to Fannie Arminda Cordell, widow of Wayne W. Cordell, late assistant clerk to the Committee on Pensions, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law, for extra and expert services rendered to said committee from March 4, 1921, until the date of his death, November 22, 1921.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is the usual resolution passed for an employee assigned to the Pension Committee from the Pension Department. This amount was due the late Mr. Cordell at the time of his death, but inadvertently the resolution has not been presented either to the committee or to the House. The appointee to the other Pension Committee was paid at that time, but the only recourse we now have is to pay this sum to his widow. He was not technically an employee of the House, so the usual resolution for funeral expenses and six months' salary can hardly be taken into consideration.

The resolution was agreed to.

EVELYN WALTHALL LEE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 316.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 316.

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Evelyn Walthall Lee, widow of Joseph C. Lee, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as said employee, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the expenses of the funeral of said Joseph C. Lee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

STELLA M. WEIGEL.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 320.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 320.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Stella M. Weigel, clerk to the late Hon. Lucian W. Parrish, a Representative in Congress at the time of his death, March 27, 1922, the sum of $266.67, being an amount equal to one month's clerk hire allowance to a Representative in Congress.

The following committee amendment was read:

Line 2, strike out the comma and all the remaining language of the resolution and insert in lieu thereof the following: "the sum of $140, and to Buelah S. Given the sum of $166.66, being the amount received by them per month as clerks to the late Hon. Lucian Parrish, a Representative in Congress.

Mr. IRELAND. The original resolution was drawn in error, and this amendment is to conform with the records of the Clerk's office.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 330.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 330.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum for the services of an additional clerk to the Committee on Accounts during the remainder of the present Congress, whose duty it shall be to audit vouchers pending before the committee and do such other work as the chairman of the committee may direct.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the resolution.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, the resolution has been made necessary largely due to the additional duties imposed on the committee and that largely due to changes in form of handling the telegraph business of the House. About a year ago we were forced to enter into a different arrangement for handling the messages franked by Members. That work was formerly done by the Western Union, and that threw the work onto the Committee on Accounts. We had no alterative in this unless we very greatly inconvenienced all the Members in their use of the wire for official business. We now have to handle all the audit checking and revising and accounting that was formerly attended to in the local office of the Western Union, and it has accumulated to an extent that it is physically impossible for us to handle it with the present employees. In addition to that the duties of auditing that we have inherited through the Western Union give us further additional work which is impossible to handle with the present force. I do not believe that the appointment should be permanent, and I shall endeavor to extricate ourselves from the difficulty by the end of this Congress, and either relieve this committee of some of the detailed work now inherited, or else make some other arrangement, but it is absolutely necessary at present that some such arrangement be made. My present clerks have not left the office until 7 o'clock for the last three months. I can not further impose upon them and have done much of the work myself.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the explanation is entirely satisfactory, and I withdraw my reservation of an objection.

Mr. IRELAND. I hope the House will not believe me inconsistent in requesting this, because I have opposed the appointment of clerks to some other committees that were not so active.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

REGULATING BANKING BUSINESS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 3170, regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no corporation that is not now engaged in the business of banking in the District of Columbia shall, after the passage of this act, be permitted to enter upon said business in the said District, or to establish branch banks in said District, until after it shall have secured the approval and consent of the Comptroller of the Currency; and each one of the officers of such corporation so offending shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLSPAUGH].

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Speaker, the banking situation in the District of Columbia is in a precarious condition. There are in the District at the present time 15 national banks, which, of course, are incorporated under the Federal law. There are 31 so-called State banks, of which number 16 have their charters from the State of Arizona, 3 are organized under the savings bank law of the District, 1 under the Alabama law, 5, I believe, under the Virginia law, and 6 under the West Virginia law. The law here in the District in regard to banking is so loose and so indefinite that a promoter may secure a charter from any State in the Union which will issue him a charter and come into the District and open a bank without asking permission from anyone. The favorite plan seems to be to secure a charter from the State of Arizona, 16 of the banks having secured charters from that State. There are banks here operating upon a capital stock of $1,000,000 down to $9,000. The law permits a bank to get a charter from Arizona for an authorized capital stock of $1,000,000 and to open up here with a nominal amount of capital stock, a small part of that million dollars, so that this bank now operating under a $9,000 capital, I think, was chartered under an authorized capital of $1,000,000. There are 5 banks trying at the present time to organize and come into the District to do business. There is 1 bank in particular which is promoting its stock upon the basis of a million dollars capital stock, and their plan is to sell their shares at a par value of $10, but on a market value of $15, the proposal being that of the $15, $10 shall be the par value, $2 shall go to the surplus fund, and the other $3 shall be used to pay the expenses of promotion, and out of that fund they propose to furnish the fixtures and promotion expenses. Of course it is necessary for them to offer some consideration to get this $3 out of the $15, so that they state they will furnish the fixtures, but they do not state how much.

There is no State in the Union which will permit a bank from any other State to come in and do business without its first being licensed or without its having permission from the bank commissioner or some such authority. After a bank opens here, under the law the Comptroller of the Currency is authorized to examine the bank. The bank also must make reports to the Comptroller of the Currency, but there is no provision in the law that gives the Comptroller of the Currency any authority to make any restrictions other than to close the bank. He has the authority to close the bank. Up to the present time he has, through his examiners, been able to make recommendations to the board of directors which practically all the banks have complied with, but no one knows when a bank will come in here that will refuse to accede to his wishes along this line of safety. Under the law at present a bank chartered in Arizona may come in here with a million dollars authorized capital, but with $25,000 of paid-up capital, and may loan the whole $25,000 to one man if the bank cares to do so. The fact of the matter is, if the bank has deposits of $200,000 it may loan the whole $200,000 to one man if it wishes to do so, and the only recourse that the comptroller has is to close the bank.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This legislation will not prevent that, will it?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Absolutely.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman say that it will prevent banks now organized from doing what the gentleman says can be done?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. No; it will not do that. May I say to the gentleman that the object of the committee is to pass this bill to prohibit the formation of these fly-by-night banks, until the committee can draft a comprehensive bill for the District along lines that have been followed by the different States in their banking laws.

The purpose of this bill is to keep these other banks, the fly-by-night banks, from organizing here until that can be done. Under the present law in the District if a national bank wants to organize it makes application to the Comptroller of the Currency, and he investigates the standing and the ability of the men who propose to open the banks, and as to whether there is a good chance of their making a success of the business. That is likewise the case in the different States where a State bank seeks to organize. The banking commissioner in the State has the right to investigate the character and the standing of men who desire to open a bank, and whether there is a good chance for their success, and if there is not he may refuse them a charter.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This bill will prevent any corporations that are not now engaged from proceeding in the future to the organization of a bank, but it will not prevent banks that are now in existence from organizing branches, will it?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I think so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I call the gentleman's attention to that language very particularly. It seems to me that as it is worded these banks now in existence can still continue to organize branch banks, and it occurs to me that if that be the case, and the situation be as the gentleman describes it, the bill ought to be amended.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I see the point that the gentleman makes.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I would call the gentleman's attention to lines 6 and 7, and I ask if the language there does not cover his objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No. If we leave out what goes before, it reads in this way:

> That no corporation that is not now engaged in the banking business in the District of Columbia shall, after the passage of this act, be permitted * * * to establish branch banks in said District.

In other words, as it is worded, one of these banks now doing business under the laws of Arizona or Alabama, or any other State, can go ahead and organize branch banks if it chooses to do so, unless some amendments preventing it be adopted.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Did I understand the gentleman to state, in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, in respect to any one of these banks heretofore established under a charter from Arizona or Alabama, that the Comptroller of the Currency has no jurisdiction over the banking methods obtaining in such an institution?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. He has jurisdiction to this extent: His examiners examine the bank, and the banks are required to make reports to him, but he has no authority to determine the amount that they shall loan to any one party or to impose any of those restrictions that should apply to banks.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry which I think may elicit an answer to the gentleman's question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not true, however, that with reference to trust companies and State banks the District Commissioners exercise the same supervision over those institutions that the comptroller does over national banks?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. That is true as to trust companies.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield further, that is the situation as to a trust company; but as to a bank that was organized under some State charter, as was included in the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], there is no supervision except as the gentleman from Missouri has stated?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Absolutely none.

Mr. CRAMTON. Hence the legislation proposed here is at the best only a very limited step. It will simply prevent other institutions coming in here who may possibly conduct their affairs in a very loose fashion, whereas there are already 31 institutions that can now conduct their affairs just as loosely as they may desire to do.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I may say in reply to the gentleman that that is true, and that it is the intention of the committee to as quickly as possible draw a comprehensive bank bill that will control the banks that are now in business, a banking bill fashioned along the lines of the best bills that are in force in the different States in the Union. That is our intention. That, however, is a matter that will take some time to accomplish.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman states that as to any one of these 31 institutions now doing business under the present laws there is nothing to prevent its lending all of its available cash to one person?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. There is nothing except the pressure which the Comptroller of the Currency and the clearing house of the District may bring upon them. Up to this time we have not had much trouble under this law.

Mr. CRAMTON. It seems that a comprehensive bill such as the gentleman refers to is so urgent it is hardly worth our while to fool along with a makeshift law like this, that does not get us anywhere.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. If the gentleman will allow me to suggest, the barring of any one questionable bank that proposes to enter here would be sufficient reason to pass the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. The comptroller will be able to close the bank at any time that he thinks it insolvent. On the other hand, while this bill will refer to some one bank that may come in, it does not reach the situation as to 31 banks that are now here.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. That may be true. But a run on one bank in Washington might produce results that we could not overcome for years.

Mr. EVANS. If you would make the law applicable to national banks apply strictly in the District of Columbia, would you not have solved many of your difficulties? And, if not, why not?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I will say, in answer to the gentleman, that the banking law which it is eventually proposed to offer should follow along the lines of the national banking laws, but it will be impossible to make the national banking laws to apply to State banks in the District without making some exceptions.

Mr. EVANS. You certainly could make it apply to any bank coming in.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. You mean restrictions?

Mr. EVANS. Restrictions.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. That is what this bill does. It must have the permission of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. EVANS. But it does not require the bank to operate under the national banking laws?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I will say to the gentleman that my impression is there should be no bank from Arizona or any other State allowed to do business in the District of Columbia.

Mr. EVANS. Then, if you would adopt the suggestion, by making the national banking law apply to any new bank or new branch you would accomplish that result, would you not?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. EVANS. Suppose you would make the provisions of the national banking law apply to any new bank coming into the District to do business, or to any new branch to be created, you would then cover the present situation?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. This bill does just that thing. The new bank must get the permission of the Comptroller of the Currency, and that is what this bill does. That is all that it does.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. In regard to the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], I see your point here, and I am of the opinion that an amendment to correct that situation should be presented.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] has an amendment prepared.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I thank you. I think that should be done.

Mr. DOWELL. Agreeing with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] that this is a very small item so far as curing the defect suggested by the gentleman from Missouri is concerned, is it not true that in most States there is a very definite banking law that in most respects is quite uniform, and is it not possible for the committee to submit a banking law for the District that will be in accord with the best banking systems in the States, and can it not be done in a very short time? It seems to me, as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], that we are losing a lot of time in trying to enact legislation that may prevent further banks from coming in; but, according to the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, enough evil has already entered to make the situation very dangerous here now, and it ought to be cured by submitting a set of laws that will regulate the conditions as they exist, according to the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLSPAUGH]. Would the committee not better take their time in submitting a comprehensive bill to the House for enactment at a very early date?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that this bill is an emergency bill, which should be passed at once. It ought to have been passed a month ago.

Mr. DOWELL. I am for this as far as it goes.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Wait a moment. In answering you in regard to the other bill, I want to say that there are 48 States with banking laws, and, inasmuch as I have promised to present the bill or to take charge of the framing of it, I want time enough to frame a law out of the experience of the 48 States. And it is my desire to present the bill here afterwards through the committee that will be a model banking law, based on the experience of the 48 States that already have these laws.

I will say to the gentleman that we have a most excellent law in the State of Missouri, but I should hesitate to take that Missouri law and offer it to the District, because it might not be entirely applicable. It is a matter that would take some days to examine and study over and think of before a law of that kind can be drawn, and I should hestitate to say that I could do it in a month or six weeks or two months. And the emergency exists at the present time.

Mr. DOWELL. But the emergency has existed for some time, as I understand. According to the gentleman's own statement, this emergency has existed for some time.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I did not know it until quite recently.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not desire to question the gentleman's statement in the matter, but my thought is I am for doing anything that will help restrict this character of banking described by the gentleman from Missouri. My only suggestion was that this condition existing, as stated here, there should be no time lost in curing the situation.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. May I say to the gentleman that there are some conditions existing here that I would hesitate to state to the gentleman at this time, and I am going to ask him to take my word for a part of it that the emergency exists. I should hate to make it public.

Mr. DOWELL. I shall support the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, we have so good a national banking law and it is so liberal that I want to ask the gentleman whether in his judgment it would be oppressive simply to enact that within a certain time, probably a year or six months, no bank should do business in the District of Columbia that had not incorporated under the national banking law?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I will say to the gentleman that I think there are some provisions in the national banking law that should not apply to the District, and that is the reason I am not offering that at the present time. I want to make a study of it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Conditions that ought not to apply in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Yes. I have followed the banking business for 25 years, and I have given the committee the benefit of my judgment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The gentleman thinks the national banking law is not applicable?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the provisions of this bill are very inexact. Would the gentleman object to making it read like this: "Hereafter no corporation shall engage in the banking business in the District of Columbia until after it has secured the approval and consent of the Comptroller of the Treasury"? I think that would cover it and is much more definite.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky is drawing an amendment that will probably cover that situation.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not sure that I correctly understood the gentleman. The gentleman spoke of one bank chartered under the laws of Arizona with a capital of $1,000,000 and $9,000 paid in. Is that a bank that is coming, or one that is already here?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. That is already here.

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, the emergency that the gentleman refers to is to keep out some institutions that the 31 banks, or those that are already here, think is about to come in?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I did not say that.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand there is an emergency, and it is to keep out a particular institution which desires to come in?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I did not say that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is not that the situation?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. There are five organizing at the present time or endeavoring to promote themselves. I have simply mentioned that bank to show what an unfavorable proposition confronts us.

Mr. CRAMTON. For how many years has this present situation prevailed?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I could not say; but with 25 years of previous banking back of me, I was astounded when I found that condition.

Mr. CRAMTON. The condition is that for many years past the doors have been wide open, as the gentleman says they are now?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. That is true.

Mr. CRAMTON. And there are 31 banks that have come in through that wide door and are here, with very defective supervision, and we are to permit them to continue, but we are to shut the door to prevent the competition that wants to come in to meet these 31 banks that are already here?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. The gentleman does not understand me.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am trying to get information.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I do not think the 31 banks that came in here with foreign charters are bad banks at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not want to be understood as stating that, but the authority for supervision over them by the District authorities is defective.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. The situation was that there was no law under which a bank could incorporate here, so that some very excellent banks got their charters from outside, from the States.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not want what I have said to be understood as criticism of the management of existing banks; it is, rather, criticism of the law under which they operate.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I will say to the gentleman that there are some conditions in regard to this situation which I would hesitate to make public on the floor, conditions which I have investigated; and I feel that, with the experience that I have had in the banking business, I am correct in asking for the enactment of this bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I understand some amendments are to be offered which were under discussion when I was out of the Chamber. Is there to be an amendment offered which will clarify or amplify or modify the words, in line 7, "so offending"? Does the gentleman think that those words in the connection in which they are used would prove ample to make possible a prosecution for a violation of this law? What does that mean by saying "so offending"?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Opening a bank here in the District of Columbia without securing the permission of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has it any relation to the establishment of branch banks?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. I think so. But the amendment that is being drawn by the gentleman from Kentucky will cover that feature, I assume.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say this language is altogether too general to make successful a prosecution for a criminal offense.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. After the amendment of the gentleman is offered, if that is not correct I shall be glad to accept an amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have got the information I wanted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired again.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask a question for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri still has the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. I have yielded to the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. DOWELL. Unless further legislation is enacted the question will arise, as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], that it will prevent other banks from coming in, as these banks have already entered. Now, if this is to be a temporary matter, that is another thing; but if it is the intention of the committee to enact this legislation and then not put the law into such shape as to permit every bank to stand on an equality that applies for admission here, then this will be entirely unfair by admitting those already here and preventing others from coming here afterwards unless you correct it.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. In line 7 there is a provision which permits any bank to come in here when this bill is passed by procuring the permission of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. DOWELL. But there should be a basis on which a bank should enter by complying with a specific statute, as in any one of the States.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. That is true——

Mr. DOWELL. Without reference to whether anybody wants them in or does not want them to come in.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. But if we can hold an undesirable situation in leash until we can get the other bill ready, is not that a good thing to do?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; but suppose the committee does not recommend further legislation? Then they are here to the exclusion of everybody else.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Oh, no.

Mr. DOWELL. With those already in having the power to proceed with the character of banking that they are carrying on now.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Oh, no.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY].

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I have had some experience as a bank director. I am very much surprised to learn that the District of Columbia has not up-to-date banking laws. I think in the District of Columbia there are some of the best banks in the United States. Legislation of this sort is not necessary for the large banks, but what my friend from Missouri [Mr. MILLSPAUGH] is trying to do is to shut out proposed banks which are in the process of organization. If there are banks from some of the States which, as has been stated, have very limited capital and a very limited amount paid in, you certainly do not want any more of them in the Capital City. The question is whether you can make this law retroactive to cover those that are now in; but it seems to me that the Comptroller of the Currency should have the same jurisdiction in Washington as the commissioner of banking and insurance has in Iowa, New Jersey, Ohio, or any other one of the States which are safeguarding the public. That is what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. DOWELL. But should he not have the same power over a bank that has already entered the District under conditions described by the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. APPLEBY. He should have; but the question is whether you can make a banking law retroactive as to the people already in.

Mr. DOWELL. There is no doubt that we can legislate to compel every bank to comply with certain regulations and laws that we may prescribe, whether it is in here now or whether it is to come in hereafter.

Mr. APPLEBY. But the advantage of this bill which has already passed the Senate, as I understand it, is that it will meet an acute situation here. Why not pass this and then have another law presented later?

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. This overlooks one principle that we have been rather careful about. It implies that the banks that are already here can establish all the branches they want to. No bank can come in hereafter without the consent of the comptroller, nor can any bank establish a branch except those banks that are already here. Does not the gentleman think the Comptroller of the Currency ought to be given visitory powers as to all these banks?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. And that no bank without his consent should have the right to establish a branch?

Mr. APPLEBY. I understand there will be an amendment offered to that effect.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HAMMER].

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to include in my remarks in 8-point type the speech of my colleague [Mr. POU] as temporary chairman of the Democratic State convention at Raleigh, N. C., on April 20, 1922.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in 8-point type, as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave given me I desire to print the following speech of my colleague, Hon. EDWARD W. POU, delivered at the Democratic State convention at Raleigh, N. C., on Thursday, April 20, 1922:

PROMISE OF DEMOCRACY BASED ON RECORD IN STATE AND NATION.

Mr. Chairman Norwood, ladies, and gentlemen of the convention, 21 years ago last January Charles B. Aycock succeeded Daniel L. Russell as governor. Since then our party has had control of both legislative and executive departments of this State. We are responsible for whatever has been done, and responsible for whatever has been omitted. We will not evade the issue, nor will we hide behind excuses. What we have done the world knows.

We are proud of our record. We challenge our critics to show any land upon which the sun shines with a record of greater achievement during the 21 years our party has had charge of the government of this State. Let us contrast conditions now and then:

The common schools.

	1900	1920
Value of school property	$1,097,654	$24,057,838
Average value of each schoolhouse	158	3,009
Number of log houses	1,190	94
Number of new schoolhouses built since 1900		6,805
Average length of school term in days for white race	78	136
Average monthly salary paid white teachers	$24.79	$60.55
Average monthly salary paid colored teachers	$20.43	$46.35
Total school population	657,949	840,961
Total school enrollment	400,452	691,249
Average daily attendance	206,913	473,552
Number of rural libraries		4,636
Per cent of school population in average daily attendance	31	58
Appropriations State educational institutions, 1900–21:
Permanent improvements	$8,000	$2,005,000
Maintenance	$47,000	$1,282,200
Per cent illiteracy for State	29.4	13.1
Per cent white	14.0	8.2
Per cent negro	28.6	24.5

HIGHER EDUCATION.

North Carolina College for Woman, at Greensboro: Enrollment for 1900, 490; present enrollment, 984.

The University: Enrollment 1900, 512; present enrollment, 1,662.

State College of Agriculture and Engineering: Enrollment, 1900, 298; present enrollment, 1,234; value of college buildings 1900, $125,000; present value, more than $2,000,000.

Negro Agricultural and Technical College: Enrollment 1900, 235; present enrollment, 426.

Since 1900 Eastern Training School at Greenville, Appalachian Training School at Boone have been established, and the Training School at Cullowhee, if not established since that time, has been greatly enlarged.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

In 1900 the State Hospital at Raleigh took care of 424 patients; now it has 1,110.

The State Hospital at Morganton in 1900 had 454 patients; now has 1,061.

State School for the Blind and Deaf, Raleigh, 1900, 269; despite strenuous efforts to enroll every blind child, there are only 301, an increase in 22 years of only 32, despite the great increase in population, a remarkable demonstration of the success of the State's efforts to reduce blindness among children.

ORPHAN ASYLUMS.

In 1900 assistance to the Oxford Orphan Asylum, $10,000; present assistance, $30,000; children in that institution, 1901, 221; in 1922, 381.

Colored Orphanage, at Oxford: Appropriation, 1901, $5,000; appropriation, 1922, $20,000; children in institution, 1901, 78; now, 200.

CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS.

In 1900 there was paid in Confederate pensions $118,276. For 1922 there is appropriated for distribution among them a round million dollars.

In 1900 the appropriation for maintenance of the Soldiers' Home was $10,000; 1921, $60,000.

In 1900 there was no provision to take care of widows of Confederate soldiers. Now the State has established a home for widows of Confederate soldiers at Fayetteville. As we have long ago determined no Confederate soldier should be sent to a county home, so it is now determined that no widow of a Confederate soldier need go to a county home.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

In 1900 the State had provided no place for the treatment of tubercular patients. Now we have the great institution at Sanatorium.

In 1900 there was no institution where deformities in children might be treated and corrected. Now the State gives generous aid to the wonderful orthopedic hospital at Gastonia.

In 1900 there was no place where those threatened with the horrors of hydrophobia could be treated. Now we have an institution in Raleigh that treats these patients for moderate compensation, if able to pay, and, if unable to pay, free.

In 1900 we had no place where the vaccines, serums, and antitoxins so necessary in preventive medicine could be prepared. Now the institution at Raleigh prepares and distributes, at trifling cost to those able to pay and free to those who are not, antitoxins to prevent diphtheria, tetanus or lockjaw, typhoid fever, whooping cough, and smallpox.

In 1900 the State had no institution for the care and training of mental defectives. Now it has the Caswell Training School at Kinston.

DISCIPLINARY INSTITUTIONS.

In 1900 the State had provided no institutions whereby delinquent youths might be disciplined, trained, and reformed. Now it has Samarcand for wayward girls and Stonewall Jackson for boys.

The State's institutions, original and additional, have cost money, but who would close one of them? Not only has the State increased the service rendered along the lines I have described in the last 21 years but it is now at work doubling in size nearly all of its institutions of learning and its charitable institutions as well, so that every person desiring an education may be admitted, and every person unfortunate enough to require it may be admitted into the institutions devoted to this protection.

Heretofore the sad duty has been imposed upon the executive officers of our institutions to select those who were to receive their benefits. Some were admitted; some were refused for lack of room. Hereafter the State has determined that no citizen applying for admission, either to an institution of learning or into a hospital for the unfortunate, shall be denied admittance for lack of room or facilities.

PUBLIC ROADS.

In 1900 the roads were maintained generally by unpaid labor. The old system obtained of "warning out the hands," and requiring of every person between 16 and 50, living in the county, not less than six days' work upon the public roads without pay. A few counties supplemented this with taxes levied either upon the entire county or upon some road districts, and this money was used in working prisoners convicted of petty crimes. In this manner the roads were built and maintained.

It was common criticism and reproach that the work of maintaining the roads was largely imposed upon those who owned neither animal nor vehicle. It was charged with some bitterness that we required men to give six days' free labor that others better off than they might travel our roads with more ease and comfort. Think of the injustice of requiring the farm laborer who owned no vehicle at all to contribute the same amount of work on public roads as the man who owned a dozen vehicles and perhaps twice that number of horses or mules.

If any of this antiquated system remains, it is only in a few isolated cases. The system of compulsory unpaid labor upon the roads is gone and gone forever. Our roads are built and maintained by two methods. The counties, either by a vote of the people or at the request of the people by legislative act, have levied taxes to maintain the county system of roads suitable to each county and meeting the approval of each county. Not a cent of road tax is imposed unless the representative of the people have, in response to popular demand, secured legislative authority for such tax.

We have also a State system of road building, for which no direct tax is imposed upon the people. This system is sustained entirely by tax upon motor-driven vehicles and upon the oils and gasoline consumed by such vehicles. The man who has no such vehicle pays nothing whatever toward the building or upkeep of the State system of roads. The man who has such vehicles saves in repairs and the fuel and lubricating oils used far more than the tax he pays. That is, appropriating a given sum of money for the upkeep and operation of a motor-driven vehicle, the owner can deduct enough from the fund expended to pay the taxes and then traverse probably twice as many miles with the balance remaining over improved roads as he could have for the whole amount of money over unimproved roads.

We have then this remarkable situation. To the great majority of the people the building of the present State system of hard surface highways is costing nothing, and no tax whatever is imposed upon them. The man who has a horse-propelled vehicle, the man without vehicle, uses the hard surface road at will without paying directly or indirectly one single cent. The man who has an auto-propelled vehicle pays his tax out of what he saves by being permitted to travel a hard surface road, and in addition thereto doubles the efficiency of his machine.

Another feature of this work is that the tax is collected almost without cost. The license fees are collected through the secretary of state's office, and the gasoline tax is voluntarily collected without cost by the manufacturer. It is difficult to conceive a more ideal scheme than the State has adopted for the building of a system of hard-surface roads; and it is only fair to say that the Morrison administration, and particularly the State highway commission, presided over by Mr. Frank Page, are now doing a work which will be remembered with pride and gratitude when most of us shall be forgotten.

The road commission is composed of 10 trained business men. These men are devoting their time for nominal pay merely to the great work in hand. They are all, each and every one, entitled to the thanks of the people of the State.

LABOR LAWS.

In 1900 there were few, if any, laws upon our statute books for the protection of labor. Now we have a code of laws intended and designed as far as possible to lessen the dangers of employment; to add to the comfort of the workers; to protect the worker from exploitation and injustice; and to provide convenience and emergency assistance, which benefits both employer and worker. We have laws which protect the North Carolina workman from garnishment by shylocks who would send their doubtful claims to other States when they fear to trust their claims to our own courts.

Every one of these laws tending to the benefit or protection of the workingman was enacted since Governor Aycock was inaugurated in 1901.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND WELFARE WORK.

In 1900 the State had done but little to promote public health and welfare work. The State board of health was struggling manfully, with meager appropriations and comparatively little support from the public, to do its work. The county boards of health considered that their duty required them to look after the jails, the county home, and, if one existed, the convict camp. If an epidemic of smallpox appeared, the board was active and did what it could with the meager means at its disposal. Beyond this the county boards of health were instrumentalities in name only. What a difference there is now.

We now recognize that the promotion of public health is one of the highest duties of the State. The work done in behalf of public health can not be measured by material standards. We can not compute it in terms of feet or bushels or tons or dollars. But it can be read in the face of our children. Their bright eyes and clear complexion speak louder than words what has been accomplished by sanitation and preventive medicines in the past 20 years. No longer do we fear epidemics of smallpox, diphtheria, or typhoid fever. Malaria is being rapidly reduced, and another generation will practically see its elimination. Other diseases which tended to reduce the vitality and efficiency of our people have been completely eradicated, or rapid progress is being made in that direction.

Likewise in the field of public welfare work. Not only do we have a State superintendent of public welfare, with generous appropriation for welfare work, but each county has its county superintendent, whose duty it is to look after the unfortunate and sometimes forgotten members of society.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The department of agriculture has greatly increased its usefulness and has taken under its supervision certain branches of work heretofore unknown to it, such as promoting animal industry, inspection of food, feed, and so forth, and at the same time the tax on fertilizer has been reduced 20 per cent.

EXPENSES OF STATE GOVERNMENT.

The expenses of our State government, like everything else, have increased since 1900. The expense of living, and consequently the expense of everything which living requires, has increased in the past 20 years. Like the individual, the State must pay more than it did then for material and services.

In 1900 the governor's salary was $3,000. The judges were paid $2,700 each, and the State superintendent of public instruction was paid $1,500. These and other salaries have been increased, but not to a point to arouse any just criticism.

TAXATION.

Much has been said about taxes. People forget sometimes that the lowest rate of taxation is in the countries having the lowest development and the highest rate of taxation is in those countries having the highest development. The rate of taxation is in no small sense the barometer which shows the height to which development has reached. In its final analysis taxation is the measure of the cooperative spirit of any State or community. The more the people are willing to put into a common fund, to be used for common and universal development, the higher is that spirit of cooperation and fraternity. Conversely, the smallness of the sum that people are willing to contribute to the common purpose indicates a lower degree of the cooperative and fraternal spirit.

Universally it is admitted that public money wisely and economically expended is the highest form of cooperative development. Many things particularly relating to public health and education can only be done effectively through governmental agencies, and the greater the amount of money which the people are willing to contribute to those purposes the higher is the standard of citizenship of that people. So much as a general principle.

In the application of taxation the purpose should be to equitably lay the burden upon those able to bear it, and to lay the burden in proportion to the ability to carry the same. In former days, favoritism and privilege provided for a very unequal distribution of the burden. The weak and lowly carried an undue proportion. Since 1900 our State has made marked progress toward a scientific and humane tax system. Let us examine it for a moment.

In 1900 the poll tax in many cities reached $6 or $7 per annum, and the man who had nothing but his labor and the burdens of his family was called upon out of this poverty to pay this tax. Now, by constitutional amendment adopted in 1920 the poll tax is limited to $3, including both State and municipal. Article 5, section 1, of our constitution reads:

The general assembly may levy a capitation tax on every male inhabitant of the State over 21 and under 50 years of age, which said tax shall not exceed $2, and cities and towns may levy a capitation tax which shall not exceed $1. No other capitation tax shall be levied.

In 1900 the taxpayer was allowed as exempt from taxation household and domestic property to the amount of $25. On all above that amount, whether he owed for his property and whether it was encumbered by mortgage or not, he must pay tax. Now he is allowed an exemption of $300. In 1900 the workingman was taxed: If he lived in the city, $5 to $7 poll tax, and all of his property above $25 was likewise taxed. Now his poll tax is limited to $3, and he pays no tax if he does not possess property in excess of $300; and if he be married his wife has a like exemption of $300. The $300 exemption has been criticized as being favoritism and savoring of agrarianism. But the critic forgets that the rich man is allowed this exemption as well as the poor man. It is universal, therefore, and can not be discriminatory. No person need pay on anything except upon the excess over $300.

In 1900 only $1,000 could be deducted from the taxable income, even though the taxpayer might be married and have a house full of children. He was required to list and pay his taxable income all above $1,000, regardless of his situation or condition in life. Now, the married man with five children under 18 years of age has an exemption of $3,000, instead of $1,000, and he need pay tax only upon the excess of his taxable income above $3,000.

The income tax has been severely criticized by some. I will enter into no defense of that system further than to say that the people of this State, after two years of consideration, adopted it in 1920 by a huge majority, and I need only say that almost every civilized country in Christendom has adopted a similar system.

Briefly stated, the principle of that law is to tax the surplus income. If there be no income, there is no tax. If there be an income but no surplus thereof, there is no tax. If there is an income, and after all exemptions shall be deducted there remains a surplus, it is taxable; and as the surplus increases in size, so likewise does the tax, both in amount and percentage. As the ability to pay increases, the amount to be paid also increases.

The wit of man has yet to devise a more equitable tax system than this. It is here to stay. It is righteousness written into the tax law. It will be an important element of all future tax systems, National and State. We neither apologize for nor defend it. We are proud of it and we boast of its enactment. The rights, the welfare, the best interest of the army of wage earners have been carefully safeguarded by the Democratic Party in this State. Whenever the man who has nothing but his labor, the tenant farmer votes against the Democratic Party he strikes at his best friend. He can have but one excuse, and that is ignorance of what the party has done for him. In summing up this history of Democratic achievement since 1900, I quote this from the Manufacturers' Record:

The following facts about North Carolina appear in the current issue of the Manufacturers' Record:

"North Carolina, with over 2,559,000 people, has nearly doubled in population in 40 years, but according to statistics compiled in the Blue Book of Southern Progress, published by the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, the Old North State has made a much greater progress in material advancement. The capital invested in manufactures in that State is over $669,000,000, or three times what it was 10 years ago, and nearly ten times that of 20 years ago. The value of her manufactured products is now about ten times the value of the State's manufactured products in 1900. North Carolina now has about 1,000,000 more cotton spindles than the entire South had 20 years ago, the increase in 20 years in the State being over 350 per cent. The value of the mineral products of the State in 1920 was $7,650,000, nearly double that of 1910 and over five times that of 1900. Last year North Carolina's farm crops were valued at $262,880,000, which is twice the value of her farm crops 10 years ago and over three and one-half times the value of the farm crops of the State 20 years ago. With national bank resources of over $316,000,000, North Carolina's national bank resources nearly equal those of the entire South in 1880, and her total bank deposits are larger by $126,000,000 than the entire bank deposits of the South in 1880. North Carolina is now spending on public schools over $12,000,000, which is nearly thirteen times the expenditure on public education in the State 20 years ago, and about equal to the public-school expenditures of the entire South in 1880. The assessed value of taxable property in North Carolina in 1920 was $3,139,000,000, which is over five times the 1910 values, and over ten times the assessed value of taxable property of the State 20 years ago."

Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, the foregoing statement of the development and progress of our State under Democratic rule since 1900 is a record of which every North Carolinian may forever be proud. Doubtless some mistakes have been made, but it is a record singularly free from extravagance or scandal. All honor to Aycock, Glenn, Kitchin, Craig, Bickett, and Morrison. These names are linked inseparably not only with the redemption of this State but they stand forth also as leaders of progress, of development of the State under modern conditions. Each of these men, the living and the dead as well, engaged in most honorable contest of service to the State. I say now what I believe to be the solemn truth, that no selfish thought or motive ever found lodgment in the minds of any one of these great leaders of progress.

And it is only fair to pay tribute to the general assemblies which made it possible to put into practical operation the respective programs of this roll of Democratic governors. Without the full cooperation of Democratic legislatures these men, of course, could have done nothing. And yet the men and women of this State will be asked seriously to elect a Republican general assembly in November, and two years hence they will be asked to elect a Republican governor. I say reverently, as I love my State, Almighty God forbid!

Our party in its platform which this convention will adopt can make no better pledge than that of giving to the people of the State a continuance of the Democratic administration of the past. We point with sincere and reverent pride to the great Vance. We point to the records of all our governors and the legislatures which held up their hands, and we say to the men and women voters of the State: "This is our record. We can not do better than promise you a continuance of that record of honest service, keeping step with the development of modern civilization." Will the Republican Party dare make such a promise? Will that party call by name a single Republican governor and promise if elected to give the State just such an administration? Of course not. Their leaders are too wise to make such a promise, for such a promise would invite certain defeat. It is a lamentable truth that the reputation and good name of the State suffered most during Republican or fusion rule. I am not here to speak of 1868, or to talk about negro rule, and yet there is no way to judge the future except by examining the past, and any man or woman in North Carolina who is finding fault with Democratic rule should read the history of Republican or fusion rule and then decide whether any voter who loves the State can afford to risk the experiment of another Republican or fusion general assembly.

Taxes are high, and yet taxes are lower in this State than in any State in the Union, with possibly one or two exceptions. If the taxes of any particular county are deemed to be too high, the voters of that county have the remedy in their own hands. Are assessed valuations too high? If so, the voters of the respective counties have the remedy in their own hands. The policy of the Morrison administration has been, and is now, to leave the determination of these matters to the respective counties.

Is there anyone outside an insane asylum who for one second believes that taxes would be lowered by a Republican general assembly. When the Republicans were in power they certainly did not reduce taxes. And there was scandal everywhere. There was scandal in the capitol. There was scandal in our State institutions. The State was then poor, but the Republican Party stole from the people of the State even in their poverty.

Our people have decided to make North Carolina a better place in which to live. The Morrison administration has announced and is now carrying into practical operation a great program of road building and rural development. A bond issue was, of course, necessary. Great sums will be expended for the benefit of all the people. Would anyone who loves the State be willing to trust the Republican Party to complete any part of this great program? Does not the program itself constitute the best of all reasons for keeping the Republican Party out of power? Does anyone believe the Republican Party in North Carolina has moral courage to resist the temptation which this great program would offer? The men and women who pay the highest taxes ought to be and, I believe, are the very persons who would utterly refuse to try another experiment of Republican rule, and this is not a charge of dishonesty. I make no such charge, but I do say the principles and rules of ordinary good business administration would utterly debar the Republican Party from control over any part of the State's progressive program.

That there are thousands of high-minded men and women in the Republican Party in this State I cheerfully admit, but I make this charge in the light of history. If anything has been overwhelmingly proven, it is that in North Carolina the Republican Party is incompetent to give to the people the kind of administration they have a right to expect and to which they have become accustomed under Democratic rule. Now, I think that is a fair and somewhat moderate statement. It is not personal nor is it abusive. It is, however, a statement of fact. It is the solemn truth, taking into account the history of the Republican Party when it had opportunity to make history. So the issue this year is perfectly clear. The Democratic Party proudly points to the past. The Republican Party will be silent. It has a past to which no Republican speaker ever alludes.

The great development of which I have spoken is by the mandate of the people of the State in charge of Gov. Cameron Morrison. It should be the pleasure, as I believe it is the duty, of every patriotic North Carolinian to hold up the hands of our governor. Every man and woman who loves the State will aid Governor Morrison in carrying forward this program to full measure of success. His duty is plain. That he is doing his full duty as God gives him light to see, that his heart and soul are in the great task, even his political enemies must admit. Even in the face of criticism forward he will go. Even as it was the dream of Aycock that the morning ring of the school bell should link in one unbroken chain the music of the mountain cataract and the song of the sea, so also it is now the dream of Governor Morrison to make North Carolina as far as practicable independent of any unjust railroad rate or practice by covering the State with a network of hard-surface rural highways. Aycock did not escape criticism, but North Carolina reveres his memory and calls it blessed. The day will come when the people of this State will thank Morrison for his courage in carrying on this splendid work to completion.

Ladies and gentlemen, let us be very frank. Taxes must be levied and collected if people are to enjoy the facilities of progress and civilization. People demand warm, comfortable school buildings. I well remember the schoolroom in which I was taught as a youth. It was provided with an open fireplace at least 6 feet in width. Each school day it was the duty of two boys to keep the fire burning, and I am sure on cold days it required a cord of wood to keep the fire going. We did not even have a stove, and the backs of the hard seats instead of sloping backward to fit the body projected forward so that the boys and girls were forced to sit perfectly straight. When one leaned back he felt the edge of the top of the desk immediately behind cut in under the shoulder blades. The building was at least a century old and the wind whistled through the cracks and loose windowpanes on a cold winter day. To-day in place of that old academy we have a modern steam-heated brick building. Do you imagine there is a single person in our community who would be willing to give up our new building? Of course not. It required thousands of dollars to build and equip it with comfortable desks for the pupils and the money necessary was contributed by the people in the form of taxes. We all remember the muddy roads of our boyhood days. We have not forgotten how the mules and horses strained and how the wagons creaked as a small load was hauled to market. Bad roads are the most expensive institutions any people ever paid for. Where is the man who would be willing to exchange the modern graded, well-drained road or the hard-surface road for the mud roads of our boyhood days? In some places the public road was actually used as a drain for the fields on each side. This is no exaggeration.

Good roads and comfortable school buildings cost money, and no man has any right to complain if the taxes he pays are honestly expended, provided, of course, his property is fairly assessed as to value. Nobody can charge any dishonesty under Democratic rule in this State; nobody can charge extravagance. If taxes are larger in amount than they were in the old days, let no man blame Morrison or the Democratic administration, for the people themselves have demanded better schools and better roads. Are the people getting value? That is the test. North Carolina is to-day ten times richer than the North Carolina of 1900. The State was only a millionaire 22 years ago. To-day she is a billionaire three times over. Those who complain about taxes should not forget that the State is no longer a millionaire, but has become so rich under Democratic rule she is now a billionaire. There should be no complaint if there is no extravagance, and if the citizen has been fairly treated in the assessed value of his property; and if, in his judgment, he has not been fairly treated let him take his case before the board of commissioners of his own county. They have power to correct any injustice. If there is within the borders of this State any man or woman who is opposed to these modern comfortable school buildings, to these modern, well-drained, graded roads, who is opposed to the welfare work the State is doing, who just will not be satisfied because we go forward instead of standing in our tracks, I suppose we will have to let him join the Republican Party, if indeed they will take him, which is exceedingly doubtful.

The State of North Carolina does not now levy a single cent of tax on the property of the State for any State purposes whatsoever. The State is collecting its entire revenues from taxes on inheritance, incomes, franchises, insurance policies, and licenses. From its funds collected from these sources it pays the entire cost of the State educational work, including State colleges and the special work conducted by the superintendent of public instruction, and appropriates the entire equalizing funds of something over $700,000, which is given to the weaker counties in the State to equalize their schools. Every other department of the State government, including all of the special work done throughout the State, is also paid from State funds which are collected from the special sources of State taxes and not from any tax on the property of the people in the State.

This fact can not be emphasized too much: That at this time the State of North Carolina does not levy or collect one single dollar of tax upon the property for the support of the State government and the great institutions maintained by the State government.

It may be that what I am saying now is in the nature of a repetition of what I have already said, but the practice of the State in not taxing property is so unusual and so remarkable that I think I may be pardoned for such repetition.

There are people in North Carolina who it seems can not realize that the State is not now imposing any ad valorem tax whatever. I venture this assertion, there is not a State in the Union wherein a great program of road building and road improvement is being developed without taking one single cent of tax on property, either real or personal, and I venture the further assertion that there is no State wherein the person without means is so completely exempt from any tax whatever except possibly the $2 poll tax. The Democratic Party is a party of economy. While by law it takes no tax whatever, except the $2 poll tax, from any man or woman unless that man or woman possesses property of the value of $300 it does not exact taxes from those able to pay except for necessary improvements which the people themselves have demanded.

MR. HARDING'S ADMINISTRATION.

One who loves his country must approach the discussion of present national conditions with emotions of deepest chagrin. From the hour of their restoration to control of Congress by the elections of 1918 until now the Republican majority have floundered in confusion and dawdled with pitiful incapacity. It is profoundly regrettable, but, after all, it is not strange when viewed in the light of recent history and the psychology of recent years is considered.

The Republican Party had its inception in 1856, and since that time five Democrats have been elected to the Presidency of the United States. One of them, Andrew Johnson, the Republicans themselves elected under the peculiar conditions of the Civil War, and him they impeached and sought to destroy. From another, Samuel J. Tilden, they stole the election; and three others—Buchanan, Cleveland, and Wilson—they slandered with every vile resource at their command.

Apparently the one whom they have hated most is the one still living. Him they hate and him they have hated from the beginning of his career because of that transcendent ability and impeccable character which have placed him in the foremost ranks of the world's immortals.

Because of envy they hated him in the days of his activity, and even now as he sits in dignified retirement their bitterness goes out toward him and their venom they still continue to spread upon him. It could not be expected that a party which sees red and then goes blind with madness at the very mention of a name would or could approach the solution of grave problems in a spirit of intelligence or of sincere patriotism.

I believe it to be literally true that even to-day certain Republican politicians would rather do some act that would in some way reflect upon the career and fame of Woodrow Wilson than to pass the most beneficent legislation which the human mind can frame.

And that is why the present administration, with more than one-fourth of its time gone, has fallen so far short of public hope and popular expectation. It is only when they have followed the lines laid down by the Wilson administration that they have been able to approximate success in any endeavor. They have tacitly abandoned any hope of successfully appealing to the electorate at this year's election by reason of any achievement of a legislative character along domestic lines and are casting their hopes upon the results of the Limitation of Armament Conference and the treaties there accepted.

Bear in mind, my friends, that for three full years the Republican Party has held absolute control of the legislative branches of the Government. The elections of 1918 gave them a majority of about 40 in the House of Representatives, and by the most shameful debauchery known to the history of America they obtained the nomination and election of a Senator from the State of Michigan which enabled them to organize the Senate, take full control of all the committees, defeat the treaty of Versailles, and check for a time the greatest movement for world peace ever developed and formulated by the faith and genius of man.

I wish you to keep certain history clearly in mind. It is essential as a proper background for a study of present conditions.

After the election of 1918 had returned a Republican majority in the two Houses of Congress, there remained the short session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, which began in December, 1918, and expired by limitation of law on March 4, 1919. It was determined by the Republican leadership that that session should not be permitted to function. It was easy for them to prevent it by parliamentary devices in the Senate. Back of this determination the underlying purpose was to thwart President Wilson in whatever he should do in peace negotiations. His administration had, after a four-year period of domestic achievements unparalled in history, waged the greatest, most successful war in the annals of mankind. The President himself stood then upon a pinnacle, the height of which no man had ever before touched. He was literally the hope of the world.

Conscienceless politicians, marplots, deliberately determined that he should be broken at the wheel; that he should not emerge from the Paris conference successful in peace as he had been in war.

For the accomplishment of this purpose they desired to create a condition that would force the calling together of the Republican Congress before the peace negotiations should be concluded. Accordingly, certain Republican Senators were put forward to conduct a filibuster against the appropriation bills. It was easy to talk these bills to death, and so it was done.

This made necessary the calling of a special session of the new Congress while the President was yet abroad, struggling midst the jealousies and passions and selfish purposes of Europe to bring forth a chart for the everlasting peace of the world.

He met the situation then created with that quiet dignity and decent courtesy which ever marked his course.

A session was called in May, 1919, and to his implacable foes the President addressed a message of such dignity and power as to place it among the greatest of the country's state papers.

He avoided recommendations upon any subject that might be legitimately construed as having a partisan aspect, and outlined a comprehensive program for meeting the conditions which all experience had taught that the reactions following war would inevitably bring. He stated that the railroads must be restored to their owners, and invited prompt passage of legislation essential.

They dallied with it until he had to extend the time originally fixed. It was almost a year before they placed before him the present law, which is in so many respects unsatisfactory, but which had to be taken, or Government operation, with all its burdens, continued.

And then they proceeded to try to make the country believe the Executive was responsible for all the ills of governmental control. He proposed that there should be an immediate readjustment of the internal-revenue taxes which had been passed as a war measure to meet war needs, pointing out the evil effect to be anticipated by the business world until this was done.

The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, excluding all the Democratic members, had a few secret meetings and determined that nothing should be done. This, too, they did deliberately and designedly. They scarcely tried to conceal the fact that their motive was to let the burdens continue to the end that blame might face the Executive.

They were looking to the elections of 1920. They hoped to thrive upon popular dissatisfaction and to win upon public unrest. They were not disappointed.

Throughout that entire Congress they persistently and consistently did nothing, or worse than nothing. They said, in substance, "We will not work in harmony with Mr. Wilson even upon a nonpartisan matter. Wait until we have the executive branch. Give us complete power, and we shall then do the great things of government."

As I have said, their appeal was heeded. In 1920 they elected the President. They obtained a majority of 169 in the House and 22 in the Senate. All was given unto them. But with what result?

I repeat. They dare not risk their cause at the polls upon their domestic legislation. They failed to provide against the reactions that follow all wars. They held the United States aloof from the world, with the result that our foreign markets were destroyed, and as against the prosperity of Democratic days we witnessed, with the beginning of Harding's term, a continuation of that depression already begun with the defeat of the treaty.

We saw business failures in every community. We saw labor thrown out of employment, and we saw once again the steam of the charity soup kitchen take the place of the smoke of the factory. Farm products sold even below cost of production. For their sins men and women everywhere in the world have paid in infinite suffering and indescribable sorrow. We fell from our high estate as a leader of all nations to a point where, literally, we had no real friends among them; and it was perhaps not an extravagant remark by the gentleman who said "but for the fact that so many nations owed us money it was doubtful if our flag would be saluted upon the high seas of the world."

They have demoralized the civil-service system in their hunger for jobs; and the pitiful fact is that they have done it with hypocrisy. When they have desired jobs, instead of frankly saying so and taking them as spoils, they have, by cunning orders, cast aspersions upon faithful employees discharged.

Their disregard of the civil service law in respect to the appointment of postmasters is so open, notorious, and flagrant that we might as well have no civil service law at all. There are many instances in North Carolina where examinations have been held, three eligibles certified, only to be ignored by the Postmaster General and the President.

In the fourth congressional district, in the city of Henderson, an examination was held and three eligibles were certified, all Democrats and men of character and standing. Yet up to this good hour that examination has been ignored and no appointment made.

Even ex-service men, who stood at the top of the list of eligibles certified, have been ignored and a partisan henchman appointed who would carry out the will of the local organization.

It would be infinitely better, more manly, if the administration would frankly announce a purpose to ignore entirely the civil service law. There are in Washington to-day more than a score of men and women, devoted public servants, thrown out of employment, without even the semblance of an excuse. We are told it was done to promote efficiency of the service.

And that is all we have been told. No charge of any kind has been preferred against any one of the Government workers recently dismissed from the service in the city of Washington. Not even one day's notice was given them. Some of them have families, and almost all were dependent upon their salaries for support. To dismiss them in this manner was punishment undeserved and cruel. And the order of the President raises the question whether he himself is obliged to respect and obey the law.

It is very true that the President has always possessed the power of removal, but in 1897 President McKinley established a rule that reasons should be given when a removal was made, with opportunity for the person whose removal was sought to make reply.

On August 24, 1912, Congress embodied this rule substantially in an act which provides—section 6—that "no person in the classified civil service of the United States shall be removed therefrom except for such cause as will promote the efficiency of said service and for reasons given in writing, and the person whose removal is sought shall have notice of the same and of any charges preferred against him, and be furnished with a copy thereof, and also be allowed a reasonable time for personally answering the same in writing and affidavits in support thereof; but no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the officer making the removal."

It would seem that this administration has deliberately resolved to take care of the faithful, even though it becomes necessary to violate the letter and spirit of the law in order to make places for them.

I do not know whether the American people will tolerate such a crude partisan course or not. At least, it is only fair that they should know the facts.

The policy of the Democratic Party with respect to the ex-service man was and is now not only a policy of justice but of generous justice. We recognize the debt we owe to these men, and the party will not cease its struggle to secure justice and fair treatment for them in generous measure.

NORTH CAROLINA IN CONGRESS UNDER WILSON.

Under the administration of Mr. Wilson the State was represented in so many of the great committees of the House and Senate as to cause considerable comment. In Senate Mr. SIMMONS was chairman of the Finance Committee, while Senator OVERMAN was chairman of the Committee on Rules.

During the Sixty-fifth Congress the State had the chairmanship in the Senate of the Finance Committee, while in the House we had Mr. KITCHIN as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. There may be a precedent for this, but if so it has never been called to my attention. Not only did our State have these great places, but it was a matter of frequent comment that no chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and no chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee ever knew more about the details, provisions, and hundreds of items of taxation in the bills under their charge than did SIMMONS and KITCHIN. It is only fair to say that our two Senators are now and have been for years national figures, wielding powerful influence for righteous legislation. We had, as everyone knows, Hon. Josephus Daniels as Secretary of the Navy. More than 80 committees or subcommittees of the House and Senate have at one time or another conducted investigations of expenditures under the Wilson administration. The Navy Department under Secretary Daniels was intrusted with the expenditure not only of millions but billions of money which Congress deemed necessary to carry on the war to successful conclusion. From beginning to end not one whisper of scandal has ever touched Josephus Daniels. In our grim determination to win the war as quickly as possible, and thereby save as many American lives as possible, doubtless money was wasted, but during all the investigations of the billions expended be it said to the everlasting honor of the Wilson administration not only was there no outstanding scandal proven but no dishonesty was proven against any high official, and no scandal was developed similar to the scandals proven in the Civil War and the Spanish-American War, which even partisan Republican organs, filled with hate and prejudice, would dare take the risk of printing.

Concerning those who represent the State in the House of Representatives, it may not become me to speak, and yet I can not refrain from saying there is no jealousy amongst us; but, on the contrary, a most generous spirit of cooperation in respect to all measures which, in our judgment, promote the interest of the American people. All of us cherish the hope that Leader KITCHIN will be restored to health and vigor, for while he fights hard he never strikes below the belt, and by his splendid courage he has justly won the affection and respect of his colleagues of both parties in the House.

It should not be forgotten that there was not a break in the prosperity of the Nation until after the final defeat of the Versailles treaty. Moreover, it should not be forgotten that Mr. Wilson had only been in office 17 months when war broke upon the world. And yet when America declared war the great Federal reserve law had been enacted, farm loan banks had been created, and the fairest tariff law in the Nation's history had been enacted. But for the Federal reserve law it is exceedingly doubtful if we could have successfully financed the war. After the war ended and the country was threatened by panic, caused, as many believed, by the policy of the Republican Party, that law saved many individuals and corporations as well from financial ruin. The farm loan system was a companion law. The farmers of America certainly can not forget that Wilson was the first President who clearly saw the necessity for a system in financing agriculture. Up to this date $600,742,060,000 have been loaned to the farmers of America on long time at a low rate of interest; of this huge sum $9,915,700 has been loaned in North Carolina. Many farmers have been helped, but not all who deserve help. A Democratic Congress will pass such legislation as experience may demonstrate to be necessary to make the Wilson Farm Loan Act a national success.

There was Republican opposition to both these laws. Examine the roll calls and you will see just where the opposition was. They are all Democratic laws, recommended by a Democratic President, enacted by a Democratic Congress. Some of the Republicans in power do not scruple to abuse the former President, but you have not heard any suggestion that they intend to repeal either the one or the other of these great constructive legislative acts for financing the people of America. Our Republican friends are fond of talking about a great American merchant marine. Under Democratic rule in ante bellum days the Nation possessed a flourishing merchant marine, which was killed by the policies of the Republican Party after the Civil War. Under President Wilson the greatest merchant marine in the Nation's history was built up. I heard President Harding declare in a message delivered in person, according to a custom revived by Mr. Wilson, that his administration was pledged to provide a great merchant marine; that the pledge must and would be kept. How do you suppose they are going to restore the American flag to the high seas? By a subsidy, of course. They are again building a high tariff wall; and if anything kills a merchant marine a tariff too high certainly does. It is axiomatic that a ship loaded for a foreign port must also return loaded. Otherwise the loss would be too great. So our Republican friends, when they decided to rebuild this high tariff wall knew they could not maintain a merchant marine without the assistance of a subsidy. There is a good deal of grumbling about this proposed subsidy among Republicans. Particularly is that grumbling heard from that farm bloc which President Harding considers so unnecessary in a Nation run by political parties, and which farm bloc is to him so objectionable. Nevertheless, there are enough Republicans still under the influence of the President to pass the subsidy bill. They are going to have a merchant marine if they have to tax the people to make good a loss which is certain so long as the high tariff wall remains.

So against the Federal reserve law, the farm loan act, the Underwood-Simmons tariff law, and other measures during Wilson's period of administration prior to the Great War, you have the do-nothing policy of the Republican administration up to this hour.

THE INIQUITOUS SHIP SUBSIDY BILL.

You have, however, the promise of the President that he is going to build up a great American merchant marine by means of a subsidy, which he hopes will cover the loss of the shipowner if he fails to bring a full return load, because he knows he must scale that high tariff wall in order to get rid of the return load. The American people in November will, of course, decide whether they are willing to be taxed to provide the subsidy which the President has recommended. The bill proposed by the administration authorizes the Shipping Board to sell any or all of the 1,447 steel ships belonging to the United States at their own price, for cash or otherwise, on terms, with or without advertisement, at 2 per cent interest for deferred payments on 15 years' time. A higher bid may be rejected for a lower. There is no restraint or positive rule to prevent favoritism.

A revolving fund of $125,000,000 is set aside from sales and operations of ships which may be loaned at 2 per cent on such terms as the board sees fit to aid in constructing or equipping ships, the only limitations being that two-thirds of the value of the ships built or to be equipped when completed can be loaned.

Owners of vessels can deduct from their net incomes for taxation amounts equal to the net earnings of the vessel, so that the entire income of the vessel is free from taxation, if an amount equal to the taxes remitted is set aside for investment in improvements. This practically frees all shipowners from taxes.

Any person selling a vessel built prior to 1914 is exempt from paying income tax on profits of the sale, giving advantage to speculators who buy ships at $20 a ton and sell for $50 a ton, for instance.

All Army and Navy transport service is to be abandoned, and contracts may be made with private vessel owners for all transportation in time of war or peace, either of persons of property, on 10-year contracts. No contract can be interfered with even by Congress.

Provision is made for owner of every vessel of 1,500 tons or more, subsidies, regardless of speed, of one-half cent per 100 miles for each gross ton. The subsidy increases with the speed of the vessel until the speed reaches 23 knots, when the subsidy is 2.6 cents per ton for 100 miles. Under this law a vessel like the Leviathan would earn in subsidies alone more than $1,500,000 a year.

The iniquity of this subsidy is that the Shipping Board may double or cut all the subsidy off if they want to.

No more unjust or unscientific plan for maintaining a merchant marine could be devised. Government subsidy is hateful to the American people. Let Mr. Harding try out his plan and await results. No party can successfully defy the laws of common sense, and no political party, in my humble judgment, will for any long period of time be permitted to tax the people to raise funds to be handed over, practically gratis, to certain shipowners of the Nation.

Ladies and gentlemen, looking backward over the span of years since the summer of 1914, what have we seen? First of all we saw the black cloud of war suddenly gather and the deluge break. We saw the President of this Nation doing all that mortal man could do to maintain perfect neutrality. We heard the criticism and abuse hurled against him because he would not ask Congress to declare war when the Lusitania was sunk. At last Germany crossed the dead line. She sank our ships, murdered not only our sailors but noncombatant civilians, men, women, and even helpless children. We then heard the President come before Congress, sum up the crimes committed against us, and conclude his immortal message by declaring, "God helping us, we can do nothing now but go to war."

And then we saw the Nation undergo a second birth. Even as a human soul is born again, so also this Nation was born again unto the cause of righteousness, of generous sacrifice for the good of all mankind. We heard the drums beat and we saw the boys go, and every minute we were praying, "O dear God, if they must go, do let them come back." We did verily believe we were waging war to banish that bloody scourge forever from the world. We heard the news flashed that 12,000 of our marines had turned the Germans back. We heard of the victory of Chateau-Thierry. We heard of the wedge our men had driven through the Argonne. Then the news came that the Hindenburg line had been broken, and forthwith we heard the whine Germany set up begging for peace. The armistice was agreed to. The President was at the pinnacle of world leadership. Men and women throughout America were filled with exaltation of high purpose. More than this, material prosperity undreamed of was seemingly part of our reward for generous service rendered.

And then commenced the happening of a course of events almost as amazing as the splendid march of the Nation upward. The historian of the future will pause in wonder and disgust when he records the details of a political plot concocted to defeat the treaty. Do not forget that Mr. Harding, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Root, Judge Taft, Senator Lodge, Secretary Hoover, and other members of the President's Cabinet were all supporters of the treaty. Some with reservations, others without any reservations at all, and yet the treaty was defeated. You mother, you father, who lost your boy, what balm has been given for your wounded heart? What spiritual compensation have those in power offered to ease that wounded heart? We saw our boys go and heard the promise made, which appeared to have the unanimous indorsement of the American people, that the boys must go to war in order to free the world as far as humanly possible in all the future from that bloody curse.

Who will say that President Wilson did not offer all, even his own life, to keep the faith? The solemn pledge has not been kept by the Republican Party. There are some who can not rid themselves of a feeling that the Republican Party through its hatred for Wilson and in its determination to get back into power by fair or foul means blasted for the time being the hope of mankind for world peace. And, worst of all, the ugly work was done by mobilizing every German sympathizer, every coward masquerading as a conscientious objector, every traitor, under the banner of the Republican Party.

What the future policy of this Nation is to be in world affairs God in heaven only knows. Mr. Harding has not told us. Mr. Hughes has not told us. If they have any fixed world policy, they have not taken the American people into their confidence. The suggestion of the recent conference in Washington did not come from the President or from his Secretary of State. The suggestion came from Congress long before anyone dreamed that Mr. Harding would be President. A Democratic House had written the suggestion in a bill passed by that Democratic House. God grant the work of the conference may be successful. We can only wait and hope.

One word in conclusion. There is a wounded soldier in Washington now, a private citizen, who even in his retirement wields greater influence for good than any living man. What shall I say about this wounded soldier? Perhaps I had best answer in this way. All rational persons believe in Almighty God. Faith in God was the rock of ages which held this Nation steady during the World War. But for this faith untold thousands of men and women would have been driven to madness. Faith in God was the only light in the darkened firmament of the universe. It was the only refuge for the soul, sickened by the horrors of the war. God lives. He is merciful. The soul is immortal and goes back to its God. This faith was the balm of Gilead for the broken heart.

My friends, even as I have faith in a heavenly Father, so also I believe His providence in the supreme crisis in the world's history raised up Woodrow Wilson to lead all nations to a plane of nobler action and to point out to the children of men the pathway which leads to liberty and to universal peace.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman agreed to allow an amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILBERT: Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "or" and insert "nor shall any corporation now engaged in the business of banking be permitted."

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, that is confined to corporations now engaged in business. It ought to include those now or hereafter engaged in business.

Mr. GILBERT. Those that are now engaged in business are the ones attempted to be covered by the amendment, as the bill itself takes care of future enterprises, I understand.

Mr. WALSH. It does not take care of them with reference to establishing branches. It only takes care of permitting them to enter business here in the future. You say that no corporation not now engaged in the banking business shall be permitted to enter the District of Columbia, nor shall any corporation now engaged in business be permitted to establish branches. The gentleman will see that unless we make the inhibition apply to those now engaged in business or hereafter engaged in business those that come in hereafter might be permitted to establish branches by plain implication from the reading of the law. If the gentleman will modify his amendment, there certainly can be no question about it.

Mr. GILBERT. As we are all agreed on the purposes of this bill, I will accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WALSH. After the word "now," insert the words "or hereafter."

Mr. GILBERT. Modified by inserting the words "or hereafter."

Mr. DOWELL. How is it possible for a bank hereafter to enter into business under that provision? Will not your language destroy what you are trying to get?

Mr. GILBERT. I thought it was very plain as it was, and I do not think the gentleman's suggestion will have that effect. I do not think it adds anything to it, neither do I think it does any hurt.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "nor shall any corporation now or hereafter engaged in the business of banking be permitted."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk now read the section as it will read if this amendment is agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no corporation that is not now engaged in the business of banking in the District of Columbia shall, after the passage of this act, be permitted to enter upon said business in the said District, nor shall any corporation now or hereafter engaged in the business of banking be permitted to establish branch banks in said District, until after it shall have secured the approval and consent of the Comptroller of the Currency; and each one of the officers of such corporation so offending shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WHEELER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MOORE of Virginia, for one day, on account of attending the funeral of a friend.

To Mr. MORIN, indefinitely, on account of death in family.

To Mr. SMITH of Michigan, for 10 days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 274. Joint resolution authorizing the commissioning in the Marine Corps of midshipmen under certain conditions.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 25, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 10517. A bill confirming and validating the title of certain purchasers from the State of Louisiana of certain lands formerly included in the Fort Sabine Military Reservation, in Cameron Parish, La., now abandoned; with amendments (Rept. No. 917). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. APPLEBY: A bill (H. R. 11405) providing Federal aid in the construction of sea walls, bulkheads, and jetties and other approved devices necessary and proper to protect the inland waterways, navigable rivers, and waterways of the coast of the State of New Jersey, from Sandy Hook to Cape May, from destruction by encroachments of the Atlantic Ocean; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CARTER: A bill (H. R. 11406) to authorize appropriations for the survey, construction, and maintenance of highways on or adjacent to untaxed Indian lands; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 11407) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11408) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Winnebago and the town of Rockton, in said county, in the State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River in said town of Rockton; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11409) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Ottawa and the county of La Salle, in the State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Fox River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 11410) to create Federal local option districts, to provide money to pay the expected deficit in the Treasury, to amend the revenue act of 1921, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 11411) to provide credits to secure the successful production and profitable and orderly marketing of agricultural products and live stock in the United States; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SHAW: A bill (H. R. 11412) for improvement of the Illinois River and a section of the Mississippi River, removal of locks and dams in the Illinois River, and the control and regulation of the withdrawal of water from Lake Michigan; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11413) for improvement of the Illinois River, Ill., and a section of the Mississippi River, and removal of locks and dams in Illinois River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A bill (H. R. 11414) to authorize the summoning of a grand jury for the District of Columbia when the exigencies of the public service may require it; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SINCLAIR: A bill (H. R. 11415) to amend the United States grain standards act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CHINDBLOM: A bill (H. R. 11416) to repeal section 1 of the act approved May 19, 1852, as to certain lands affected thereby; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 11417) for the improvement of the Monongahela River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 11418) to grant to the State of Idaho the use of certain islands in the Snake River for a rifle range for the Idaho National Guard; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DUNBAR: A bill (H. R. 11419) granting a pension to Mary J. Morgan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 11420) granting an increase of pension to Alice Kingrey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KINCHELOE: A bill (H. R. 11421) granting an increase of pension to Johanna Staton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEARNS: A bill (H. R. 11422) granting a pension to Agnes E. Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11423) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Lippert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOORE of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11424) granting an increase of pension to Charles N. Kelley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROACH: A bill (H. R. 11425) granting a pension to Susan A. Sims; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 11426) granting a pension to Mary D. Griffith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LARSON of Minnesota: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 311) to pay the actual and necessary expenses and compensation of James I. Coffey; Wah-be-zhay-zheence, chief of the Leech Lake Chippewa Indians in Minnesota; Wah-boose, chief of the White Oak Point Chippewa Indians in Minnesota; and Benjamin Caswell, delegates of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, in coming to Washington in the interest of said Chippewa Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5243. By the SPEAKER (by request): Resolutions adopted by the Juneau Commercial Association, relating to the regulation of the salmon fisheries of Alaska; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

5244. Also (by request), resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Binghamton, N. Y., indorsing Senate joint resolution 31, proposing a constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to enact uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5245. By Mr. ANSORGE: Petition of Metropolitan Chapter, No. 140, Royal Arch Masons, of New York City, urging the passage of the Towner-Sterling educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

5246. By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of residents of Gustine and Newman, Calif., protesting against House bills 9753 and 4388 or Senate bill 1948, known as the Sunday laws; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5247. Also, petition of residents of Corcoran, Calif., protesting against House bills 9753 and 4388 or Senate bill 1948, known as the Sunday laws; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5248. Also, petition of the council of the city of Modesto, Calif., indorsing House bill 10212; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5249. By Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin: Petition of citizens of the eighth congressional district of Wisconsin, protesting against the passage of House bill 9753 or any compulsory Sunday observance bill, such as House bill 4388 or Senate bill 1948; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5250. By Mr. CRAMTON: Resolution of the Michigan State Farm Bureau, of Lansing, Mich., urging that there be no reduction in Federal funds for agricultural extension work; also, letter from the board of directors, Tuscola County Farm Bureau, Caro, Mich., urging the same thing; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5251. By Mr. FROTHINGHAM: Resolution adopted by the council of the Appalachian Mountain Club, opposing the transfer of the administration of the national forests, either in whole or in part, from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5252. By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the Illinois Agricultural Association, protesting against the importation of blackstrap molasses free of duty; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5253. Also, resolutions of the general committee on Army and Navy chaplains of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, protesting against any drastic reduction in the number of chaplains for the Army and Navy; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5254. Also, petition of the American Farm Bureau Federation conference for the prevention of grain rust, favoring an appropriation of not less than $500,000 for the eradication of the common barberry bush; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5255. Also, petition of The Wilson Shoe Co., of La Salle, Ill., opposing any tariff duty on hides and shoes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5256. By Mr. KAHN: Petition of citizens of Oakland, Calif., against Sunday legislation; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5257. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Samuel Black, Z. V. Conway, Francis Gough, Miss Jennie N. Lewis, Richard W. Matthews, Robert H. Montgomery, all of New York City, N. Y.; Robert F. Dean, of Mount Vernon, N. Y.; and W. C. Ingalls, of Kingston, N. Y., relative to the emergency tariff act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5258. Also, petition of E. F. Carey, John J. Cowley, John Jacobs, and Antoinette E. Searle, all of Brooklyn, N. Y., relative to emergency tariff act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5259. By Mr. LAMPERT: Certified copy of resolution adopted by the council of the city of Oskosh, Wis., giving the voters of Oshkosh, Wis., an opportunity to express their opinion on the question of the amendment of the Volstead Act permitting the manufacture and sale of light wine and beer, together with certified copy of the result of the vote on said question submitted, which is as follows: For such manufacture and sale, 5,310; against, 2,669; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5260. By Mr. MORIN: Petition of the Pittsburgh Chapter of the Pennsylvania Institute of Certified Public Accountants, favoring bill introduced by Representative ZIHLMAN creating a board of accountancy in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5261. By Mr. ROSENBLOOM: Petition of the Presbytery of Wheeling, W. Va., indorsing House bill 9753 to secure Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5262. Also, petition of the Presbytery of Wheeling, W. Va., indorsing House Joint Resolution 131, proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy and polygamous cohabitation in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5263. Also, petition of the Presbytery of Wheeling, W. Va., indorsing Senate Joint Resolution 31, proposing a constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to enact uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5264. By Mr. ROSSDALE: Resolution adopted by the Women's Republican Club of New York City (twenty-third assembly district), to restore the tube system of transportation of mails in New York City; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5265. Also, resolution adopted by the Woman's Republican Association, State of New York, to reestablish the postal tube service in New York City; to the Committee on Appropriations.

5266. By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Protest of M. C. Haase and 144 citizens of Eaton Rapids, Mich., protesting against the passage of House bill 9753 or any other Sunday bill, such, for example, as House bill 4388 or Senate bill 1948, providing for the regulation of Sunday observance by civil force under penalty for District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5267. Also, petition of the Larrowe Milling Co., in favor of the enactment of the Fordney tariff bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5268. By Mr. SNYDER: Memorial of the officers and standing committee of the Central New York Chapter, Society of Military and Naval Officers of the World War, favoring the adoption of the military policy developed by the War Department as a practical memorial to those who gave their lives to their country; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5269. By Mr. TAGUE: Resolutions adopted by the Appalachian Mountain Club, 1878, protesting against the transfer from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior of the administration of national forests; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5270. By Mr. TINKHAM: Resolution adopted by the council of the Appalachian Mountain Club, relative to the proposed transfer of the administration of the national forests; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 25, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McKinley	Ransdell
Ball	Hale	McLean	Rawson
Borah	Harreld	McNary	Sheppard
Brandegee	Harris	Moses	Smoot
Broussard	Harrison	Myers	Spencer
Bursum	Heflin	Nelson	Stanley
Capper	Johnson	Newberry	Sterling
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Sutherland
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Swanson
Culberson	Kellogg	Norris	Townsend
Cummins	Kendrick	Oddie	Wadsworth
Curtis	Keyes	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	King	Page	Watson, Ga.
du Pont	Ladd	Pepper	Watson, Ind.
Edge	La Follette	Phipps	Weller
Ernst	Lodge	Pittman	Williams
Fletcher	McCumber	Poindexter	Willis
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Pomerene

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is necessarily absent. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed Senate bills of the following titles, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 2616. An act to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey certain land; and

S. 3170. An act regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 1009. An act for the relief of H. C. Mullins, his wife and minor children;

H. R. 3346. An act for the relief of the heirs of Oscar Chrysler;

H. R. 5588. An act to repeal section 5 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, in the State of California, and for other purposes," approved August 9, 1916;

H. R. 5820. An act to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps;

H. R. 6686. An act for the relief of George Ciszek and Anna Ciszek;

H. R. 7415. An act to correct and amend the service and military record of Herbert Langley, United States Marine Corps;

H. R. 8690. An act to add a certain tract of land on the island of Hawaii to the Hawaii National Park;

H. R. 9671. An act to amend section 87 of the Judicial Code;

H. R. 10740. An act authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices; and

H. J. Res. 57. Joint resolution making the provisions of section 2296 of the United States Revised Statutes applicable to all entries made under the homestead laws and laws supplemental and amendatory thereof.

PETITION.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution of Stevens County District Progressive Grange, No. 5, of Colville, Wash., favoring the passage of Senate bill 2604, the Ladd honest money bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3356) to commission Capt. William Rees Rush as a rear admiral on the retired list of the Navy, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 634) thereon.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 531) for the relief of Ivy L. Merrill, reported it without amendment and s bmitted a report (No. 635) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 3506) to regulate foreign commerce in the importation into the United States of the adult honeybee (Apis mellifica); to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3507) to allow officers and employees of the United States to be commissioned in the Officers' Reserve Corps and to receive pay and allowances when on active duty; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 3508) providing for defendant's attorney fee in certain cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 3509) regulating the production of wares which enter into interstate commerce; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. McKINLEY:

A bill (S. 3510) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Ottawa and the board of supervisors of the county of La Salle, in the State of Illinois, to construct a bridge across the Fox River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3511) to provide for the protection and development of the lower Colorado River basin; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3512) to regulate the rate of interest that may be paid by national banks in certain cases; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENT.

Mr. LADD submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I request the attention of the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I wish to call attention to a newspaper article in the Washington Post of this morning, the headlines of which read as follows:

Bonus discussed at secret session. Senators take up various plans with MacNider, of Legion, and other leaders of veterans. Approve bank loan idea. Agreement on final features may be reached at another meeting to-day. (MacNider's statement.)

The news article follows.

Mr. President, I wish to protest vigorously against any committee of the Senate holding secret sessions to hear evidence in regard to legislation in which the whole country is interested, and in which the minority is as keenly interested as the majority. I can understand and appreciate the desire upon the part of the majority of the committee, charged with the responsibility of drafting bills that represented the majority views, to hold secret sessions and to deliberate in secret about the form and character of the bill to be reported, but I can not understand why it is necessary for any committee of this body to hold secret sessions for the purpose of hearing testimony from witnesses upon contemplated legislation. I am informed that yesterday the majority members of the Finance Committee held a meeting at which there were present several witnesses representing the American Legion and possibly others; that testimony was heard; that the press was excluded; that the minority was excluded; and that again this morning witnesses appeared and testimony was taken in the same way before the majority members only.

I want to protest, I repeat, against the practice of hearing evidence from witnesses summoned or invited before a committee without the full committee being present. The minority has some rights, and one of the rights which the minority ought to have is to know all the facts, to know all the evidence that is disclosed upon which legislation is framed and drafted. I think, especially when a bill of this character, in which there is so much public interest, is being heard that the hearing of evidence by the majority members is not the proper course to pursue in a legislative body of this character. I would like to have the chairman of the committee make some explanation for such a policy, and I wish that the minority might be informed whether or not we are to be excluded from hearing all the evidence presented for or against proposed legislation on the various issues which are being presented from time to time for legislation.

I repeat there may be some excuse or justification for secret sessions to draft the provisions of a bill, but when it comes to evidence, we of the minority can not present our views in the Senate properly, we can not argue the technical features of the legislation, unless we have heard all the evidence. We are being put in the position where the minority may hear only a part of the evidence, hear only a part of the arguments, and hear only a portion of the case that is presented upon which the demand for legislation is based. I think it is time for a protest to be registered by the minority against practices of this kind. I would like the chairman of the committee to let us know how long this is going to continue. How long must the minority remain dumb? Are we to tell the people of the country that our functions and duties consist only of attendance here upon the floor and expressing our opinions here or are we going to be permitted to maintain our position as members of the various committees, share all the responsibilities of committee membership, and hear all of the evidence that is presented?

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] yesterday called attention to the fact that secret sessions have been held and witnesses were present and heard in the drafting and framing of the tariff bill. I think it will appear before the discussion is over that witnesses were actually heard, and the selfish or disinterested interests of those witnesses, the propositions which they present to a part of the committee, ought to be a matter of public record and ought to be known to the whole committee and the general public. Legislation formed in secret session upon testimony from which either side of the Chamber is excluded can not but have a suspicion attached to it and will certainly fail to merit the full confidence, approval, and support of the American people.

Mr. President, as a member of the minority, I wish to ask how long we are to be debarred from our right to participate in the deliberations of Senate committees in so far as the hearing of testimony is concerned? I think, especially when we are considering a measure of this kind, a measure in which the people of the country are, perhaps, more interested than even in the tariff bill, we should be informed to what extent and for how long the minority are to be excluded from the deliberations of the committees of this legislative body.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] erected a man of straw and then proceeded to knock him to pieces. After he had succeeded in doing that, he asked me if there was any such man. I think he would have saved himself some trouble if he had merely asked the question in the first instance whether or not there had been a meeting of the majority members of the committee and whether or not witnesses had been subpœnaed in order to take testimony and whether or not the testimony had been taken. Had he done so, I should have told him that no witnesses had been subpœnaed and that no testimony had been taken by any number of Senators.

The Senator, of course, in the matter of the consideration of tariff bills knows what has heretofore been the uniform custom. There has been no testimony taken in reference to the pending tariff bill since we concluded the taking of testimony by the entire committee. Senators, however, have been allowed to come before the members of the committee who were preparing the bill. Senators from both sides of the Chamber have come to consult us in reference to the various schedules of the bill. They were always very welcome to come. The Republican majority of the committee, however, on the question of the policy of protection, in reference to which there is a marked difference between the two parties, have always framed protective tariff bills. The Democrats when they have been in the majority have always framed their tariff for revenue bills after the hearings have been closed. In the framing of the pending bill the Republicans have followed the same rule. If it is desired to expedite business I think the present method is really the best, although very often I should have liked to have been present when the Underwood-Simmons bill was being framed, but I was denied that privilege. On the whole, I think I would have gained nothing, probably, had I been permitted to be present.

In reference to the soldiers' compensation bill, however, I have not considered the condition to be similar. The Senator from Massachusetts understands the differences that exist between the President and some of the members on this side of the Chamber who are in favor of the soldiers' compensation bill; differences growing out of the means by which revenue is to be secured to meet the obligations of that legislation. As chairman of the Committee on Finance, I am ready to consult with those representing the soldiers at any and all times in order to explain to them, as nearly as I can, the differences that arise and to obtain their views. I also may wish to talk the matter over sometimes with two or three other Senators, desiring to have their views as well. However, when we reach the consideration of the bill the Committee on Finance will be called together and we shall discuss all of the matters which are therein involved.

The Senator from Massachusetts undoubtedly consults with persons representing the soldiers of the World War just as I do. Both of us try to get all the information we can before the committee finally meet together and enter upon a consideration of the question.

I do not think it will be necessary to take any additional testimony so far as the cause of the soldiers is concerned. Whether or not it will be necessary to draft a bill which will provide a method of raising revenue is a question which we shall have to consider hereafter; but, if it shall be found necessary to do that, such a measure will have to be framed by the House of Representatives, the Constitution requiring such measures to originate there.

So the Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken if he thinks for a single moment that there has been an attempt to hold a secret session of the committee or of any members of the committee in merely talking the matter over with any of the soldiers. Sometimes I have talked with the soldiers alone; sometimes I have had the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who sits to my left, and one or two other Senators to join with me in the discussion of some feature with those who represented the soldiers' view. Such discussions as we have had were preliminary to hearings, if any hearings shall be had, and also for the purpose of securing the viewpoint of those who are interested in the proposed legislation and the obstacles which we must meet and overcome. There has been no stenographer present and no word has been taken down.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from North Dakota has suggested that I have erected a man of straw. I desire to ask, Is it not a fact that certain members of the majority of the Committee on Finance met in the Finance Committee room on yesterday?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes; I think four of us were there present.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is it a fact that the head of the American Legion, Mr. MacNider, and a delegation of representatives of the legislative committee of the American Legion met with the Senator from North Dakota and other Senators of the majority party in the committee room?

Mr. McCUMBER. A number of gentlemen met with us.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is it not also a fact that there was a discussion, that arguments were made pro and con between members of the committee and the gentlemen representing the American Legion?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; that part of the Senator's statement is a little far-fetched.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Did those gentlemen make no statements?

Mr. McCUMBER. We talked the matter over generally between us, just as gentlemen sitting at a table will talk matters over.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Was the press excluded?

Mr. McCUMBER. There was no testimony taken. Nobody made general statements or anything of that character, nor was anyone asked to do so.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The facts are that some of the members of the committee did meet; that there were present persons who were interested in the legislation; that there was some conversation—they were not there for nothing—and there was some discussion of the bonus bill. I protest against such action on this bill particularly, because it ought not to be a party question; it ought not to be a question that should be made a party issue before the American people.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to have the facts absolutely disclosed, and I should like to know whether or not I have been misinformed by this newspaper article, which is to the effect that there were present in the committee room with the members of the majority party various representatives of the American Legion, who, alone and in private, had a discussion about this bill.

Of course, I am not criticizing those present as witnesses. I am objecting to the exclusion of the minority from hearings of the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Some of the majority members of the committee were present.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, two or three days ago there were present in my office several representatives of the American Legion and three or four Senators, and we discussed this question in a general way. Does the Senator from Massachusetts think I ought to have sent out for him to come to my office?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. What difference does it make whether such a meeting is held in my office or held in the office of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think when such a meeting is held in the committee room and the chairman is present and a number of witnesses who are interested in the legislation appear before any number of members of that committee the whole committee ought to be present. That is my opinion; and I protest, not merely because the Republicans have violated that practice, but I should protest just the same had it been done by Democrats. It seems to me that the practice of having witnesses heard in secret upon matters of legislation will inevitably bring about a distrust of representative government. That is my protest. If the Democrats had done it they would have been just as blamable as are the Republicans. Yesterday Republican members of the Committee on Finance had witnesses present and spent some hours in discussing proposed bonus legislation. I protest, and say that those witnesses ought to have been heard before the whole committee.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I fail to catch the viewpoint of the Senator from Massachusetts. On yesterday morning four of us came together——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would not make this a political matter. My protest is against any witnesses interested in legislation being heard by any group or any political element of the Senate. I think that the whole committee should have been present. Because that was not the case, I voice this objection.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Four Senators went into the committee room, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] having called us up, and we sat there and talked over the question of soldiers' adjusted compensation legislation. There was no hearing; there was no committee meeting, but merely a coming together of Senators. I have had similar gatherings in my office. Does the Senator think that if I call a number of Senators together in my office to talk about a tariff schedule and I have there present some people who may be interested in a given schedule to talk to me about it that I must send for him and ask him to be present? Certainly he does not. What is the difference, whether in the committee room or in my own private office, if four or five of us come together to discuss a tariff schedule or some other question and persons interested in that schedule or in the other question are present? Does the Senator think we are bound to send out and ask for the Democratic minority to be present?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think it is a very bad and a very dangerous precedent for the majority of this body to meet in their own committee room and hear witnesses interested in any legislation with no one present representing the Democratic minority. On the Senator's own admission there were four members of the majority, including the chairman of the committee, present at the meeting referred to. I say it is a bad precedent and that such a practice breeds distrust upon the part of our people for our institutions. The only way to safeguard the confidence which the public ought to have in a representative body is to have all discussions in the open, especially when the question of retaining confidence and respect for our laws is involved.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I am forced to disagree with the Senator from Massachusetts, as much as I esteem him and as highly as I regard his opinion, as a rule. The majority formulate legislation; they get together and agree on the general provisions, and then they call in the minority members, in accordance with the universal custom, for the purpose of discussing the whole measure. That is precisely what we were undertaking to do, except in a less formal way, with regard to the bonus measure. We simply came together for the purpose of talking it over, and yesterday there were four members of the majority present. I do not know whether other members of the majority were invited to be present or not; I presume they were, but had other business on hand. I do not agree that it is essential that the minority should be brought in every time we want to get together to talk over a schedule of the tariff bill or the provisions of the bonus bill. It is the business of the majority, in the first instance, to formulate the legislation, but, of course, hearings must be had, and the Senator will remember that we had all of the hearings on the tariff bill in the open, for he himself attended most of the committee sessions and was a very valuable member at all of those hearings. The same statement applies, of course, to the preliminary consideration of the proposed bonus bill. The majority get together, discuss it, and undertake to lick it into shape; and then, if hearings are to be had, as a matter of course all the members of the committee will be invited to attend those hearings.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator's idea of the ethics of legislation, it is that the party in power may hold secret meetings at which witnesses are heard, so long as their testimony is not taken down, may formulate the legislation, and then perfunctorily may invite the minority in and say, "Now we will have some hearings."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No. In the first place, the Senator does not discriminate between Senators coming together to discuss a matter and a formal committee hearing. The Senator knows the difference as well as anybody in the world. If a half dozen majority Senators want to get together in a room and talk over some matter affecting tariff or bonus legislation, I think it is the height of folly, with all due respect to my friend, to claim that we have got to send out for some Democrats to come in there to hear the conversation between us. It has not been done, and, with all due respect to everybody, it will not be done.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Does not the Senator think there is a distinction in this case, inasmuch as the present bonus bill has never been considered by the committee, but has just come to this body from the House and no hearings have been held? Therefore the conference held was for the purpose of eliciting information of a special character for the benefit of the majority without the minority being present. There has never been a hearing held on the present House bonus bill. This is not a case where, after hearings have been held, the majority go into secret session, but it was the first discussion on the part of the committee of the Senate of a bill that has just come into the Senate and the minority were not invited to be present or given the right to ask questions and to hear what was said upon a pending bill before this body.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. If the hearings are to be held, the minority will be invited to attend them; but no hearings have been held. There was merely an informal gathering for the purpose of talking over some of the provisions of the proposed measure or some similar measure hereafter to be formulated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I only want to assure the Senator from Massachusetts that I think he and I are not far apart on what ought to be done with reference to this bill; but, as chairman of the committee, a great many people come to see me both on the tariff and on the soldiers' compensation bill. They come to see me every day. I may take them into a private room and talk with them or I may talk with them in the committee room. I shall scarcely refuse to speak with them; and if I meet Mr. Taylor, who is at the head of the legislative committee of the Legion here, I shall still think that I have the right to ask him how he likes the House bill, and, if he has any objections to it, I may go so far as to ask him what his objections are, and I shall not feel that I am called upon to call the committee together before I can have any discussion with him on the subject.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I think the Senator underestimates the importance of the meeting of yesterday. I have in my hand a bulletin, which was published and distributed, showing the committee meetings that were to be held yesterday. That bulletin reads as follows:

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS, TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 1922.

Appropriations, hearing military appropriation bill, 10.30.
Commerce and Merchant Marine, hearing ship subsidy, 10 o'clock.
Finance, Republican members, representatives of veterans' organizations, 10.30.
Dye-lobby investigation, hearing at Senate Office Building at 10 o'clock.

Does not this bulletin show that an invitation was given out and notice given to the press and public that the Republican members of that committee were to meet for the first time and hear witnesses from veterans' organizations in regard to a piece of legislation that is not partisan, that must not be partisan, that should not have any partisan character?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have stated to the Senator several times that there were no hearings. I shall probably exercise the right to talk about the soldiers' bonus bill with whomever I see fit. I shall probably call to consult with me those whom I feel I can talk the matter over with. I know of no law against it, and I shall continue to follow that course; and when we have our committee hearings I shall ask the good advice of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thank the Senator; but this bulletin did not fall out of the sky. This notice did not come out of the ground. Somebody wrote it. Somebody gave it to the proper authorities. Somebody published it, and it must have been done with the knowledge of the chairman or the secretary of that committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Somebody published that there were hearings and that there was testimony taken yesterday, according to the statement of the Senator, but somebody was mistaken.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether on yesterday morning four or five Democratic Senators were not together in the office of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] with some soldiers, discussing the bonus question, and if the Senator was not one of them?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am very glad to inform the Senator. I was present alone in the office of the Senator from Alabama yesterday between 12 and 1 o'clock with some reserve officers of the Aviation Branch of the United States Navy who had been with me attending a hearing on a resolution offered by me, before a committee protesting against the kind of examinations they were given when being inducted into the Regular Army. The bonus was not mentioned. They had no interest in it, and they had no relation whatever to any legislation pending on that question, but retired for conference after a hearing before the Naval Affairs Committee. We went to the committee room of the Senator from Alabama because I have no committee room in this building and the Senator from Alabama very kindly has permitted members of the minority to use it for conferences.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why were we not invited to be present?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The hearing was held before the Naval Affairs Committee, at which there were present two Republicans, and the whole evidence was discussed and presented to the committee in the open. The naval officers assembled, after the hearing, in the room in question to discuss with me the matter of witnesses and other questions to expedite the hearings before the Naval Committee.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I just want to say to the Senator that I am entirely satisfied that they had the hearing, and I am not at all angry at the fact that I was not invited to be present.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Well, I am provoked that I was not invited to be present at the committee meeting, of which I am a member, namely, the Finance Committee of the Senate.

LANDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2616) to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey certain land, which was, on page 1, line 11, to strike out all after "be" down to and including "Columbia" in line 2, page 2, and insert "covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF BANKING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3170) regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia, which was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "or" and insert "nor shall any corporation now or hereafter engaged in the business of banking be permitted."

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator what the amendment is, and how it changes the original bill.

Mr. BALL. The bill itself provides that hereafter no banking institution shall do business in the District of Columbia except under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency. The amendment takes in the banks that are now doing business, and says that hereafter they shall be placed under the Comptroller of the Currency. It is a very proper amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have noticed some statement in the press to the effect that while no new banks would be permitted in the District of Columbia without permission from the comptroller, any existing bank could establish branches without limit and without such permission. Is that in this bill?

Mr. BALL. The original bill covered that so far as the establishment of any bank in the future was concerned. This amendment will cover in the banks that are doing business now. They will also be placed under the control of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But this bill does not limit the number of branches which may be established by any existing bank?

Mr. BALL. Not at all. It merely places the banks that are not now under either the District Commissioners or other authorities under the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to state that some business people of the District of Columbia have protested against the privilege of existing banks being permitted to establish branch banks ad libitum.

Mr. BALL. This does not affect the establishment of branch banks, except that it provides that those branch banks shall be under the control of the Comptroller of the Currency. They can establish as many as the Comptroller of the Currency sees fit to grant permission to establish.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The protests which I have heard have been upon that feature. It is contended that there should be a limitation upon the creation of branch banks, as well as new banks.

Mr. BALL. The bill does not limit branch banks at all. I suppose, as a result of placing it under the Comptroller of the Currency, he might control the number; but at present a certain number of banks in the District of Columbia are under no authority. Anybody can establish a bank here and do business.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. My judgment is that the bill in that respect is a very salutary one.

Mr. BALL. Very.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think it should go further, however, and limit the establishment of branch banks without some sort of supervision and control of the comptroller.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, that, of course, is placed under the power of the Comptroller of the Currency by this amendment. The Comptroller of the Currency would have absolute control of all branch banks as well as other banks.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then I received a wrong impression from the Senator's first statement. Do I understand now that under this bill an existing bank can not establish a branch bank without permission of the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. BALL. They are under the control of nobody. Anybody could start a bank here before the passage of this bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But I mean after the passage of this bill.

Mr. BALL. After the passage of this bill they can be started only by the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. What I am seeking to get information about is this: After the passage of this bill, can an existing bank establish a branch bank without permission of the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. BALL. I should say not—absolutely not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is what I want to know.

Mr. LODGE. The Comptroller of the Currency can control the establishment of branch banks under this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

SUMMONING OF GRAND JURIES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill prepared by the Department of Justice; the bill (S. 3505) in reference to the summoning of grand juries in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the United States attorney for the District of Columbia shall certify in writing to the chief justice of the Supreme Court of said District, or, in his absence, to the senior associate justice of said court, that the exigencies of the public service require it, said chief justice or associate justice may, in his discretion, order a grand jury summoned at such time as he may designate, which jury shall be drawn in the manner now provided by law for the drawing of grand jurors in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any limitation now upon the power of judges to convene grand juries?

Mr. NELSON. They can only draw them now for the special terms of court. There are five terms of court here—October, December, February, April, and June of each year. Each of them terminates on the second Monday preceding the first Tuesday of the second month thereafter. There is a congestion of the criminal business in this District, and the object of this bill is to allow the court, upon the recommendation of the district attorney, to summon a grand jury. They are to be drawn like other grand juries.

Mr. KING. As I understand, then, under the present law grand juries may be called only at those five terms?

Mr. NELSON. At special terms. This bill authorizes the Attorney General, or the chief justice, or the senior associate justice in his absence, to summon a grand jury.

Mr. KING. It is desired by the district attorney here, is it?

Mr. NELSON. The district attorney here and the Attorney General urge it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the letter of the Attorney General may be inserted in the RECORD at this point. It is very short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 22, 1922.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The situation in the District of Columbia is such that it is necessary that a law be enacted authorizing the selection of additional grand juries when necessary. You are no doubt familiar with the situation, but, if not, we shall be glad to give you full data.

I inclose draft of a bill which I think should be introduced in the Senate and House. I am sending a copy to Mr. VOLSTEAD asking him to introduce the bill in the House, and I would like to have you introduce it in the Senate, or have some one else do so, if you approve it. We will support the measure, and I would be glad to have the matter disposed of as soon as possible.

With high esteem, I am,

Very truly yours,

H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it was expected that the ranking member of the Committee on Finance [Mr. SIMMONS] would be able to address the Senate to-day. He expected to be here to present his views for the information of the Senate and the country. Owing to his absence, I shall be compelled to continue the discussion of the tariff measure now before us, addressing myself generally to the chemical schedule.

Before proceeding to such discussion, permit me to submit a few words suggested by the statement just made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and also by the statement by my friend from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. Yesterday I referred to the fact that committees of the Senate under the present régime seemed to be devitalized and that legislation was framed not within but outside of Congress; that blocs and groups and extraneous forces and agencies seemed to be dominant and determining factors in respect to important legislation.

It develops this morning, from the statement made by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, that four members of the majority of the Finance Committee met in the committee rooms, rooms which are supposed to be devoted to committee hearings and are or should be open to all members of the committee, which are for the use of committees, not Republicans alone but Democrats also, and that there appeared before them representatives of the American Legion. It is now claimed that they merely "sat down and talked"; but it sufficiently appears that the matter before them was the bonus bill, the provisions of the measure, the terms that are to be incorporated within it, and, generally, the character of legislation that is to be reported to the Senate upon the subject of adjusted compensation.

Republican Senators say that no testimony was taken. What, then, was the purpose of the meeting? It would be a futile thing to assemble without some purpose. We complain because there was a meeting at which witnesses or persons urging legislation were present. If there are to be secret meetings by the majority, let them have the goodness and the fairness, if witnesses or other persons appear before them, to have taken down stenographically the information which is conveyed, and which becomes the basis, in part at least, of the action of the Republicans.

The Senator from Indiana, if I understood him correctly, took the position that, as Republicans are in the majority, they have the right to formulate legislation, and to call in the minority for their approval or their disapproval; of course, in most cases it will be for their disapproval, because the great majority of the legislation prepared by our Republican friends is not entitled to the approval of the minority or of the American people. But I deny the wisdom or the propriety or the fairness of that procedure in securing legislation. We have committees of the House and Senate. In both branches bills are introduced and referred to the various committees for their consideration and mature judgment. Hearings are often granted or ordered by the committees in order to ascertain the facts and to inform the committees as to the action that should be taken. This testimony is stenographically reported and usually printed. It is for the benefit of the Senate and the public. In this manner the public may know at least some of the reasons back of the laws and actions of Congress.

How does the Senator from Massachusetts, or any other member of the Finance Committee, know what Mr. MacNider or other gentlemen stated yesterday before the majority members of the Finance Committee, statements of fact or of policy which doubtless will influence them in framing legislation dealing with a matter of vital importance to the American people?

Mr. President, I stated yesterday that the bill before us was in part based upon testimony which was given or statements made after the hearings were closed. These statements and this testimony were not for Democrats and were submitted in secret to Republican members of the committee. I am told that Mr. Irenee du Pont, representing one of the most stupendous and colossal organizations the world has ever seen, went before the Republican members of the Finance Committee after the hearings were closed. What he said we do not know. What testimony he gave the Democrats do not know and have no means of finding out. What influence it had in shaping the present bill we can only surmise. The distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who always endeavors to be fair and just, stated upon the floor of the Senate this morning that some Senators appeared before the Republican members of the committee and that the latter were glad to receive them. Of course the Senators who appeared had the right so to do, and doubtless gave reasons for certain rates to be incorporated in the pending bill. But if the Democratic members of the committee could have heard their views it would have aided them in reaching conclusions as to the course to be adopted in dealing with this important legislation. But my information is that not only a few Senators appeared but a considerable number of persons from various parts of the country, who are deeply interested in securing tariff legislation and the adoption of schedules which will greatly affect their business. These interested parties, these witnesses who had interests to serve, gave testimony and made statements in relation to this bill and the schedules in which they were respectively interested. We do not know what they said, nor can we determine how important their testimony was, or to what extent it influenced, or possibly might, the Republican members of the committee who reported this bill after making perhaps thousands of amendments to the House bill. We can not tell what the form of the bill before would have been except for this secret testimony given in these secret hearings.

Is this the way legislation is to be prepared? Are majorities to meet in secret, and are witnesses to come secretly before them and make statements, statements which never see the light of day, and of which the minority and the country are not advised? Not only are Democratic Members of the Senate left to speculate and guess as to the reasons for certain rates and schedules and provisions contained in this bill, but Republican Senators, not upon the Finance Committee, are left in the same uncertain condition unless their colleagues shall undertake the task of informing them.

The statement of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is true; this method of legislation develops suspicion among the people; it undermines their faith in Congress and governmental agencies. It subjects Congress and committees to the charge that their legislation was framed in the dark, in secrecy, and that back of it are sinister and selfish forces and interests. Bills reported from committees when the hearings are not open and when testimony was secured in secret will be, in the minds of the people, tainted and discredited. In my opinion, the course pursued was unwise; this is a dangerous method of legislation; it discredits our parliamentary system; and it will be unfortunate for Congress as well as the Government.

The Republican majority in Congress is evidently of the opinion that the two things which were in the minds of the people when they invested the Republican Party with the administration of the Government were that the country wanted an old-fashioned protective or prohibitive tariff and desired, or at least expected, that the Republican Party would at once appropriate to itself all of the jobs, positions, and patronage covered by the civil service. Protection and patronage seem to be the dominant passion of the party in power. But the victory of the Republican Party was not won upon the tariff issue, nor because the people wanted a new protective or prohibitive tariff, or because the people desired that faithful servants and employees of the Government should be summarily discharged to make place for Republican office hunters and to provide means for the payment of the partisan debts of Republican politicians. It is to be deplored that in the face of the important issues before the country, or rather in the face of the complex problems which affect our public policy, the country, merely because it obtained a change in the administration, was compelled to turn to Republican politicians, who are apparently without judgment or vision or capacity, to meet and solve the questions of policy which demand the attention of Congress, but who, on the other hand, are obsessed with the petty, protective, partisan politics of the Republican Party, which seems to regard archaic and narrow views as the inexorable inheritance of the Republican Party to be treasured as pearls of great price.

Mr. President, the Republican Party has become proud and arrogant by reason of its recent victory. Promising a progressive administration and the execution of policies adapted to new issues and to new world conditions, it surrenders authority to the same old reactionary and antique forces which in the past guided its activities. It seems incapable of meeting the issues of the hour. It offers but one formula—the same which it has proclaimed for half a century—to meet ills, domestic, national, and international; that is, "prohibitive tariffs and national isolation." It manifests the same traits as are exhibited by narrow and nonprogressive scientists who treat with disdain the new discoveries and the advancing truths of philosophy, which batter down the dark and musty prisons and battlements erected in past ages. Religiously we find sightless persons who refuse to be warmed by the new light of the new day and to have the scales of darkness fall from their eyes, that they may be guided by the illuminating truths which the liberation of spiritual forces in the world manifest to those who seek the light. The days of witchcraft and burning at the stake are past. Old systems are passing away and must pass away, if there shall be political and scientific and religious development. I do not disparage, of course, fundamentals. These persist, but fundamentals are the bases upon which we build the structures of the hour and the age. The trouble is that too often we misconceive the fundamentals, the basic things, and confound them with the superficial and the perishable.

There are moral forces which persist in all ages. The mutations of time do not change them. There are basic principles underlying governments and political philosophy and political economy. They are adequate for all time. It is the misapplication of these principles and the failure to comprehend them and all of their implications that lead to the injustices, inequalities, and chaos so often appearing in the governments of men. In every age and in every country there are people of limited vision, of narrow perspective, and of illiberal tendencies. They wrap the mantle of self-complacency about them and desire their country either to be isolated from the world or to dominate the world. Back of such view is greed and selfishness and an utter ignorance of the vibrant forces that animate and control the world. Our country to-day, more than ever, should pursue a liberal policy. More than ever should American people be the first to catch the dawn of the new day and the inspiration of the new age. More than ever must there be contact with the world.

We have sought during the eight years of Democratic administration to be placed in apposition with the world. We built a merchant fleet to carry our products to every port in the world. We have secured cables that will bring us into touch with all lands, and we speak through the air the language of fellowship and fraternalism to most distant lands. It was supposed that we were learning something of the destiny of humanity and of the bond of unity which more and more must bind all peoples together. But we find the Republican Party erecting impediments to trade and commerce and projecting a policy which must inevitably provoke international controversies and promote national selfishness and isolation.

I saw this morning a cartoon illustrating the McCumber-Fordney tariff bill now before us. The great cartoonist visualized the situation. He represents a huge block of granite being lowered by mechanical means. Underneath the block is the prostrate form of the people, upon whom it rests with crushing force. This tariff law will rest upon the American people. It will crush industry. It will prevent the operation of the natural laws of trade and commerce. It will protect trusts and combinations in restraint of trade. It will build up giant monopolies, and behind its formidable ramparts pirates and buccaneers in our domestic markets will exploit the helpless people. I am not exaggerating, Mr. President, when I say that this bill is not only an economic fallacy, but it is an industrial monstrosity. Our Republican friends speak of opening the mills and the mines and bringing prosperity to the agricultural interests of our land. Mr. President, the mills would open and the mines would send forth their mineral wealth and the fields and the farms would yield abundantly for the sustenance of man and prosperity would come to the American people if we would recognize the inexorable laws of trade and of commerce and conform our course to their currents. Because of world depression, which inevitably would gather this Nation within its sweep, we think to correct the world situation by casting further obstacles into the commercial currents of the world.

No truthful person can say that the financial depression in the United States is occasioned by the Underwood tariff law. Under it our imports have been reduced in many of the commodities of life—reduced to negligible quantities, and in many instances reduced to the vanishing point. Indeed, many commodities upon the free list are not imported because of the abundance and cheapness of domestic production, as well as world conditions. Our exports have likewise been materially reduced from the peak reached in 1919 and 1920 under the Democratic administration.

What we need to-day is to expand our exports, and with the expansion of our exports of necessity there will be an increase of imports. If under the Underwood law imports are limited as they are to-day, it is hypocrisy to charge that such limited imports menace our industrial and economic security, and it is conclusive evidence that the purpose is to cut off all imports regardless of the effect upon our exports. It is sheer madness to strike at our foreign trade through the schedules of this absurd, foolish, and altogether reactionary bill.

I repeat, Mr. President, this tariff bill before us is a measure which interrupts the returning tide of business activity, and if we do have a revival in business it will be not because of this tariff bill but in spite of it and its absurd provisions and inequitable and monopolistic and exclusive features.

It is only proper to say that in the last campaign the tariff was not an issue. It is certain that the tariff was not in the minds of the voters when they went to the polls and cast the majority vote for the Republican administration.

If I understood correctly the speech made by the Senator from North Dakota the other day, he indicated that this bill was in response to the demands of his party's platform. I most respectfully dissent from that view.

Our Republican friends over and over again upon the floor of the Senate have ascribed their triumphant victory to the issue presented by the League of Nations; never to the economic question involved in the repeal of the Underwood tariff bill and the enactment of some other tariff measure. Our Republican friends have repeatedly declared that the American people had by "solemn referendum" declared against the League of Nations. They have said that the American people upon that great issue found with the Republican Party. Now they are shifting their position and are attributing their victory at the last election to their promise to enact a high tariff law, a prohibitive tariff law. I deny that that issue was submitted to the American people.

There was no public interest whatever in the tariff question; the people had discovered that their greatest prosperity had been under a tariff law enacted by the Democratic Party. So great was the indifference upon the part of the people to any sort of tariff measure that Republican orators made little or no mention of the subject during the campaign. I was in many of the States during the campaign of 1920 and heard numerous addresses by Republicans. The entire burthen of their remarks was that the League of Nations was an entangling alliance, and that following the advice of Washington and Jefferson, this Republic should not enter it. It was pictured as a huge Frankenstein that would swallow up the Nation and destroy the sovereignty and independence of the United States. There never was a crusade waged with greater vehemence and passion than the fight against the covenant of the League of Nations. I shall not pause to demonstrate the fallacy of the arguments made or point out the misrepresentations made to the people.

I repeat, the tariff was not an issue. The people were not concerned in the subject. They were satisfied with the Underwood tariff law. Under that bill we had attained the greatest prosperity that had ever come to this Nation. Our exports had increased from a few billion dollars annually to $8,000,000,000, and our foreign trade and commerce had reached the colossal sum of $13,000,000,000 in 1919.

In the Republican platform adopted June 8, 1920, it was stated under the significant title "International trade and tariff":

> The uncertain and unsettled condition of international balances, the abnormal economic and trade situation of the world, and the impossibilty of forecasting accurately even the near future, preclude the formulation of a definite program to meet conditions a year hence.

There was a glimpse of statesmanship in that declaration, Mr. President.

> But the Republican Party reaffirms its belief in the protective principle and pledges itself to a revision of the tariff as soon as conditions shall make it necessary for the preservation of the home market for American labor, agriculture, and industry.

This was a most remarkable declaration and disclosure on the part of the Republican Party. In a temporary lucid interval the platform makers got a glimpse of the light that there was some proper relation between international trade and the tariff, and while their minds were thus illumined they saw clearly that the unsettled and uncertain conditions of international balances and the abnormal economic and trade situation of the world made it inopportune to undertake any tinkering with the tariff at this time. Those platform makers now will see that the formulation of a definite scheme to raise the duties on imports and interdict foreign trade would not meet any response from the American people.

I repeat, Mr. President, that the first part of that platform declaration was a correct conception of the world's condition. How can we draw a proper tariff bill that is to endure for a decade or more with the fluctuating conditions that now exist in the world? The tides of trade and commerce are as undulatory as are the seas when whipped into foam by the storms and mighty winds. A tariff of 20 per cent ad valorem on one item to-day might be prohibitive in a month or two months from now, or, if protection was desired, a 20 per cent tariff which might afford ample protection to-day would be inadequate in a few months from now.

So, Mr. President, with the world in an abnormal condition, in a condition of flux, the absurdity of trying to draw a tariff bill must be manifest to the most superficial investigator of economics and of industrial questions.

But, Mr. President, our Republican friends, having obtained a temporary glimpse of the truth, the platform makers immediately relapsed into their partisan subconsciousness and reaffirmed their belief in the protective principle of a tariff for the preservation of the home market for American labor, for agriculture, and for industry, and indicate that a revision of the tariff will be made as soon as conditions make it necessary. There was no waiting, however, for conditions to make it necessary.

The new Congress was elected in November, 1920, and did not convene in regular session until December, 1921, more than a year later. But already, in January, 1921, within two months of the election and nearly a year before the regular session of Congress should convene, hearings for the revision of the tariff were inaugurated by the Republican majority of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, and those hearings continued intermittently, either by the Ways and Means Committee of the House or the Finance Committee of the Senate, almost down to the very day when the pending bill was reported out of the Senate Committee on Finance on April 10; that is, the 10th day of the present month.

Let us examine this point for a moment. Many of our imports relate to commodities of great importance and constitute about 1 per cent or less of our domestic production. It is contended by the proponents of this bill that the industries of our country are threatened by these negligible imports. To so contend and to insist that the restoration of prosperity is impeded and that our industries are menaced is the height of absurdity. How foolish it is to argue that a domestic product, particularly where it is manufactured in large quantities, will be materially affected, or the industry developing it will be jeopardized by such competition as would result from imports amounting to 1 per cent of such commodity. Such contention taxes the patience of all sensible people.

The very fact that lobbyists and certain manufacturers are here demanding a prohibitive tariff upon commodities where the domestic production is 90 to 99 per cent of all consumption is incontrovertible evidence that they seek a monopoly in the domestic market, and are determined to prevent the lowering of prices to a proper level, and indeed, perhaps to increase them and to make themselves secure from any possible competition, no matter how unimportant it might be. These are the interests and trusts which would impose burdens upon the laborer and the great masses of the people. They would fetter by high prices the workingman, compel him to pay exorbitant prices for food and clothing, and drugs and medicines. They would tax him upon the shoes that he is compelled to purchase out of his slender wage for his wife and children. They would place a tariff-tax gatherer upon the doorstep of every humble home and wring from the people much of their earnings, won by toil and struggle.

For the last 15 months the city of Washington, the Houses of Congress, the committee rooms of the Senate and the House, and the corridors of the office buildings have been literally infested with tariff lobbyists importuning the committees to raise the tariff on practically every article of domestic production, at a time, too, when the interests of the country have had an effectual eight years' embargo against foreign competition incident to the war against Germany and the subsequent crippling of competitive industries in Europe.

The outstanding fact is that at this time, in the fourth year since the conclusion of the war, the balance of trade in favor of our country is relatively greater than before the war. Imports in the great majority of American industries are more than ever balanced by exports of the same commodities, the imports themselves representing but a relatively insignificant proportion of the American consumption, in many cases not amounting to one cent more than the goods are worth. They want to charge the American people, the housewife, the children more for the goods than the goods are worth, and thus increase the burdens upon the consumer, for the purpose of putting additional profits into the already swollen purses and treasuries of the great manufacturing interests and corporations of the United States.

The pending bill should be labeled "A bill to make richer the rich, to give greater power to the corporations and trusts to fasten monopolies upon the American people, and to exploit and rob the consuming public."

As I said, the imports in a great majority of American industries are more than overbalanced by exports of the same commodities, the imports thus representing but a relatively insignificant proportion of the American consumption, in many cases not amounting to 1 per cent.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KING. I yield.

IVY L. MERRILL.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 531) for the relief of Ivy L. Merrill, which was reported by me this morning from the Committee on Claims. It is a little claim bill in favor of an Indian woman who was injured in the Government service 13 years ago. The amount is only $500, and the case is perfectly plain.

Mr. SMOOT. Was the bill reported from the committee this morning?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Yes; reported from the Committee on Claims, and the report was unanimous.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the character of the claim?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I shall be very glad to state it to the Senator. This Indian woman was a cook at one of the Indian schools, the Shawnee Indian school in Oklahoma, and it was her duty to ring the dinner bell. On this particular day she went to ring the bell and it fell, striking her as it fell from the tower, and injured her severely on the shoulder, the arm, and the wrist. She lost a week's time, that much salary perhaps; anyhow she must have suffered considerable pain and the shock must have been great.

The original bill called for $10,000. I am frank to say that after the most careful examination I, still thinking that that was the amount claimed, reported in favor of the payment of $2,500, but I found that the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, after going over all the facts in the case, had on January 15, 1913, recommended the payment of $500. So the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] in introducing the bill in the present Congress changed the amount and made it $500, and the committee have recommended the passage of the bill in that amount, without amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Was she an employee of the Government?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Oh, yes; she was employed by the Government as cook at this Indian school, which is a Government school. She had to go out on the steps outside the kitchen door. The bell was in a tower about 12 feet high. She had to stand on a little platform, 2 or 3 feet high, in order to ring the bell. There had been a fall of sleet and a freeze. The supposition is—in fact, it is almost certain—that the bell had stuck on account of the ice or the sleet. It required extra strength and an extra pull to ring the bell and to unfasten or loosen it from the ice. Evidently the belfry had been badly constructed, a thing which she could not know and for which she was not responsible. The support of the bell gave way; the bell fell; and the wonder is she was not killed, but she was knocked down.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill was favorably reported.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Oh, yes; it is reported favorably unanimously, and its passage is recommended by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ivy L. Merrill, a quarter-blood Pottawatomie Indian, of Pottawatomie County, Okla., the sum of $500, in full compensation for permanent and lasting injuries received, without negligence on her part, while in the employ of the United States Government as a civil-service employee at the Shawnee Indian School in Pottawatomie County, Okla.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which the Secretary has just read?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Myers	Smoot
Borah	Harrison	Newberry	Spencer
Broussard	Heflin	Nicholson	Stanley
Bursum	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Swanson
Caraway	Kellogg	Oddie	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Keyes	Page	Walsh, Mont.
du Pont	King	Pepper	Warren
Ernst	Ladd	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Pomerene	Watson, Ind.
Glass	Lenroot	Ransdell	Williams
Gooding	McKinley	Rawson	Willis
Hale	McNary	Sheppard
Harreld	Moses	Shortridge

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is detained from the Senate on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance to the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire now to call attention to the chemical schedule, which is one of the most important schedules of the pending bill.

Schedule 1 of the bill, as reported by the committee, covers the duties imposed under the general title of "Chemicals, Oils, and Paints." This schedule consists of 88 paragraphs and imposes duties upon about 300 different items. The schedule is important as covering a wide range of commodities of primary importance, both to the people as consumers and to the industries of the country as the source of their raw materials. An enumeration of a few of the classes of commodities covered by this schedule will disclose the following to be included: Chemicals, medicines, drugs, soaps, oils, paints, varnishes, pigments, fertilizers, perfumery, flavors, edible oils, celluloid, cellulose, tanning materials, dyes, colors, inks, glycerine, starches, dextrine, and flavoring extracts.

It is a fair conclusion, drawn from an examination of the rates imposed, that these rates are designed to be protective in the sense that they are to be prohibitory, and are intended to operate as an effectual embargo against the importation of the commodities embraced within this schedule. The rates can not be warranted from any standpoint of the revenues, because the imports are in many cases negligible, not comprising 1 per cent of the domestic production, and the slight quantity of imports is in most cases counterbalanced many times over by domestic exports of the same commodities.

I will say, in passing, that the record shows that all imports from Germany, not only those covered by the schedule to which I have just referred, Schedule 1, but by all of the schedules, were slightly more than $88,000,000 for the year 1921, against a domestic production which is variously estimated to be from $55,000,000,000 to $65,000,000,000. This little drop of water carried from Germany and thrown into the great reservoir of our domestic production is, according to the apostles of high protectionism to destroy the American market and the American manufacturer and the American laborer, and to bring chaos and ruin to the economic and industrial life of the American people. The suggestion is so preposterous, Mr. President, as to exhaust the patience of sensible and serene persons.

Mr. President, it is astounding to learn of the lengths to which selfish interests will go to secure advantages. A defeated nation, and a people prostrate—with reparations exacted that can only be met, if met at all, by unparalleled sacrifices, and by years, if not decades, of toil, and people who are seeking to bear their burdens and mitigate the hardships and tribulations to which they are subjected—are pointed to as the most serious menaces to which our country is exposed, and the devouring monster which lies athwart our economic and industrial path, and which must be destroyed if America is to live.

I denounce this wicked, cruel, and heartless propaganda which has been carried on for months by sordid and monopolistic industrial and business forces in our country. Efforts are being made by these forces to perpetuate war prejudices and to develop and maintain racial prejudices in the United States against the German people. It is a shameful exhibition, and I protest against it and denounce those who seek legislation by such abominable methods.

I shall have more to say about the "German market" and the "German menace" later in the consideration of this bill; but let me add here, that while Lloyd-George and others at the Genoa conference are attempting, I think, in a patriotic way, to resuscitate Europe, to stabilize economic conditions—and that will mean the stabilization of political conditions—while they are trying to help Germany, because Germany, notwithstanding the views of many of the American people, is the key to European production and European revival and the recrudescence of economic activity—while they are attempting to solve these problems which directly affect them as well as the United States—some Americans, with a selfishness and a sordidness that can not be justified, are holding Germany up to the American people as a frightful specter and monster which will destroy our business enterprises and devour the American people.

The only effect of the rates imposed in this bill in many cases will be the raising of the prices of the commodities affected in the domestic market, a market in which under present conditions the domestic producers have, speaking generally, exclusive sales, there being no appreciable competition of imported articles. It may be that under the present tariff, which imposes only temperate duties upon a large number of commodities in this schedule, and carries others of these commodities on the free list, the American market prices are influenced, not to say determined, by the ruling prices in the open world market. But this is not to be regarded as an evil, but as the only effectual means of maintaining American prices at a reasonable and dependable level, without which trade is disturbed to the disadvantage of the industries of the country and the consuming public.

As a matter of general policy the endeavor ought to be to permit the industries of the United States the widest possible range for the selection and procurement of the raw materials of the respective trades, particularly in the field of primary chemicals and chemical compounds. In these respects our industries should be permitted to draw their supplies from the ends of the earth, without the interdiction of prohibitive tariffs, licenses, or selective embargoes. Moreover, the matter of the health of the people is of such transcendent importance that the medical profession ought to have the freest selection of drugs, medicines, and medicinal articles which the open market of the world affords. The policy of imposing prohibitive duties upon the importation of drugs, medicines, and medicinal materials is not sound, and is not justified by any consideration of the real advantage of the people and the country. The outstanding fact is that in these great fields our own country is the greatest source of these materials in the world. We are exporters rather than importers in this field. There is hardly a chemical of wide general use and consumption of which we do not produce superabundant quantities, and the surplus of which must find an outlet in the markets of other countries. It must be said that labor is not the primary factor of cost in the production of these materials—and I shall analyze that a little later—and therefore that any argument for a prohibitive tariff, based upon the alleged difference in labor costs at home and abroad, can not be sustained with reference to the items covered by Schedule 1 of the bill.

The aim of the American producer is a large production of standardized products, and in pursuit of this purpose the American producer has been willing to remit to the foreign technicians the development and the production of the more refined and complex chemical compounds of small relative consumption, and for which a wide world market alone warrants the investment of capital for their composition and production.

A few examples of the flagrant and unwarranted increase in the rates on important commodities will indicate that these rates have been written at the suggestion of parties who are only concerned with the increase of their facilities for raising the domestic price to unconscionable levels. In conformity to this scheme the duty on calomel is to be raised to 300 per cent of the present rate; on castor oil the duty is to be raised to 200 per cent of the present rate; on Epsom salts the duty is to be raised to 500 per cent of the present rate; on chloroform the duty is to be raised to 400 per cent of the present rate; on carbolic acid there is to be an embargo; on court-plasters the duty is to be raised to 166 per cent of the present rate; on castile soap the duty is to be raised to 150 per cent of the present rate; on varnishes the duty is to be raised to 150 per cent of the present rate; on citrate of lime the duty is to be raised to 600 per cent of the present rate; on citric acid the duty is to be raised to 360 per cent of the present rate; on licorice root the duty is to be raised to 200 per cent of the present rate; on inks the duty is to be raised to 200 per cent of the present rate; on formaldehyde the duty is to be raised to 200 per cent of the present rate; on collodion the duty is to be raised to 700 per cent of the present rate; on Rochelle salts the duty is to be raised to 200 per cent of the present rate; on ammonium phosphate the duty is to be raised to 150 per cent of the present rate; on fustic extract the duty is to be raised to 533 per cent of the present rate; on sodium chromate and dichromate the duty is to be raised to 233 per cent of the present rate; and upon sal soda and caustic soda, chemicals of wide general use, produced in this country in excess of our requirements and largely exported, the duty is to be raised to 200 per cent of the present rate.

Think of it, Mr. President! Many of these items come under the designation of drugs and medicines and are important to the health of the people. But we are to increase the burdens of the sick and the afflicted to put money into the coffers of the rich manufacturers and compounders of these prime necessities of life. Chloroform has become a vital thing in medicine in the hospital and operating room. But that must be seized upon by the merciless interests who have dictated the schedules in this bill, and the poor and the suffering must pay tribute to the drug men and the chemical men of the United States and increase their already swollen fortunes. They have already preyed upon the American people, and they now demand that the Republican Party commission them not only to continue their predatory course but to increase their exactions from the people suffering from disease and ailments, and who, to alleviate their sufferings, are compelled to meet their demands.

If there are to be monopolies and protection is to run riot, there certainly ought to be enough humanity upon the part of Congress to resist the demands of those interests which manufacture drugs and medicines. So profitable has the drug business become in the United States that there are thousands of druggists where there should be hundreds, and millions of profits where there should be thousands. Large drug concerns like Powers, Weightman & Rosengarten, and Parke, Davis & Co. have derived enormous profits in their business. I should say, in justice to the last-named company, that so far as I know it has not sought an increase in the present schedules and is not directly and, so far as I know, is not indirectly responsible for the changes proposed in the measure before us.

May I add, parenthetically, that Senators know that the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. manufacture various kinds of drugs and chemicals, as does the Allied Chemical Co. The first-named corporation has $353,000,000 invested in its chemical, dye, and allied corporations. It has other holdings. It has interests in other corporations, which increase its holdings and raise the value of its properties to hundreds of millions of dollars.

May I inquire, Is this the infant industry that is to be protected? Is this huge concern, as well as others of large proportions and with enormous holdings, to be granted practical prohibitive tariffs? If so, may I inquire why?

Indeed, this bill lays an embargo upon many of the products manufactured by these colossal organizations, which already control the domestic market and constitute a monopoly.

The Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, which is a combination of the Barrett Co., the Semet Solvay Co., the Solvay Process Co., the General Chemical Co., and the National Aniline & Chemical Co., has invested capital of $300,000,000, and it is one of the chief beneficiaries of this chemical schedule. These great organizations with their enormous power come to Congress and demand an embargo upon products which they manufacture and prohibitive tariffs upon other commodities which they manufacture. These "infants" are formidable enough to force legislation through Congress as they did in the dye embargo act.

There was a period in the life of our country when honest believers in tariffs could justify legislation in the interest of "infant industries." It is possible there are still some industries which are jeopardized by foreign competition. But there are few such within the scope of this bill. The infants who cried so loudly for protection are giants; they dominate our industrial life; they control much of our trade and commerce, and in many instances produce more than the domestic market requires and are successfully seeking and finding markets in all parts of the world.

They now admit their adult standing and their huge station, but profess great solicitude for labor. They will always discover a reason (?) for demanding exclusive domestic markets.

This bill, responding to their wishes, taxes the chamber of the sick, the life saving and healing drugs that minister to the children in home and in hospital. It not only taxes, but it raises the prices over the schedules of that unusually condemned tax law—the Payne-Aldrich law. The American people discovered the iniquities in that law and denounced it. What must they say of this bill? Its enormities far exceed those of any tariff law ever enacted in our country.

One of the beneficiaries of this bill is the Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation, a combination of the Union Carbide Co., the Carbon & Chemical Corporation, and over 30 other subsidiaries, with invested capital of $275,000,000——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator let me interrupt him there?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. On a general average of the items under this chemical schedule, what is the difference between the rates under the Payne-Aldrich bill and the Underwood bill and this bill? Has the Senator a general average of the whole schedule?

Mr. KING. Later, if opportunity affords, I shall show the Senate the tariff on every item in this schedule, more than 300 of them; also what the rates are in the Underwood bill and under the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill; the rates fixed in this bill as it came from the Senate committee. Let me simply say, generally—and I will analyze the schedule before we conclude consideration of the bill—that the rates in this bill are on an average of from 40 per cent to 60 per cent higher than those in the despised and hated Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, a bill which brought the Republican Party to defeat.

But our Republican friends, because of their great majority in both branches, feel that they can "put over" on the American people a bill more infamous than the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill. They can force it through Congress, and doubtless will. Thank God, there is another forum to which we can appeal, another great and final tribunal, which will weigh in the balances the conduct of this Republican administration, and I predict that after so weighing it they will find it wanting.

Let me add, parenthetically, Mr. President, that most of our political battles are fought on economic lines. We may from time to time bring in extraneous questions like the League of Nations, vital and important as they may be, but, after all, our political contests are fought over economic and industrial questions. The next campaign will be waged largely upon the questions of taxation, the abuse of the taxing power, the inequalities and injustices of the Fordney-McCumber tariff law, the interruption of our foreign trade, the extravagance and inefficiency of the Republican administration, and the narrow and provincial foreign policy pursued by the party in power.

But let me return to the carbide company. Later I shall call particular attention to it and the swollen fortunes which have been accumulated by those who are controlling its activities. This corporation desires the power to mulct the farmers and to get control of certain elements and factors which are essential in the manufacture of fertilizers. And the tariff bloc in the Senate—and some belong to the agricultural bloc—think they are getting something out of this bill for the farmers, but they will discover that the manufacturers and the trusts and the combinations of the United States have been too sharp for them. There are many jokers in this bill, Mr. President, which my good friend from Idaho and this tariff bloc, whose names I mentioned yesterday, have not discovered; and when they and the American agriculturists discover that this bill is a fraud upon the agriculturists there will be discontent and indignation which, like a mighty storm, will sweep from power the present administration. The Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation has a capitalization of $275,000,000, and this chemical schedule will put millions of ill-gotten gains, wrung from the pockets of the poor, into the coffers of this gigantic corporation.

There is the Sherwin-Williams Co. which is to be benefited by this bill. Its assets are $42,942,067. Is that an infant industry? It has to do with the paints and the varnishes that go to the farms and homes of the people. When we want building prices to come down, and when we are seeking the adoption of a policy which will enable men and women to secure homes, we are now by this bill making it more difficult for them to do so. We swell the mighty fortunes of the Paint Trust and the Varnish Trust and the other trusts, some of which are ancillary to the Sherwin-Williams Co., with its enormous capital.

The Grasselli Chemical Co. is to be benefited by this bill. It is one of the organizations that has had its representative here for months clamoring for increased rates. Its capital is $40,000,000.

The Mathieson Alkali Works has a capitalization of $12,266,369.

The Monsanto Chemical Works has a capitalization of $10,242,660.

The Merrimac Chemical Co. has a capitalization of $7,825,029.

Let me say, Mr. President, that the figures which I have given are merely the value stated by some of the publications, such as Moody's Manual. What the actual assets are perhaps no one except those who control the companies know.

It is interesting to note the fact that the capital invested in our chemical industry in 1914 exceeded $3,000,000,000. Now, these same organizations, and those which have followed them, have increased their capital to $5,200,000,000. A large part of that increase has resulted during the last two years, when we had the rates of the Underwood law in effect.

It will be noted that under the Underwood law, which has been in force since 1913, the amount invested in the chemical industry has almost doubled. This is persuasive evidence that no menace exists from foreign competition. Many of the commodities found in the chemical schedule are on the free list in the Underwood law. Yet the chemical business has increased, and the profits of the business has been great.

There are numerous other chemicals, dye, and medicinal manufacturers in the country whose invested capital exceeds millions, and runs into the hundreds of millions, and indeed billions, of dollars in the aggregate, detailed information of which is not obtainable, because they had not furnished the data to Moody's Manual or to the great organizations which seek to collate information and data concerning corporations, or to the Department of Commerce, or to the Tariff Commission. I have sought what I thought were the available sources of information to ascertain the capital invested in each of the great chemical plants in the United States, but my efforts have in most instances been futile; neither have I been able to obtain accurate information as to their profits. Data, I should say, is available as to some, and so far as that has been obtained I shall present it to the Senate.

Mr. President, I return now to the point I was discussing a moment ago, when I called attention to a number of items and showed that the increase in this bill was from 150 per cent to more than 600 per cent in the matter of chemicals, drugs, and medicines which the people of the United States must have.

There are also many commodities of wide, general use of which the country produces over 99 per cent of the domestic consumption, and of which large quantities are annually exported which have, without warrant or reason, been removed from the free list and made dutiable under this bill. I wish Senators would think of this; I wish the American people would let this fact sink into their minds with a view to determining what their conduct should be. Just think of it. Here are articles and commodities only 1 per cent of which or less are imported from foreign countries, 99 per cent or more being domestic products, and yet in order to help the domestic producer increase his profits we increase the tariff rates from 150 to 600 per cent.

It is hypocrisy which can not be characterized in temperate language in a parliamentary body to say that it is for the protection of home industry, or to enable the domestic manufacturer to secure proper returns on investment, or to protect labor. In these items to which I refer the exports are greater than the imports, showing that our domestic production exceeds our domestic consumption.

If these corporations and trusts who are urging these extravagant tariffs were accurate students of political economy they would see that in the long run they are going to injure their own country. They may monopolize the domestic market and profit by it and rob the American people, but they will cut off foreign trade and drive the American flag from the seas. It may float from the mastheads of war vessels, but this policy of the Republican Party, as exemplified in this bill, will drive from the seven seas the commercial flag of this Republic, and we will become a hermit nationally, economically, industrially, and commercially, and be robbed and plundered by the domestic corporations and trusts which our foolish policy develops.

Talk about reactionism; talk about the atavistic propensities of individuals and races and peoples. This bill is a "throwback" to the Dark Ages, to the periods when men and countries sought isolation, or if contact with others—only for the purpose of plundering them.

Among the articles put on the dutiable list by this bill is common salt, used upon every table in the land, and in the preparation and conservation of foods. Another article is phosphorus, which is an essential ingredient of matches, which everybody uses.

Another is acetic acid, the base of vinegar, and which is used for the preservation of pickles, condiments, relishes, and salad dressings. There is stearic acid, used in the manufacture of candles, necessary for miners and for the poor of our land who live in the more isolated regions of the country.

There is strychnine, an important medicinal product, and also widely used for the extermination of noxious insects and animals. There is oak extract, used in tanning sole leather, the imports of which act only to conserve our own too meager supply.

There is wood alcohol, which is widely used in the arts and of which in 1914 we produced 9,600,000 gallons and of which, for the first nine months of 1921, our export was 300,000 gallons. The imports are so inconsequential they are scarcely noticable, being less than 1 per cent of the domestic consumption. Yet we put a tariff upon wood alcohol and help these trusts and these swollen fortunes.

Soda ash is another article of which we are by far the largest producers in the world, the domestic production for 1920 being 1,238,000 tons, the exports for the first nine months of 1921 being 131,000 tons, the imports for the same period being only 5,800 tons. We export more than we import and our production is so stupendous that when we speak of the imports they are lost sight of because of their inconsequential character.

Soda ash is the most important of our industrial alkalis, as all Senators know. Why put a tariff on that? There is no competition from abroad. We export four or five times as much as we import and our domestic production is nearly fifty to one hundred times more than our imports; but we tax the people of the United States in order to increase the fortunes of those same corporations and others to which I have referred, whose gigantic capital to-day amounts in the aggregate to more than $5,260,000,000.

Soda ash is also used in the glass, soap, wood pulp and paper, caustic soap, dye, and textile industries, and in the manufacture of drugs, enamel ware, and cleaners, and for the softening of water.

Do not Senators see the point? They get a tariff on soda ash. Then they raise the price of soda ash, not because of any competition but because they can. The tariff keeps out any possible competition. Then when they manufacture soap or glass—and high tariff rates are laid on these commodities—higher prices for the soap and the other products are fixed, because there will be taken into account the high tariff on the ash and the tariff on tallow and on the other concomitants entering into the finished product; in this manner they will pyramid the tariff duties, adding one upon another, until the entire burdens will have to be met by the ultimate consumer. No wonder Mr. Procter, the fairy godfather or godmother of a former candidate for the Presidency of the United States, made millions out of a certain brand of soap, which I shall not mention here. I have the testimony of one man—I shall not stop now to read it, though I shall ask to put some of it in the RECORD later in the debate—calling attention to the fact that, instead of needing a tariff upon soap, we are exporting enormous quantities. As I recall the figures, the exports increased from $4,000,000 to $20,000,000 within a short period. We are the greatest consumers as well as the greatest producers of soap in the world. We compete with the world and can drive practically all foreign competitors off the market. There are reasons for our supremacy in this field. The great meat-packing industry yields tallows and fats, which constitute largely the best of our soaps. I wish we could make a soap that could cleanse our consciences as well as our bodies and enable us to see what justice and duty in this hour require in dealing with the American people. As suggested by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], we might use some soap to advantage on this bill. It would require a great many cakes of soap to wash the bill clean.

Another of these important alkalis which is transferred from the free list to the dutiable list is sodium silicate or water glass. Let me add that many of these chemical products which I have been discussing have been on the free list and, notwithstanding they have been on the free list, our production has increased and the importations in many instances have decreased. There has been no competition from abroad. There can be no competition from abroad that is worthy of consideration with respect to many items in this bill. Of course, Mr. President, the chairman of the committee will later on explain these things to our entire satisfaction. I shall listen with greater interest to such explanations.

I was speaking of the domestic production of sodium silicate, which is important in our chemical industry. The domestic production of this alkali exceeds 300,000 tons per annum. Exports for the first nine months of 1920 were nearly 7,000 tons and the imports were 334 tons. Why a tariff? Why raise the tariff wall upon this product when there is no competition? There is only one reason. It is because the big Chemical Trust demands it. I do not want to say, "We know our master's voice," but they have demanded it and they are getting it.

The duty imposed upon this article amounts to about 50 per cent ad valorem. What does it mean? It means an advance in the prices, or, if not an advance in the price, the maintenance of prices at levels so high as to become extortionate and increase the profits of the trust. It is manifest that these rates have been imposed because interested parties asked that they be imposed, when every consideration of sound policy requires that these alkalis should remain as they are upon the free list. Think of it, on the free list, and yet the imports were only 334 tons and we were exporting nearly 7,000 tons; and yet they say, "Oh, Germany. Germany is about to flood us and inundate the land with her surplus products." Before I get through I shall have something more to say about conditions in Germany. I was bitter against the German military machine during the war, but the war is over.

I deplore this anti-German spirit manifesting itself, I fear, in the Senate, which prompts Senators and others to urge as an excuse for these extortionate rates a German invasion of our markets. I want to see Germany rise from her prostrate position. I want to see the Germans prosper, the English prosper, and the French prosper, and all the nations of the world rejoice in the sunlight of a glorious day, children, as they are, of one common Father who watches over all and even the fall of the sparrow is taken note of by Him.

I want international prosperity, and I want the yoke of servitude, political and economic, lifted from the necks and backs of people, whether they be Americans or Germans, whether white or brown, or yellow or black, so that in the end all people may be brought together in amity and in peace, rejoicing in the common blessings that flow from a Christian civilization and from progressive and enlightened policies. This is not republicanism, but it is theism; it is the political creed, which in the end will dominate the world, because that creed which ultimately will prevail must rest upon the moral law and upon the principles of justice and equity.

But, Mr. President, I have digressed, for which I apologize.

A flagrant example of this method of writing tariff rates is in the case of calcium carbide—and I want Senators to recall this—which is removed from the free list and made dutiable at 1 cent per pound. That sounds innocent. As a specific rate that is not very much, the ordinary superficial observer would say. When it is considered that this commodity is sold by the ton, not to say carload, the imposition of a duty on a pound basis is a mere effort at camouflaging the iniquity of the rate imposed. This rate is actually $20 per ton. The principal uses of calcium carbide, as Senators know, are as a fixation agency for nitrogen, with which it forms calcium cyanamid, which has become the leading nitrogenous fertilizer. We are talking a great deal about the fixation of atmosphere and about the Haber process and about cyanamid and about Muscle Shoals. All those questions are related to the question here.

I stated that it becomes the leading nitrogenous fertilizer, and it is used for the making of acetylene gas for illumination and for the welding and cutting of metal. The rate on calcium carbide was undoubtedly dictated by the Union Carbide Co., a corporation which controls about 90 per cent of the domestic production and owns carbide plants at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; Niagara Falls, N. Y.; Welland, Ontario, Canada; and another in Norway. Ninety per cent of the domestic production by this trust, whose power extends beyond the United States into Canada and into Norway. The only competitors in the domestic carbide market of the trust referred to are Canadian concerns, some of which are owned by American interests and whose production costs are equal to the production costs of the Union Carbide Co. in its American plants.

The Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation has a capitalization of how much? Can anyone tell me? Perhaps $25,000,000, Senators would say; but it is $275,000,000. Ninety per cent of the production now is controlled by that corporation, and we must feed to this powerful trust the unwilling victims, the agriculturists and others, of the avarice of the trust.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I hesitate to interrupt the very lucid and powerful argument the Senator from Utah is making, but if he will pardon me I will call to mind a little incident.

The Committee on Agriculture, with practical unanimity, as I understand, reported in favor of the completion of the plant at Muscle Shoals. As soon as that was done the makers of these materials and the owners of by-product coke oven, whose capitalization mounts into many billions of dollars, got busy. It was a fight on the part of the Government in an effort to supply the farmer with cheaper fertilizer and a fight on the part of the wealthiest and most powerful corporations, not only in this country but in the world, to keep up the price of the fertilizer. The subsequent offer of Henry Ford has but accentuated that fact. Some day some farmer is going to stumble on the roll call of his bogus friends, who supported him whenever it did not offend the Steel Trust and the Carbide Trust.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky remembers the siege of Troy; he remembers the wooden horse and the armed soldiers therein, which was moved alongside the walls of Troy, thus enabling the victorious Greeks to conquer their foes. There are wooden horses—and in wooden horses we oftentimes find sinister influences and enemies who ravish and destroy the land—now being carefully placed against the fabric of our social and economic structure. Within this bill are wooden horses which conceal deadly foes, who will assail the best interests of this Republic.

Mr. STANLEY. The ancient Greeks went into Troy concealed in a wooden horse, but the emissaries of greedy corporations slip by the farmer in a load of hay. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I sometimes think that much of our lives are devoted to discovering the impositions and the deceits that have been practiced upon us, and sometimes because of the deceits and the intrigues practiced on the people we grow pessimistic and think that humanity is deteriorating and that there is nothing honest or just under the sun. I do not feel that way at all. There are injustices and wrongs, but, thank God, there are millions of men and women who want the truth, who are seeking for the truth. Oftentimes they are deceived and the veneer prevents discovery of the genuine from the counterfeit. This tariff bill is a counterfeit; it is veneered in such a way that many will regard it as a bill in the interest of the American people; but sooner or later the veneer will be worn away and they will discover its hideous deformities and the excrescences which cling to it. Then they will repudiate it, as they repudiated the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, and the party which sponsored it.

But to return: This corporation—little corporation, with a capitalization of $275,000,000—which through its subsidiary, the Union Carbide Co., has a practical monopoly on domestic calcium carbide, paid out in dividends in the three years 1918, 1919, and 1920, $37,900,000. The Union Carbide Co., in the five years from 1913 to 1918, paid cash dividends of 42 per cent and stock dividends of 92½ per cent on its capital stock. This enormous business has been developed and has reached these unprecedented proportions with calcium carbide on the free list.

The Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation owns the following subsidiary companies: Union Carbide Co., the National Carbon Co. (Inc.), Linde Air Products Co., the Prest-O-Lite Co., Electro-Metallurgical Co., the Oxweld Acetylene Co., Michigan Northern Power Co., the Union Carbide Co. of Canada (Ltd.), Electric Furnace Products Co. (Ltd.), the Oxweld Railroad Service Co., Haynes Stellite Co., Dominion Oxygen Co. (Ltd.), Carbide & Carbon Chemicals Corporation, and 20 other subsidiary companies. This combination also, I assume, dictated the imposition of the rates contained in paragraph 2 of the bill, covering the following items—and I want Senators to listen to these items—acetaldehyde, aldol or acetaldol, aldehyde ammonia, butyraldehyde, crotonaldehyde, paracetaldehyde, ethylene chlorohydrin, ethylene dichloride, ethylene glycol, ethylene oxide, glycol monoacetate, propylene chlorohydrin, propylene dichloride, and propylene glycol, at 6 cents per pound and 30 per cent advalorem.

Although this corporation has a tremendous capital and profits, having paid 40 per cent dividends, as I have indicated, and increased its capitalization 92½ per cent, carbide is transferred from the free to the dutiable list and its products taxed now at 6 cents per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem. These commodities are not produced in this country; but, notwithstanding that fact, this combination was also able to dictate that an embargo be placed upon their importation, which was done in the emergency tariff act, which embargo is continued in force by the terms of the pending bill.

The bill, without necessity, and, indeed, without reason, increases the rates on a large number of articles of which for many years the imports have been negligible, amounting to less than 1 per cent of the domestic production. Even under the temperate rates of the Underwood tariff on these commodities there have been practically no importations, and it is altogether likely that putting of these articles on the free list would not result in any notable increase, the market being dominated by the American producer.

In cases where the American production makes the world market—and I assert this, Mr. President, as an axiom in political economy—there is, of course, no legitimate purpose in a prohibitive tariff or of any tariff so far as the protection of the domestic industry is concerned. Some of the articles of which the imports are negligible but upon which the rates of duty have been increased are covered in a table which I have before me.

Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment to examine this table.

I submit it as an illustration of some of the iniquities of this bill. Before this debate is over I shall present other tables of like character for the consideration of the Senate. Take, for instance, Mr. President, oleic acid, found in paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the bill. The duty under the bill as reported by the Senate committee is 1½ cents per pound. Senators will know that that acid is used very largely in the manufacture of oleomargarine, a butter substitute for the poor. The rate of duty in the Underwood law is 25 per cent ad valorem, which equals, as I figure it, one-half cent per pound; so that the tremendous increase in the rate is apparent. The domestic production for the fiscal year of 1914 was 40,000,000 pounds; the imports in 1914 were only 367,070 pounds. I have been unable to get the imports for the first nine months of 1921, but the quantity is insignificant. I have been able to obtain figures as to the exports, and they have been increasingly large. The domestic production in 1913–14, which covers the year before the World War, was 40,000,000 pounds, and the importations were only 367,000 pounds.

In paragraph 3 of Schedule 1 of the bill reported by the Senate committee the rate of duty on acetone is 25 per cent ad valorem, which is equal, as I figure it, to 2½ cents per pound. Under the Underwood law the rate is 1 cent a pound. Senators will see that the duty is therefore increased from 1 cent a pound to 2½ cents a pound. The domestic production in 1914 was more than 10,425,000 pounds while the imports were only 2,726 pounds, and the imports for the first nine months of 1921—I was able to obtain those figures—were only 54 pounds. That is the terrible competition to which we are subjected by Germany—an importation of 54 pounds! Yet we must swell the tariff from 1 cent a pound under the Underwood law to 2½ cents a pound. Why? Let Senators and the country answer the question.

On chloroform, found in paragraph 17 of Schedule 1 of the bill, the rate fixed by the Senate committee is 8 cents per pound. In the Underwood law the rate is only 2 cents per pound. The domestic production in 1914 was more than 1,333,000 pounds, and the imports were only 2,444 pounds. The imports for nine months of 1921 were 2 pounds.

That is destructive (?) competition, is it not? We are about to be destroyed by Germany and these awful European and Asiatic nations. Why put this high tariff upon chloroform? It is to increase the profits of the drug manufacturers and the trusts that manufacture chloroform.

Paragraph 29 of Schedule 1: Compounds of pyroxilin, unfinished, under this bill carry a duty of 40 cents per pound; under the Underwood bill, 25 per cent ad valorem. The domestic production in 1914 was valued at $8,876,509. The imports in 1914 were less than 1 per cent. There was no importation to speak of; nothing that could be competitive, less than 1 per cent, so that it was impossible to determine quite what they were. The imports for nine months of 1921 were only $35,311, and the exports for nine months were $1,771,299. There we have a domestic production greatly in excess of the domestic market, and we ship abroad and sell nearly $2,000,000 worth, and we import $35,000 worth, and yet we put this enormous tariff upon it! It can not be defended or justified.

Take formaldehyde. Everybody is familiar with the importance of that, not only for sanitation but for other purposes. The tariff duty fixed in this bill is 2 cents a pound. The duty in the Underwood bill was 1 cent a pound. They have raised it 100 per cent. The domestic production was 8,426,247 pounds in 1914, and the imports in 1914 were less than 1 per cent; not only then but during the war. It was not in competition with us then, in the pre-war days and during the war. Let us see what the situation now is. For nine months in 1921 the imports were only 85,769 pounds, and the exports were valued at $275,901, showing again that the domestic production largely exceeds the consumption and that we must find markets abroad, and we did find markets abroad; and yet we put a higher tariff on this article, not because there is foreign competition but to enrich the manufacturers of the product.

Let me take the item of inks, paragraph 41 of this schedule. Under this bill 30 per cent ad valorem is fixed. Under the Underwood bill it was 15 per cent ad valorem. The rate has been doubled. As a matter of fact, inks ought to be on the free list. Everybody uses inks, the poor as well as the rich; but we must double the tariff on inks, and penalize the American people. The domestic production of inks, writing and printing, in 1914 exceeded $16,000,000 in value. The imports for the same year, 1914, both for writing inks and printing inks, were only approximately $32,000. But they say: "Oh, that was in 1914; but think of the terrible menace that Germany now is, with her tremendous chemical activities," which, of course, is a myth, but it is used as a pretext to support unjust and unjustifiable rates. What are the imports? For the nine months of 1921 the entire value of writing inks was $3,096 and printing inks $4,595.

We are all familiar with castor oil. Some of us as boys remember castor oil. It was the family medicine. If we had a cold, castor oil was administered. If we had a fever, castor oil was the remedy. It was a sort of a universal panacea. Castor oil is still of vital importance, not only in a medicinal way but in other ways. The rate of duty under the Senate tariff bill is 3 cents per pound. Under the Underwood bill it was 12 cents per gallon, or approximately 1½ cents per pound. It is increased 100 per cent. What about the production? One would suppose that as an excuse for laying tariff rates a home industry or a new industry was being established, and that it could not thrive without protection; and yet we find that in 1914 the domestic production was 20,423,000 pounds, and the imports 80,000 pounds. The imports for the nine months of 1921 were 120,000 pounds, and there were exports, as I recall, in excess of that amount, but the exact figures I do not carry in my mind.

Plasters, all sorts of porous and other plasters—25 per cent ad valorem is the tax fixed by this bill; under the Underwood bill, 15 per cent ad valorem. The domestic production in 1914 was in excess of $1,000,000, and the imports were $10,929, and the imports for the nine months in 1921 were only $9,754, and there were some exports; so that the imports are less now than they were in 1914, and the production has increased. So in the future those who use porous plasters are compelled to pay an additional tax to the manufacturer, because the manufacturer of this article has been able to secure the legislation which he wants.

Let me discuss briefly paragraph 63 of schedule 1, paints. The duty on paints under that paragraph amounts to 25 per cent ad valorem under this bill, 15 per cent ad valorem under the Underwood bill. The domestic production in 1914 was more than $112,000,000, and the imports were only $500,000, and the imports for the nine months of 1921 were only $155,000. As the imports have diminished, we must raise the rates. As the possible menace of foreign competition vanishes, we must increase the rates, to enrich still further the domestic manufacturer. How can that rate be justified on the paints that are embraced in that paragraph, which are so important in our domestic and economic life?

Take the item found in paragraph 67, chrome yellow—30 per cent ad valorem under this bill, 20 per cent ad valorem under the Underwood bill. That was entirely too high, in my opinion. The production in 1914 was 5,747,317 pounds. The imports were only 3,678 pounds, and the imports for the nine months of 1921 were 28,957 pounds.

It will be seen that this is all a myth about the inundation of foreign products, and particularly from Germany. Let me pause here to state that soon after the war the producers of dyes in the United States, who I have asserted on the floor of the Senate, and I assert again, constitute a monopoly, contributed to a propaganda that Germany had an enormous surplus of dyes, and was about to destroy the dye manufacture in the United States. It was absolutely untrue, and was known to be untrue.

The propaganda intended to mislead the American people and to pave the way for a dye embargo which was later obtained, and the American public had to pay for it and are paying for it now. For dyes the average cost of which before the war was substantially 25 cents per pound we have been paying under this embargo $1.07 and $1.08 per pound. The American people have been robbed, and, of course, the manufacturers of textiles have been compelled to pay more for the dyes than they formerly did, and that has been reflected in the prices of the finished commodities. Ladies who buy their dress goods and men who buy their shirtings are compelled to pay tribute to the dye monopoly, which was powerful enough to force through Congress a dye embargo, and is powerful enough to procure the insertion of extortionate rates in this bill, as will be seen before we conclude discussing it.

Paragraph 68 covers gas black, lampblack, and so forth. Under this bill the rate is 30 per cent ad valorem. It was 15 per cent ad valorem under the Underwood tariff bill. The production in 1914 was $1,464,000, and the imports for that year were only $26,000. The imports for the nine months of 1921 were only $16,425, and our exports were $905,608. We go out and compete in the markets of the world and sell a large proportion of our domestic product in competition with the world, with Germany and Switzerland and England, where these pigments are made. We competed with those nations and sold nearly a million dollars' worth of these pigments in nine months of 1921 and imported only $16,000 worth. Yet they demand virtually an embargo. How can it be justified? If we were not selling abroad, there would be some greater excuse; but when we can compete with the world, what is the excuse?

Paragraph 69 covers litharge, on which under this bill the tariff is 2½ cents a pound. It was very high under the Underwood bill, 25 per cent ad valorem, or practically 2 cents a pound. That has been increased in this bill from 2 to 2½ cents a pound. And yet in 1914 we produced 75,478,000 pounds and imported only 35,500 pounds. In the nine months of 1921 for which the figures are available our imports were only 100 pounds. Yet we are asked to erect an embargo and tariff walls to protect us against that frightful invasion.

The rate on white lead is 2½ cents a pound under this bill. White lead is used by the farmers; it constitutes the basis of their paints. It is needed upon the farms, and it is needed in the erection of houses. It is one of the important products of our country, important to the poor as well as to the rich. The rate is fixed at 2½ cents a pound in this bill; it was 2 cents a pound under the Underwood bill, and that was very high, in my opinion. In 1914 we produced nearly 300,000,000 pounds of white lead and we imported only 700,000 pounds. Last year, nine months of 1921, when this great invasion that is to destroy us was coming, we imported 123,116 pounds, but we exported 8,647,947 pounds. Why pay tribute again by this extortionate tariff to this great Chemical Trust, which reaches out and robs the farmer and robs the American people? Yet it goes into the world and competes in the markets of the world and ships abroad tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of pounds.

On varnishes this bill fixes a tariff of $2.20 per gallon. That is equivalent, as I figure it, to about 35 per cent ad valorem. There is provided a specific tax of 35 cents per gallon, or 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suppose my colleague does not care about being interrupted, but I thought perhaps wherever we have reduced the Underwood rates, as we have in the case of white lead, which is used by the farmers of the country and so many other people, it ought to be noted in the RECORD. At least let the American people know that we have reduced some of the Underwood tariff rates.

Mr. KING. I will say to my colleague that before I conclude I shall give him and the other Republicans credit for every reduction which they have made in this bill. I am speaking of the schedule I am particularly addressing myself to. I will show the increases, the departures from the Underwood bill, and the transfers from the free list in the Underwood to the tax list in this bill, and I will show wherever there has been a decrease from the rates in the Underwood bill. I can assure my colleague that I want to give him and the Republican Party all the credit they are entitled to. I believe that he is entitled to credit, and has resisted many unjust demands for higher rates. I think I can say, in parenthesis, that if my colleague's views had been followed this bill would not have as many indefensible provisions as now appear.

The domestic production of varnishes for the year 1914 was $33,214,949. What do Senators think the imports were for the same year? They were $55,787, as against $33,000,000. The imports last year, for the nine months for which figures are available, were only $63,000, and we exported, in competition with the world, $2,671,668. Yet we want this enormous tariff.

On potassium iodide this bill lays a duty of 25 cents per pound. The rate in the Underwood bill was 15 cents per pound. The production in 1914 was 521,678 pounds, and the imports were 169 pounds only. The imports for the nine months available of 1921 were only 226 pounds. Yet we are asked to increase the tariff, with only 226 pounds imported.

The next item to which I shall refer is sodium carbonate, or sal soda. Everyone is familiar with the importance of that product. Under the bill a specific rate of one-quarter of a cent per pound is levied, as against one-eighth of a cent under the Underwood bill, or an increase of 100 per cent. The production in 1914 was 106,591 tons. The imports were 80 tons. The imports for the nine months of 1921 available were only 80 tons, and our exports 7,000 tons. That demonstrates, of course, that we had a surplus of production, and we had to find a market. We found it in the world. We imported 80 tons. Many considerations would explain these very small importations, but the deductions to be drawn from these figures are that the surplus was so great that we sought a market abroad and obtained it, found a market for 7,000 tons. Now, we are importuned to pass this bill because the deluge is upon us, and it is necessary to keep back this rising tide which threatens to inundate and destroy our prosperity.

In paragraph 78 a tariff of 1¾ cents a pound is levied on sodium chromate. Three-fourths of a cent per pound was the specific rate of the Underwood bill. We produced in 1914 23,648,000 pounds and we imported 11,146 pounds. There were no imports in 1921, none even threatened, but there were some exports in 1921, the exact amount of which I have been unable to ascertain, because they have not yet been reported. Yet we are asked to raise that rate from three-fourths of a cent per pound to 1¾ cents per pound, or more than 100 per cent; it is 125 per cent, as I hastily figure it in my head.

Now, take sodium hydroxide. Under this bill the rate is a half a cent a pound. Under the Underwood bill the tariff was a specific rate of a quarter of a cent per pound, an increase of a hundred per cent. In 1914 we manufactured 425,078,000 pounds and we imported 668,714 pounds. The imports in the nine months of 1921 were 645,694 pounds and our exports were 26,810,000 pounds. We exported in nine months last year nearly 27,000,000 pounds, finding markets in the world, competing with the world, and imported only 645,000 pounds plus. Of course, our production exceeded 425,000,000 pounds in 1914.

I come now to fustic extract. The tax under this bill is 25 per cent ad valorem. It was three-eighths of a cent per pound under the Underwood bill. In 1914 we produced 4,509,943 pounds. Our imports were only 1,212 pounds. I was unable to obtain the figures of the exports or imports for 1921. They were not available in the Tariff Commission or in the Department of Commerce; at least, I was unable to obtain them.

I will refer briefly to paragraph 37 of this bill, covering flavoring extracts. Twenty-five per cent ad valorem is the rate levied by this bill. Twenty per cent ad valorem was the rate under the Underwood bill. Our production in 1914 was $11,380,423, and our imports were only $4,000. Our imports for the nine months of 1921 were $24,210, and our exports $705,852.

Mr. President, later, at another time, if afforded the opportunity, I shall present to the Senate information with respect to other items in this schedule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Did the Senator ask permission to have the table printed?

Mr. KING. I would like to have this printed as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Products importations of which in 1914 were 1 per cent or less of domestic production and rates of which in Senate tariff bill are higher than Underwood law.

Paragraph No., Senate bill.	Article.	Rate of duty, Senate tariff bill.	Rate of duty, Underwood law.	Domestic production, 1914.	Imports, 1914.	Imports, 1921 (9 months).	Exports, 1921 (9 months).
1	Oleic acid	1½ cents per pound	25 per cent ad valorem, equals ½ cent per pound.	40,000,000 pounds	367,070 pounds	[1]	[1]
3	Acetone	25 per cent ad valorem, equal to 2½ cents per pound.	1 cent per pound	10,425,817 pounds	2,726 pounds	54 pounds	[1]
17	Chloroform	8 cents per pound	2 cents per pound	1,333,954 pounds	2,444 pounds	2 pounds[2]	[1]
29	Compounds of pyroxylin (unfinished).	40 cents per pound	25 per cent ad valorem.	$8,876,509	[3]	$35,311	$1,771,299.
38	Formaldehyde	2 cents per pound	1 cent per pound	8,426,247 pounds	[4]	85,769 pounds	$275,901.

[1] Statistics not available.
January 1 to July 1, 1920.
[2] Import of unfinished pyroxylin plastics less than 1 per cent of domestic production.
[3] 1921 Tariff Commission Survey—Imports prior to and during war less than 1 per cent domestic consumption.

Products importations of which in 1914 were 1 per cent or less of domestic production and rates of which in Senate tariff bill are higher than Underwood law—Continued.

Paragraph No., Senate bill.	Article.	Rate of duty, Senate tariff bill.	Rate of duty, Underwood law.	Domestic production, 1914.	Imports, 1914.	Imports, 1921 (9 months).	Exports, 1921 (9 months).
41	Inks	30 per cent ad valorem.	15 per cent ad valorem.	Writing inks, $2,500,000; printing inks, $14,000,000.	Writing inks, $21,983; printing inks, $11,155 [1]	Writing inks, $3,096; printing inks, $4,595; all others, $9,176.	$775,127.
50	Castor oil	3 cents per pound	12 cents per gallon (1.5 cents per pound).	20,423,000 pounds	80,000 pounds	128,000 pounds	[2]
61	Plasters	25 per cent ad valorem.	15 per cent ad valorem.	[3]	$10,929	$9,754	[2]
63	Paints	do	do	$112,408,700	$500,000 [7]	$155,000	[2]
67	Chrome yellow	30 per cent ad valorem.	20 per cent ad valorem.	5,747,317 pounds	3,678 pounds	28,957 pounds	[2]
68	Gas black, lampblack, etc.	do	15 per cent ad valorem.	$1,464,000 [4]	$26,000	$16,425	$905,608.
69	Litharge	2½ cents per pound	25 per cent ad valorem (2 cents per pound).	75,478,000 pounds	35,500 pounds	100 pounds	[2]
69	White lead	do	2 cents per pound	285,972,000 pounds	700,000 pounds	123,616 pounds	8,647,947 pounds.
72	Varnishes	$2.20 per gallon and 35 per cent; 35 cents per gallon and 35 per cent; 25 per cent ad valorem.	$1.32 per gallon; 10 per cent ad valorem	$33,214,949	$55,787	$53,000	$2,671,668.
75	Potassium iodide	25 cents per pound	15 cents per pound	521,678 pounds [5]	169 pounds	226 pounds	[2]
78	Sodium carbonate (sal soda).	¼ cent per pound	⅛ cent per pound	106,591 tons	80 tons	80 tons	7,000 tons.
78	Sodium chromate and dichromate.	1¼ cents per pound	¾ cent per pound	23,648,000 pounds	11,146 pounds	None	[2]
78	Sodium hydroxide	½ cent per pound	¼ cent per pound	425,078,000 pounds	668,714 pounds	645,694 pounds	26,810,068 pounds.
36	Fustic extract	25 per cent ad valorem, equal to 2 cents per pound.	⅛ cent per pound	4,509,943 pounds	1,212 pounds	[1]	[2]
37	Flavoring extracts	25 per cent ad valorem.	20 per cent ad valorem.	$11,380,423	$4,000	$24,210	$705,852.

[1] 1921 Tariff Commission Survey—Imports in 1914 less than one-tenth of 1 per cent domestic production.
[2] Statistics not available.
[3] Domestic production in 1914 at least $1,000,000.
[4] Domestic production in 1916.
[5] Domestic production in 1918.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is evident from the data contained in the foregoing tabulation that the imposition of increased rates of duty upon the aforesaid articles will neither appreciably increase the consumption nor expand the market for the domestic manufacturers of these commodities. The only effect of the higher rates will be to increase the price of these commodities in the home market to the detriment of the consuming public and of the industries which use these commodities as necessary materials for the fabrication of their products.

Among these articles upon which are imposed higher rates of duty, inks, castor oil, plasters, paints, varnishes, and flavoring extracts are finished products as far as consumption is concerned and pass to the trade in the form in which the duty is imposed. Of the other products in the table, compounds of peroxylin (unfinished) are used for the manufacture of combs, mirrors, and other toilet articles and for artificial leather and artificial silk; chloroform is used as an anesthetic, solvent, and antiseptic; formaldehyde is widely used as an antiseptic, disinfectant, and preservative and for the manufacture of products used in competition with hard rubber; oleic acid is used in the manufacture of textile soaps, patent leather, and lubricating compounds; acetone is used as a solvent for fats, resins, and gums and in the manufacture of chloroform; gas black and lampblack are used as fillers for rubber and in the manufacture of printing inks, stove polishes, and paints; litharge is used in the manufacture of paints, glass, and pottery and as a drier for oils; chrome yellow and white lead are used as pigments in the preparation of paints; potassium iodide is widely used in medicine and photography; sodium chromate and bichromate are used in the tanning of leather, for textile dyeing and printing, for pickling of brass and for bleaching oils and fats; sodium hydroxide, commonly known as caustic soda, is used in the manufacture of soap, mercerized cotton, cleaners, paper, dyes, and drugs; fustic extract is used in textile and leather dyeing and especially for dyeing cotton goods khaki color, used for soldiers' uniforms; and sodium carbonate, generally known as sal soda, has been previously described as being widely used in the arts.

How important these articles are to the great mass of the people must become obvious when we refer to the uses to which they are put, those uses showing that scarcely a day passes that the simplest citizen in the land, as well as the most powerful one, is not called upon to employ some of the products that are the outgrowth of the use, directly or indirectly, of these commodities.

In the case of the following important commodities, boric acid, of which the imports only amount to 5 per cent of the domestic production, the duty is raised to 200 per cent of the present rate; phosphoric acid, of which the imports only amount to 4 per cent of the domestic production, has been taken from the free list and made dutiable at 2 cents per pound; linseed oil, of which the imports only amount to three-tenths of 1 per cent and the exports amount to 20 per cent of the domestic production, the duty is raised to 262 per cent of the present rate; peppermint oil, of which the imports only amount to 5.5 per cent and the exports amount to 20 per cent of the domestic production, the duty is raised to about 200 per cent of the present rate; zinc oxide, of which the imports only amount to 4.5 per cent and the exports amount to 12 per cent of the domestic production, the duty is raised to 225 per cent of the present rate; potassium chromate and bichromate, of which the imports only amount to 5 per cent of the domestic production, the duty is raised to 225 per cent of the present rate; and sodium sulphide, of which the imports only amount to 6 per cent of the domestic production, the duty is raised 200 per cent of the present rate.

It will bear repetition that the imposition of the higher rates of duty in the pending bill upon the foregoing chemicals, medicinals, and allied products, will not expand the domestic market for these materials because the domestic market is at the present time almost exclusively supplied by the domestic manufactures, the imports, as indicated above, being negligible. It is a matter of some significance that among the principal producers of these chemicals, medicinals, and allied products are: E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.; Solvay Process Co. and General Chemical Co., subsidiaries of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation; Grasselli Chemical Co.; Sherwin Williams Co.; and Dow Chemical Co. These are the corporations which have been making the contention that no rates of duty would be adequate to protect the domestic dye industry. This contention appears to have been adopted by the majority of the Committee on Finance, because in the report of the committee on the pending bill, the committee states:

> It was found that the rates provided for dyes and coal-tar chemicals (in the House bill) * * * were wholly inadequate to protect the domestic industry. * * * Your committee has reached the conclusion that no rates in American tariff history would be adequate to protect this industry.

I wish I had the time to read the statements of many eminent protectionists and writers to the American Economist, one of the ablest protectionist papers that is published in the United States. That great organ of the protected industries has demonstrated, as a proposition in Euclid may be demonstrated, the un-American character of the embargo, its destructive and deadly consequences. They have charged that in the end it would prove destructive to the entire fabric of protection, and as a protectionist paper, a fair protectionist paper, it sees a menace to any defensible system of protection—I am making no concessions as to the honesty or defensibility of protection per se—in an embargo bill which discriminates in favor of one class of commodities and keeps out certain commodities in order that the domestic producer may force prices to such levels as his cupidity and avarice may dictate.

It is obvious what the result will be. If we give an embargo to the dye manufacturers, other manufacturers will demand an embargo. If it is good for the dye people to have a complete monopoly, it will be good for the woolen mills to have a complete monopoly and the cotton mills a complete monopoly, until finally the protective system is destroyed and the people have been turned over to be devoured by the monopolies which would be erected.

Let me say right here as a warning to those Republicans and to those protected industries and to those great trusts and corporations, if they do not heed the solemn warning of the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] when he called attention to the high rates in this bill and when he directed attention to what was needed to bring about prosperity, and refuse to reduce prices and maintain combinations and destroy competition, the American people will revolt against such industrial oppression, if not servitude, and in their wrath the business fabric of our country may be destroyed. If we can not preserve the competitive system, the people will turn to a paternalistic or socialistic régime, and every industry controlled or directed by corporations or trusts will be placed in strait-jackets, and there will be commissions and Federal agencies and Federal officials to take charge of the business life of the country, and private business will thus be destroyed.

As a friend of honest business and as one who is opposed to bureaucracy, to paternalism, to socialism, and believes that the business man should have a free field for success, unhampered by governmental regulations, I want to warn American manufacturers and corporations and the powerful business interests of this country that if they do not treat the consuming public fairly, if they destroy competition, if they perpetuate trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and to maintain high prices, the American people will rise in their wrath and pull down the temple of their prosperity. Then we will be menaced by socialism or other evils. People laugh when we talk about socialism developing and growing. Socialism will always appear as a supposed antidote to the aggressions of predatory wealth. Treat the great mass of the people fairly and there will be no demand for socialism. They believe in individualism. They want the individual to have a free field and an open and a fair fight in the race for life. That is all the average American wants. But he will rise up in his wrath, and he will tear down these gigantic corporations and trusts if they destroy the opportunity for individual initiative and individual development. So I want to warn the corporations and the trusts and those men who are writing these tariff schedules and who are demanding them that they are sowing to the wind and they will reap the whirlwind.

If the shoe manufacturer charges these extortionate prices, if the Steel Trust makes these enormous prices, if other corporations grow rich and distribute their ill-gotten gains until their stockholders can live in affluence and the workingmen, upon whose bowed backs rest our economic and our social fabric, are required to carry the increased burden, soon or later our economic system will crack with consequences few can visualize. It seems a cruel thing that peoples build only to see destruction. I sometimes think we are like little children, building houses upon the sand.

The waves come and wash them away. Men build mighty nations which rise to power and affluence; often they attain a high stage of civilization. Then evils develop, selfishness controls, liberty is taken from the masses, and decadence sets in. Wealth controls, and the rich and powerful in the end fall with the nation which their folly and their vices have corrupted. The historian tells us of such nations, and we wonder if "history hath but one page."

We think that this Republic is different from other nations. It is. Some think that it has the seeds of immortality. I do not know. I know that this Republic will last only so long as there is back of it the sense of justice and righteousness that after all must be the basis of those enduring and persisting things in life. Nothing can long endure that is unjust. No social organism can long persist that works injustice. No system of philosophy long endures if it is founded wholly upon error.

The theory of gravitation may some day be successfully controverted. Einstein is assailing it. So one by one our systems of philosophy perish; all of which demonstrates, Mr. President, that there are certain eternal verities, and that unless we get down to the bedrock of truth and of justice and of righteousness we are building upon the sands.

If we do not deal justly with the people, if we erect organizations that oppress, if we develop an economic system that works unequally and unfairly, there will be discontent and the seeds of social and political decay.

Mr. President, I am digressing. I return to the schedule.

Adverting now to the excerpt which I read from the majority report, the contention made in that report is not consistent with the representations officially made by these manufacturers to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in January, 1916, wherein they stated that duties of 15 per cent ad valorem and 3¾ cents per pound on intermediates, and duties of 30 per cent ad valorem and 7½ cents per pound on dyes, were adequate to develop and protect the domestic dye industry, and that these rates would satisfy the demands of the domestic manufacturers of dyes and coal-tar chemicals. In conformity to these representations and with the understanding arrived at by the Ways and Means Committee, the pending bill, as it passed the House, imposed duties of 30 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound on intermediates, and duties of 35 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound on dyes. The bill, as reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate, carries duties of 50 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound on intermediates, and duties of 60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound on dyes, duties which are practically double the duties imposed by the bill as it passed the House, and which are double the rates asked by the manufacturers in 1916 for intermediates and dyes. Moreover, the manufacturers in 1916 stated that the rates requested would develop and practically perfect the industry within five years, and that thereafter the specific duties would no longer be required.

Mr. President, I may ask later on—I shall not do so now—to put into the RECORD the testimony of these men who went before the committee in 1916 and said that the rates then asked for were all that would be required to develop the dye industry. The dye industry has developed to colossal proportions, but now they not only want the duties to be doubled, but they want an embargo. In addition to that, by an illegal sale of 4,500 patents taken out by Germans and registered in the United States by an illegal confiscatory act, they have taken those so that they can invoke the patents and keep out any competition. Not satisfied, however, with that, they now want an embargo; and not satisfied with that, they want to put, as I shall show later, a provision into this bill that has never found expression in any other tariff bill, a most anomalous thing, to make it a crime to bring in certain products in a certain manner, and confiscation thereupon ensues.

The fact is that in the intervening time the domestic dye industry has expanded its production so that over 91 per cent of the domestic consumption is now supplied by the American manufacturers, and, in addition to that, the exports of dyes for 1920 amounted in value to $25,000,000, or approximately 30 per cent of the value of the domestic production.

The contention that the rates of duty imposed by the bill will not protect the industry can not be sustained. The fact is that these rates will act as an effectual embargo, as far as the bulk of the American consumption is concerned. Not only are these rates without precedent but the bill invests the President with authority to increase by 50 per cent the rates of duty to be imposed upon dyes, intermediates, and other finished coal-tar products, which means that the President may impose duties of 75 per cent ad valorem and 10½ cents per pound on intermediates and duties of 90 per cent ad valorem and 10½ cents per pound on dyes and finished coal-tar products. But this does not represent the limit of the reaching out of the dye manufacturers to prohibit the importation of intermediates, dyes, and coal-tar products. The President is granted authority in the bill to require by proclamation that the ad valorem duties be imposed upon the American market value of the dutiable commodities, which means, of course, that the President may impose duties of 90 per cent ad valorem on dyes and finished coal-tar products based on American valuation. The average American selling price for dyes produced in this country in 1920 was $1.08 per pound. Upon this valuation an ad valorem duty of 90 per cent would amount to $0.972, which, with the addition of a specific duty of 10½ cents, would make the duty per pound come to $1.077, which approximately equals $1.08, the average selling price of the dyes, and is equivalent to an effectual duty of 100 per cent on the American selling price of the dyes. But even under these conditions, if an American manufacturer of textiles were willing to pay a premium of 100 per cent for some rare or desirable dye, he might import it and thus satisfy his fancy or the need of his business. But this does not meet the demands of the dye combine. It demands an absolute embargo; and accordingly the majority of the committee reports an amendment to the House bill which extends the operation of the embargo enacted in the dye chemical control act approved May 27, 1921, for the period of one year after the approval of the pending bill, and another amendment which invests the President with power to extend the embargo for another year. Mr. President, we have in these provisions the very consummation of monopolistic avarice, exclusion, and domination.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrison	McKellar	Phipps
Brandegee	Heflin	McKinley	Poindexter
Broussard	Johnson	McNary	Ransdell
Bursum	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Rawson
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Sheppard
Caraway	Kellogg	Nelson	Smoot
Curtis	Kendrick	Newberry	Sutherland
Dial	Keyes	Nicholson	Swanson
Edge	King	Norbeck	Townsend
Ernst	Ladd	Norris	Warren
Fletcher	La Follette	Oddie	Watson, Ga.
Glass	Lenroot	Overman	Weller
Gooding	Lodge	Page	Willis
Harris	McCumber	Pepper

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is absent on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4810) to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China.

The message also announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4382) to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. KINKAID, Mr. SINNOTT, and Mr. HAYDEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were subsequently signed by the Vice President:

S. 157. An act for the relief of the Rosen Reichardt Brokerage Co., of St. Louis, Mo.;

S. 518. An act to carry out the provisions of an act approved July 1, 1902, known as the act entitled "An act to accept, ratify, and confirm a proposed agreement submitted by the Kansas or Kaw Indians of Oklahoma, and for other purposes," and to provide for a settlement to Addie May Auld and Archie William Auld, who were enrolled as members of the said tribe after the lands and moneys of said tribe had been divided;

S. 667. An act for the relief of John B. H. Waring;

S. 1077. An act to authorize the payment of $5,000 to the Government of Japan for the benefit of the family of Torahachi Uratake, a Japanese subject, killed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, on November 25, 1915;

S. 1610. An act to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.;

S. 1733. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the president of the Milwaukee Press Club, of Milwaukee, Wis., the bell of the wrecked cruiser Milwaukee;

S. 1767. An act for the relief of the owner of the derrick Capitol;

S. 2147. An act to authorize patent to the Ed E. Richardson Co. (Inc.) of certain lands;

S. 2765. An act for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.; and

S. 3268. An act to authorize the Chicago, Detroit & Canada Grand Trunk Junction Railroad Co., or its successors or assigns, to lease certain of its properties in the State of Michigan.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 9981.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representattives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices.

Mr. WARREN. The situation is such that it can only be handled by getting the bill back to conference. So I move that the Senate still further insist upon the amendments in disagreement, that the House be asked for a further conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. GLASS conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me for just a moment before he proceeds with his speech?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, at the beginning of the discussion of this tariff bill it might be well for those who advocate it to know the views of some of the leading agriculturists of the country touching its provisions. I noticed in one of the papers of yesterday, I think, an item which I should like to have read from the desk. Mr. Marsh, who is referred to in the article, is a representative of great farming organizations over the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

DECLARES POLICY OF G. O. P. IS "FARMERS BE DAMNED."

The Jones-Green ship subsidy bill, now pending in Congress, will "increase ocean freight rates just as the Esch-Cummins law increased railroad freight rates," Benjamin C. Marsh, director of the Farmers' National Council, declared in a statement yesterday.

"This bill, plus the McCumber tariff bill, will be the last straw to break the farmer's back," Marsh said, "when it is piled on top of the Government's denial of adequate credit to farmers and refusal to enact legislation to stabilize the price of farm products. This combination of measures against the farmers, devised with the approval of the President of the United States, makes it clear that the administration's policy is 'the farmers be damned.'"

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator from Mississippi is through with what he has to say.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to incorporate another short article in the RECORD. Before I yield to the Senator from Utah, let me say that this statement of Mr. Marsh ought to be a warning to the Senator and his colleagues who propose to vote for the bill.

Now, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I just want to say to the Senator from Mississippi that no doubt Mr. Marsh will thank him for putting his statement in the RECORD, because no doubt it will be taken from the RECORD and sent out through the country in order that Mr. Marsh may collect a little money to go on with his propaganda. If the Senator knew Mr. Marsh, I doubt very much whether he would encumber the RECORD with a statement like that.

Mr. HARRISON. That is from one of the leading Republican papers of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not from a Republican paper; it is from Mr. Marsh.

Mr. HARRISON. The statement was printed in a Republican paper——

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. And it quotes Mr. Marsh, and they thought it was a news item. Mr. Marsh is recognized as the representative of a number of farmers' organizations in this country, and I am surprised that the Senator should think that Mr. Marsh would try to advertise himself in any such way.

Mr. President, that statement from Mr. Marsh did not seem to find any welcome on the other side; but the attention of the Senate has already been called to the fact that the other day there was an election for the selection of a nominee in Illinois. A very distinguished member of the present Ways and Means Committee was a candidate for renomination. Running against him was a man by the name of Mr. Frank Reid.

Mr. Reid made his campaign upon certain well-defined issues. Mr. COPLEY, the gentleman I have in mind, being a member of the Ways and Means Committee, naturally espoused the provisions of the Fordney tariff bill, or the "Fordney folly," as I might call it, and no doubt he would be for the "McCumber muddle" if he were a Member of the Senate. After Mr. Reid was nominated by some 5,000 votes over the present member of the Ways and Means Committee he gave out a statement and assigned the reasons why he received this very large majority over the sitting Member of Congress, one who had assisted in drafting a Republican tariff bill. So I want to read, or have read from the desk, a part of the statement of Mr. Frank R. Reid, addressed to the New York World.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, April 16.

To the WORLD:

The Volstead law had nothing to do with my victory. The campaign was waged against the system by which a dozen men of great wealth dominate the action of Congress on matters of tariff and taxation and use their great power to secure legislative protection of their own special interests.

I showed the financial and business interests of the 17 Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, of which 11, including COPLEY, are millionaires or multimillionaires, and urged the necessity of having a "people's bloc" to oppose this "millionaires' bloc" to return the power of government to the people.

I pledged myself to uphold the policy of progressive, independent men in Congress who believe that the interests of the mass of the people deserve first consideration. I campaigned against the present certificate form of bonus bill in favor of a cash bonus to be paid out of excess-profits tax and surtax or from foreign loans. Condemned COPLEY'S action in supporting the repeal of the excess-profits tax and in supporting the reduction of the surtax on incomes; also the action of COPLEY and the Ways and Means Committee on the dye embargo.

FRANK R. REID.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Reid was the nominee by some 5,000 majority.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he has some of the publicity literature of Mr. Reid, showing what the issues in the campaign were?

Mr. HARRISON. I will ask the Secretary to read the matter just following that statement, issued the day after Mr. Reid's nomination, showing what he said in some of his campaign literature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

LIST OF 11 MILLIONAIRES ON GREAT HOUSE COMMITTEE.

Mr. Reid also sent to the World an extract from his campaign literature, in which he said:

"Who are the men who frame the revenue and impost laws of the Nation which vitally affect the interests of every business man who has something to sell or manufacture, every farmer who produces a bushel of grain or a pound of beef or hogs, and every wage earner in the eleventh district?

"The committee is composed of 17 Republicans and 8 Democrats. The Republicans, of course, control the committee under the present administration; in fact, a bare half dozen of the leading Members dominate the proceedings of the committee and determine its action in respect to legislation on taxation, tariff, and other vital subjects."

He gave this list of the 11 rich men:

Chairman JOSEPH W. FORDNEY, Michigan, millionaire lumberman.

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, Ohio, a millionaire by inheritance, interested in various banking and industrial enterprises, including an interest in dye and chemical companies.

IRA C. COPLEY, Illinois, multimillionaire, controlling gas companies and three newspapers of the eleventh district, interested also in mining and other properties.

LUTHER W. MOTT, New York, wealthy banker, former president of the New York State Bankers' Association.

ISAAC BACHARACH, New Jersey, millionare real estate broker, first vice president and director of the Second National Bank and also director of Atlantic Safe Deposit & Trust Co., at Atlantic City.

ALLEN T. TREADWAY, Massachusetts, millionaire hotel owner and magnate.

CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE, Colorado, wealthy banker and stock raiser.

GEORGE M. BOWERS, West Virginia, millionaire banker and orchardist, president of People's Trust Co., Martinsburg, W. Va.

HENRY W. WATSON, Pennsylvania, wealthy retired business man, who made his fortune in various commercial and manufacturing enterprises.

Alanson B. Houghton, New York, a member during the special session, but recently resigned to become ambassador to Germany, a multimillionaire glass manufacturer.

THOMAS A. CHANDLER, Oklahoma, millionaire oil magnate.

Mr. Reid, who is 44, has figured as counsel in some noted cases. He was retained by the Federal Government in the Standard Oil case and other litigation. He was assistant corporation counsel of Chicago and has served in the legislature.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senate has just been regaled with an expression of the views of the distinguished and eloquent Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] relative to the pending tariff legislation. He has very properly, and within his rights, had read into the RECORD certain matters which he thinks bear upon it. I therefore ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point editorials from certain papers—the Albany (Ga.) Herald, the Rocky Mount (N. C.) Telegram, the Galveston (Tex.) News, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, and the Cincinnati Post. These are editorials setting forth the views of those papers and the views which they think are held by people in that section of our Union relative to the pending tariff bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator want to have them read?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not desire to delay the passage of the bill. I am in favor of the passage of the bill, and therefore do not desire to take the time of the Senate in having long articles read. I want to economize time.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator indorse all that is stated in these editorials?

Mr. WILLIS. I think they are very good reading, and that the Senator from Mississippi will profit much if he will follow the advice therein set forth.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is not willing to tell us that he indorses them before he puts them into the RECORD?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; I indorse them. The substance of the editorials is that the tariff bill ought to be passed at the earliest possible moment, without unnecessary delay, and I cordially agree with that sentiment.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EDITORIALS OF SOUTHERN PRESS ON SOUTHERN TARIFF ASSOCIATION.

[From the Albany (Ga.) Herald, March 17, 1922.]

It may not be true that "the South favors a high tariff," but it undoubtedly is true that there are few parts of the South in which there are not important interests clamoring for the protection of whatever they happen to sell in competition with foreign producers. It has been pretty clearly demonstrated that "the tariff is a local issue."

—

[From the Rocky Mount (N. C.) Telegram, March 17, 1922.]

The rather pointed question of F. R. Gooding, chairman of the farm bloc in the House, that if the South wanted a protective tariff, that they should vote for it, seemed to reach rather receptive ears down at Houston, Tex., recently when the Southern Tariff Association in convention assembled made it plain that they did by some unanimous votes on the matter. At any rate, what the chairman of the farm bloc wants is votes from southern Congressmen and Senators, and really one can wonder how they could reconcile that appeal with the platform on which most of them were elected. Incidentally it looks as though the South is little different from the rest of the Nation and they want to talk of protection for our goods and nonprotection for the other fellows.

—

[From the Galveston (Tex.) News, March 19, 1922.]

The members of the Southern Tariff Association, made up for the most part of men who were once tariff reformers, show all the zeal and intrepidity of the new convert. In their congress at Fort Worth the other day they "congratulated Congress"—though apparently not the country—"on the passage of the emergency tariff bill," and they also indorsed the "American valuation method of levying duties on imports."

—

[From the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.]

The greatest obstacle which stands in the way of obtaining proper recognition for southern products is the attitude of most of the Democratic Congressmen and Senators on this matter. They are assuming an attitude of opposition to the entire tariff program and apparently are willing to have the Republicans pass a measure favoring special industries and sections at the expense of the South in order to make political capital out of it.

—

OLD ORDER CHANGETH.

[From the Cincinnati (Ohio) Post, February 17, 1922.]

We are at the parting of the ways, politically and economically, in this country. "Old stuff," you say. Possibly, but let's see.

The Southern Tariff Association, composed entirely of Democrats, comes out with a declaration for a tariff twice as high as anything heretofore suggested on agricultural products.

Well, if everybody's for it—Democrats as well as Republicans—why not go ahead? Why delay? Why this talk about "no bill before August and probably none at all?"

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am in accord with the expressed wish of the Senator from Ohio, that whatever tariff bill shall be passed should be passed at an early date. I think the sooner the people of this country find out what sort of a bill they are going to have, the better for everybody concerned. In my humble judgment, the sooner the disaster comes and the recovery is reached the better it will be for the permanent prosperity of the country. I hope we may begin to vote on some of these items this afternoon.

I do not rise for the purpose of entering into any general discussion of this bill. I believe, however, that the very first item in the bill is typical of the purposes of the bill and that each Senator should thoroughly understand just what is proposed. I think each Senator should understand just what this bill means, and, inasmuch as the first item in the bill is an item taken from the free list and put on the dutiable list, it seems to me that the Senate should understand why this thing is done.

I do not believe the Senate ought to assume that the Committee on Finance would propose to take an item from the free list and put it on the dutiable list unless there were some reason for it. So, Mr. President, I call upon the chairman of the Finance Committee to explain to the Senate why acetic acid is taken off the free list and put upon the dutiable list. If the Senator from North Dakota will kindly furnish us with some information on this subject, I am sure I shall appreciate it, and I hope that all of the Senators will appreciate it, because they will be called upon to vote on each one of those items, and I respectfully request that the chairman of the Finance Committee give the Senate and the country the reason why acetic acid was taken off the free list and put upon the dutiable list. Will the Senator from North Dakota oblige us with some information on that subject?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the reason I can give for placing this particular item upon the dutiable list is the reason that permeates the bill throughout; it is to equalize the difference between what is supposed to be, as nearly as we can arrive at it, the cost of production abroad, including the cost of shipment into this country, and the cost of manufacturing in this country. The House itself took this item from the free list. The Senate committee has not amended the provision. Of course, I have not the evidence before me in all the hearings to follow each one of these items, but we believe that the evidence as to this item was such as to justify the committee in agreeing to the House provision, which seeks to place a duty on this article which will be the equivalent of the difference between the cost of production abroad, including the cost of transportation, and the cost of production in the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I must confess a surprise at the answer which has been given to us by the chairman of the Finance Committee. I have gone through the House committee hearings; I have gone through the Senate committee hearings, and there is not a word of testimony in the whole record regarding the cost of production of this article either in this country or anywhere else.

That, it seems to me, ought to be an astounding statement to the country. The Senator from North Dakota tells us in a solemn and serious way that they have tried to equalize, by the tariff, the cost of production in this country and the cost of production elsewhere, and here is an item affecting many of the vital interests of this country, about which there is not a line of testimony either in the House hearings or in the Senate hearings.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator certainly does not want that statement to appear in the RECORD for fear somebody in the future will read his remarks and then find that the statement does not conform to the facts in the case.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, if my statement does not conform to the facts, I hope the Senator will state what the facts are according to the record. I know there are some statements in the record to the effect that they need this tariff in order to let them keep up this enterprise, but there is not a single line of testimony in the record which shows the cost of production of this article either here or anywhere else.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am fearful the Senator has not taken time to read the record.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If I am misinformed, of course, I shall be glad to be corrected by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator did not have his attention called to this item, but if the Senator will turn to page 801 of the hearings——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have read page 801.

Mr. SMOOT. He will find that Mr. Bartram, representing the Shawinigan Products Corporation, of New York, testified in quite an extensive way, and beginning on page 804, down to and including 809, there is quite a description of the articles in which acetic acid is used in this country, and the reasons also are given why, in my opinion, there should be a duty imposed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. He does give a reason, but he nowhere tells what it costs to produce it, either here or anywhere else.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be the case, Mr. President, so far as the actual production of the acetic acid is concerned; but I simply rose to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that testimony has been given as to this item, and upon that, no doubt, the House based the duty upon acetic acid.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes, Mr. President, there has been testimony given upon the subject, and I agree again with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] that this case is not only typical of all, in many respects, but it is typical in respect to the kind of testimony on which the committee has acted. The kind of testimony which has been produced upon this item, and upon substantially every item in the bill, consists solely of the statements of interested parties as to how much they want. That is the kind of testimony there is in this record.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator ought to be fair. He ought to say also that the testimony against any duty whatever is also recorded in the hearings, and persons representing that side of the case were heard by the committee on every item about which they asked permission to appear. I recognize that the hearings are too extensive for all Senators to read; that is out of the question; but when the Senator has carefully examined the testimony he will find that in nearly every case interested parties on both sides have been heard.

I recognize that no tariff bill could be framed based only upon testimony either for or against a duty. One exaggerates one side, and the other exaggerates the other. I do not think there was ever a tariff bill taken under consideration by a committee of this body where hearings so extensive were permitted as has been done in connection with this bill. In fact we were criticized severely in the public press, and by Members of Congress as well, for the length of time that was given to the hearings.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The committee was kind enough to hear practically everybody who wanted to be heard. There were two classes of people heard, principally those who were interested in getting a tariff upon the importation of the articles. There were comparatively few witnesses who appeared and protested. Some of them appeared and protested vigorously, and upon this very item the only witness who appeared before the Finance Committee of the Senate was a witness who insisted that the item should be kept on the free list.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he does not think that the reason why they had such long hearings on the part of the committee, and from certain sources from which they wanted to hear, was to find some excuse for perpetrating the bill upon the country?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not like to question the purposes of other Senators. I can only state what occurred, and the Senate, and I hope the country, will themselves judge as to the purposes behind the bill.

The truth is that the bill could not have been framed on the theory just announced by the Senator from North Dakota, because there was no attempt at any time to obtain evidence as to the cost of the production of the commodities in this country or elsewhere. I make that statement as a general proposition. There may be a few exceptions to it, but I submit that I have no recollection of a single witness bringing before the committee his cost sheets and submitting them to cross-examination.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; and that never has been the practice in the making of any tariff bill from the day the first one was made up to the present time. I will say to the Senator, however, that in making the bill there were members and experts of the Tariff Commission with the committee at all times. The price at which the foreign article sold in this market was given to the committee. The price of the domestic article sold in the domestic market was also given. The testimony that they had gathered in the investigations which they had made shows that there was the difference which I have stated. While the hearings may not demonstrate anything as to the cost of this particular item for producing it in the foreign country or in this country, all the evidence that was collected by the Tariff Commission, as well as the evidence collected by the Reynolds investigation, was presented to the committee whenever a rate was to be decided upon.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the Senator has made a statement which implies two things; first, that the Tariff Commission furnished some evidence as to the cost of production in this country and abroad. The Tariff Commission itself had no evidence upon that subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that. I said the Tariff Commission furnished the price at which the foreign article sold in the American market as well as the price at which the product manufactured in America sold in the market alongside of it. It also demonstrated the fact that beginning with the latter part of 1921 the prices of chemicals coming into this country began to drop rapidly. Even for the first nine months of 1921, every report shows that there is not an item in the schedule but what the price involved was then decreasing, and decreasing rapidly.

I do not want to criticize the figures which were presented by my colleague this afternoon as to importations and exportations, but they were unfair from the very fact that he used the year 1914 to show importations.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I hope the Senator will not consume time in discussing something that I have had nothing to do with.

Mr. SMOOT. I was only leading up to what I wanted to say to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say that it is not fair for a Senator to take the importations of 1914 or the war-time importations, or any importations between that time and 1920, at the close of the war, and then compare them with the nine months of 1921 when the slump in industry came all over the world. Not only did our production in this country fall off more than our exports in many, many cases, in most of them in fact, but our own trade fell off in the United States until it was a mere skeleton of what it had been during the war. Of course, the figures that were presented were absolutely correct, so far as I could follow them and so far as I could remember them, but in order really to get at the position of the committee, in order to criticize the committee, the criticism ought to be based upon a fair statement of the facts.

Now, I will say to the Senator that on the particular item under discussion I have sent for my papers and think I will have them here within a few moments. I will then show the Senator just what the quotations were, what they are to-day, and, I think, the reason why the House made the rate three-quarters of a cent a pound on a certain strength of acetic acid.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does the Senator mean to say that these rates were made up from evidence which is not in the record?

Mr. SMOOT. The information which was given by members of the Tariff Commission, who were sent as experts from that commission, was not recorded; that is, there is no record of it made in our hearings. The Senator knows that has never been done. When the Underwood tariff bill was under consideration a Republican Senator was not allowed to go before the subcommittee even as a witness with relation to the rates. I know I applied in one or two cases for permission to appear before the committee, and I was a member of the Committee on Finance, too. I was told that no one was to appear before the committee unless invited to appear. That is the way we were treated in 1913.

But I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that no Senator and no Congressman has asked the Finance Committee to appear before us unless permission has been promptly granted. We have had Members of the House and we have had Members of the Senate from both sides of the Chamber before the committee, and they have been allowed a hearing upon any item in the bill whenever they have asked for it. It took a great deal of the time of the committee to listen to those statements, too.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am not entering any complaint at this time because I, as a member of the Finance Committee, was not able to get hold of the testimony which was not presented in the record. I am simply endeavoring now by questions to get before the Senate and the country the information on which the majority of the committee finally acted.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator now if he has not had members of the Tariff Commission before him as to the rates in this schedule?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, and those statements have not been printed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Certainly not.

Mr. SMOOT. And I do not know anything about what they have told the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. They probably told me just what they told the other members of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore, if they did that, the Senator has the same information that we have.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But I should like to know how the other Senators, who are not members of the Finance Committee, and how the country are to know the reasons for the action which the majority of the committee have recommended.

Mr. SMOOT. We expect the Senator from New Mexico to do just what he is doing now—to criticize every rate in the bill. We expect the opposition to do that, and they will do it. I have no objection to that at all. I have no objection to a Senator on this side of the aisle who does not believe in a rate that may be contained in the bill criticizing it. I think the Senator is well within his rights when he says that he thinks there should be no duty upon acetic acid. It is his privilege to say so, of course.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator will pardon me, then we are in this peculiar situation: The majority of the Finance Committee, upon evidence privately disclosed to it, has framed a tariff bill, brings it into the Senate and wants the Senate to vote upon it without a word of explanation, and from the fact that there are only three or four Republican Senators now present in the Chamber, I assume that they expect every Republican Senator simply to appear when the roll is called and ratify what the majority has done in secret session.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not going to ask the Senator how many Democratic Senators are now present, but to clarify one matter with reference to which the Senator has made inquiry, as to printing in the record all the evidence on which the committee may have acted, I wish to make a brief statement.

We ceased taking testimony, as the Senator knows, as a committee. We took no further testimony, but that did not prevent us from reading the commercial summary of cost of production and any other information which we could find. We have the Reynolds report, which the Senator has. That is not printed as a part of the hearings by any means, but it is subject to consideration. We have the monthly summary of the reports of importations and prices.

The Senator asked me a question awhile ago. I can not always turn immediately at a second's notice to give him the figures upon every one of these chemical items, but if he will turn to the report of the monthly summary of our importations and exportations, he will find the cost of acetic acid, at least the latest that we have; that is, the foreign cost here. He will find that for the same kind of acetic acid, which comes in in all characters of strength—but that which is imported, of course, comes in practically 100 per cent pure in condensed form, there is about 2 cents difference between the price at which it is imported and the American manufacturers' price. The latest price given is about 8 cents for the 100 per cent pure, as against 9½ cents for the American article of 80 per cent pure. So I do not think we are very far off in the 2 cents difference.

These were all examined at the time as we passed over the different items in the schedule. We had the monthly summaries before us, the Reynolds report before us, and the report of the Tariff Commission before us, which everyone has, and none of the three did we ever attempt to put in the record because they are already a part of the record.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the chairman of the Committee on Finance has just told us. He now brings forward some other evidence. I may say that the evidence to which he has referred has been available to the minority members of the committee, and I am quite familiar with it. I want again to call attention to the fact that neither he nor the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has presented a line of testimony from any source which bears out the first statement of the chairman of the Finance Committee, that these duties were levied for the purpose of equalizing the cost of production at home and abroad. There is not a line of testimony upon that subject.

The Senator from North Dakota further said that this item was typical of all the other items in the bill. I think he is right about that. The Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Utah really disclose the basis upon which this bill was founded.

They bring in here the Reynolds report as to prices. There is not a single report as to prices of acetic acid. If the majority of the Finance Committee had any evidence as to the prices of acetic acid in this country or anywhere else, they got it from some source which is not printed in connection with these hearings.

Mr. DIAL. How many manufacturers of that acid are there in this country?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I expect to reach that in a little while.

Mr. DIAL. Very well; I do not care to anticipate the Senator's discussion.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the replies of the two distinguished Senators, to my mind, reveal the basis which was used by the majority members of the Finance Committee in the preparation of this bill. What is it? The Senator from Utah said that he would send out and get the prices. The Senator from North Dakota has just referred to certain documents whereby prices may be ascertained. In my humble judgment that is all the basis that the majority of the Finance Committee ever had in the preparation of this bill. They simply wanted to ascertain the present prices in the American market and the prices abroad, and then to fix a duty which would give the American producer a monopoly of the American market.

That was done, Mr. President, without any investigation as to the profit which the American producer was making. Is not that an astounding situation to present to the people of this country? Without any regard to whether or not the American producer is still profiteering upon the people, they simply seek by means of this tariff bill not only to protect the American manufacturer with his present prices but in the great majority of cases to give him an absolute monopoly and enable him to increase his prices.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. If a tariff were based upon the prices at home and abroad, and those who wanted a tariff here were able in any manner to increase the price, they could, of course, increase the tariff by that operation?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is obviously quite right; it follows as a logical conclusion from the mere statement of the case. Mr. President, in most instances, as I firmly believe from a careful investigation of many of the items of this bill, the Finance Committee not only have put tariff rates in the bill for the purpose of enabling the present producers to sell at present prices but to enable them to increase those prices; and that, in my humble judgment, was the only purpose which the majority members of the Finance Committee had in framing the bill. That is a woeful spectacle, it seems to me; and I wonder how Senators on either side of the Chamber can sit patiently by and permit this thing to be done. They ought to understand each item; they ought to know just what this bill means.

Mr. President, there are some facts disclosed in the record bearing upon this question. It is necessary to reason them out; it is necessary to know the economic effect of the few facts which are presented. I am going to call attention to some of the things which do appear here.

Acetic acid, as I have said, was on the free list in the Underwood-Simmons law. It has now been put upon the dutiable list, but when the Senate is called in session, presumably for the purpose of voting upon the first committee amendment to the pending bill, the chairman of the Finance Committee has not a word to say in explanation of taking the item from the free list and putting it upon the dutiable list. My judgment is that whenever a tax is put upon the American people those who impose the tax ought to be able to justify it. They ought not to assume, or to expect the Senate and the country to assume, that there is a reason for it. That, however, is the woeful spectacle which is presented here to-day. Here is an item that enters into commerce, which enters into the manufacture of various necessaries of life, but not a word is in the printed record, nor have we heard a word from the lips of a single Senator justifying the placing of that tax upon the people.

We are serenely told by the distinguished Senator from Utah that the majority members of the Finance Committee expect the minority members and other Senators, if they hope to secure real light upon this question, to invite into private conversation some so-called expert from the Tariff Commission. I should like to know how that attitude is going to be justified before the people of this country? The majority of the committee come here and ask that a tax be placed upon the people without a word of explanation, and they tell us, if we want any information about it, we will have to go out and hunt it up for ourselves. I submit that whenever a tax is imposed upon the people the burden is upon those who propose it to justify that tax, but there is not a line in this entire record and not a word from the lips of any Senator to justify this item.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator does not object——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am going to read, I am sure, from the same book which the Senator from Utah has in his hands before I get through.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think the Senator is going to read from the same book which I have now before me. I wanted to tell the Senator what the Canadian rate is and the condition of the Canadian production of this commodity.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I intend to bring out that information.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care to interrupt the Senator, but I thought he wanted to know the reasons why we retained the duty on the commodity to which he is referring.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That leads to something else. The Senator says he thought I wanted to know why the committee imposed the duty. If the Senator can tell us, I will yield to him now.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not asking the Senator to yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will gladly yield. If the Senator can give us the information, I hope he will do so.

Mr. SMOOT. It is no favor to me for the Senator to yield. I merely thought, inasmuch as the Senator had asked the question, that I would tell him not only what I have already told him but of the duty which Canada to-day imposes upon acetic acid. The Canadian duty at this time is 25 per cent ad valorem, so that we can not ship a pound of acetic acid into Canada unless that duty is paid upon it on entering Canada.

Furthermore, during the war Canada developed a process of making acetic acid from calcium carbide, the strength of the acid so derived being 100 per cent, while the strongest acid that we can make by any process used in the United States is 80 per cent. Do we want Canada to furnish the American market with acetic acid, or do we want to have a duty of three-fourths of a cent a pound upon it in order to protect it?

I will also say to the Senator, although I do not wish to occupy his time now, that the prices quoted in Germany on acetic acid as compared to the production cost in this country justify the three-fourths of a cent a pound. The answer may not be satisfactory to the Senator, but that is the situation as it exists to-day.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like the Senator to continue his very enlightening remarks, and particularly to tell us the reasons which led him to believe this duty was justified.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think I have already stated a sufficient reason in justification of the duty. To sum up, the reason is that if we want this trade to remain in the United States, as it has in the past, then it will be necessary to impose the duty provided. On the other hand, if we want Canada to take that trade or Germany to take the trade, although Germany has not been a considerable factor so far, then acetic acid should be put on the free list. That is all there is to it. If we do not want our American laboring men to make this commodity in the United States let us put it on the free list; but if we want it to continue to be made here, rather than to be made in foreign countries, leave the three-fourths of a cent a pound duty upon it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Utah again wanders from the question. He has told us, however, that Canada imposes a tariff upon importations of these acids.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from New Mexico at that point?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am delighted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I am one of the Senators who are trying to obtain information, and it is immaterial to me whether the Senator from New Mexico or the Senator from Utah answers the question. To my mind, in framing a tariff bill it is extremely important to ascertain the cost of production at home and abroad. I have been one of those who believe in making up that difference by tariff duties. To my mind the prices at which the article is sold in this country and abroad would be proper evidence, but that is merely evidence; it is not conclusive by any means. To my mind the evidence which ought to govern——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is merely a circumstance, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a circumstance, that is all. We know, however, that prices are controlled and manipulated both here and in other countries, and the evidence, to my mind, which ought to be the predominating factor is the cost of production. I am exceedingly interested in what the Senator from Utah says about Canada, but he still has not told us whether Canada is producing this acid under this new process cheaper than we do, and I should like to know that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senator from New Mexico now, but I will call the Senator's attention to the matter in my own time.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; I shall be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I will give the account of just what happened during the war period in Canada, and the process by which acetic acid is made to-day, how it came about, and why it can be manufactured cheaper under that process than it is manufactured here. The Senator may ask us why we do not have that process.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course I should be glad if we had it, but I know there are a lot of things we do not have that we should like to have. I myself would go a good way to assist the American manufacturer in having that process.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator briefly right now, if the Senator from New Mexico will pardon me, that they have a patent on that process.

Mr. NORRIS. Do they have it patented in this country?

Mr. SMOOT. In this country, and in Canada, and in all the countries of the world as far as I know.

Mr. NORRIS. There we get into the law again.

Mr. SMOOT. Now we are getting into the patent law.

Mr. NORRIS. Into the patent law; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that in the past the American manufacturer could manufacture acetic acid with the freights in his favor if it were on the free list, although it was established here with just the duty that we have in this bill, three-quarters of a cent a pound, under the Payne-Aldrich bill; but since the development of the manufacture of acetic acid from calcium carbide the cost of producing it has been greatly reduced, and when the Senator gets through I shall put into the RECORD just exactly what has taken place. There is not any doubt, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, that if we could use the patent we could make it just as cheaply as it can be made in Canada.

Mr. OVERMAN. Have not we a process by which to make it?

Mr. SMOOT. No; we can not make it, because it is patented.

Mr. NORRIS. The legal effect is that the Canadians have a process of making it that cheapens the product?

Mr. SMOOT. They do.

Mr. NORRIS. And our Government has given them a patent by which they have a monopoly of that process in the United States, and they stick that patent in a pigeonhole and do not manufacture it, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. In the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. In the United States. They manufacture it in Canada and ship it in. The tariff law will not remedy that situation, no matter what it may be. That is a situation, however, that has been brought to my attention through patent legislation with which I was connected two or three years ago, that I think it is inexcusable for intelligent people to permit to remain on the statute books. There is an illustration of it. It is only one illustration. There are hundreds of them——

Mr. SMOOT. Thousands of them.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; thousands of them, it would be fair to say, in which that very thing happens; and yet it is an impossibility to get through Congress now a law that will remedy that situation in the patent business.

A firm gets a patent on the manufacture of acetic acid, let us say—in this case it happens to be foreigners, or perhaps our own citizens, in some cases—and perhaps they already have a monopoly on the manufacture of that acid and it pays them better to put the patent in a pigeonhole and not utilize it; so that the United States Government is in the position of giving to somebody a patent by which we give them by law a monopoly that is used to throttle our own people and make them pay exorbitant prices.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that when I was chairman of the Patents Committee I introduced into this body a bill requiring all patents to be worked in the United States or else to have the patent forfeited, and I never could get any action on it.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course the Senator could not. I know from my experience that that is so. I beg the pardon of the Senator from New Mexico, because we really are not talking about the tariff bill; but this happens to be something that I investigated and know something about.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to know if foreign countries do not do that?

Mr. NORRIS. They do; but let the Senator start out with that proposition and see where he will land. I have been at it, and I am glad to learn that the Senator from Utah has been at it, too. The Senator will not even get to first base. I say that without charging any wrong intent on the part of any Member of the House or of the Senate; but they are interested in other things, and you can not get them to consider a patent proposition. There are very few people in the House or in the Senate, perhaps not more than one or two, who understand the technicalities of the patent law; but any man who has investigated monopoly in this country will come in contact with the patent law, and if you start out to get that kind of a law passed you will have the opposition from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf of some of the most powerful combinations that you ever ran up against. You will not be able to see them always, but you will always find them there, and somewhere, somehow, they will be able to block you, and you will never get anywhere.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Mexico will pardon me——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Briefly.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps with this short statement I need not say anything more. In the United States acetic acid is made 80 per cent pure, and that is the highest percentage that can be made by several steps in the process. Even then it is concentrated, and that is an expensive step, to make 100 per cent acetic acid. In Canada, with their new process, they make it 100 per cent pure with the first step, only one process, and that one process is cheaper than our first process under the old plan.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the very last statement which the Senator has made is not fortified by anything that appears in this record. I have no doubt that he believes it, and he may have some private information on the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I can give to the Senator now, if he wants it, the source from which I get it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Let us have it. We want all the light we can get.

Mr. SMOOT. It is from the investigation that was made by the United States Tariff Commission and the report that they made upon it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Can the Senator turn to anything printed by the Tariff Commission which says that acetic acid can be produced in Canada cheaper than the lower grades of acetic acid can be produced in this country?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will get Tariff Information Surveys, 1921, Schedule A, Wood Chemical Industry, A-2, volume 1, on page 28, and read that, he will find a description of the Canadian process.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator has it before him, and I will ask him to read it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is a description of the process as I think I have already stated it briefly. It is headed:

ACETIC ACID FROM CALCIUM CARBIDE.

Large war demands for acetone as a solvent for explosives led to the commercial development of a process for making acetic acid from calcium carbide. It was intended to convert the acetic acid produced by this process into acetone, but this proved too expensive, and only acetic acid was produced.

This process was developed at Shawinigan Falls, Quebec, by the Canadian Electro-Products Co. Calcium carbide, which is produced at Shawinigan Falls in large quantities, is first treated with water to form acetylene gas, which is then chemically combined with water in the presence of mercury salt as a catalyst to form acetaldehyde. The acetaldehyde is then oxidized to acetic acid. The acid produced is of high purity and concentration in contrast to that produced from acetate of lime, which requires several distillations to concentrate and purify it.

That is the American process, as the Senator knows.

The original plant, with a capacity of 700 to 800 tons of acetic acid (100 per cent) per month, was destroyed by an explosion in the latter part of 1918. During the war the Canadian firm erected another plant with funds advanced by the United States Government.

This was during the war.

This plant was practically completed at the signing of the armistice, and soon after was put into operation. The disposition of claims of the Canadian firm against the United States Government, amounting to over $1,000,000, has not been announced up to the present time (December, 1920). The Canadian firm, however, controls the patent rights on the process and the necessary water power at Shawinigan Falls, and is alone familiar with the technical details.

The productive capacity of the present plant is about 650 tons per month of 100 per cent acetic acid.

Then it goes on with the information, and if the Senator will turn to this he will see that the price——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator has not yet read a statement that I have heard to the effect that the acetic acid produced by that Canadian concern can be produced cheaper than the lower grades of acetic acid mentioned in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah has read now that acetic acid 100 per cent pure is made in Canada by one process, and the Senator from Utah has also read from the Tariff Commission report that in order to make 100 per cent acetic acid in this country it is necessary to have two or three processes. No living man can say that they can make acid by the three processes as cheaply as they can make it by the one process.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have limited my inquiry to the grades below glacial acetic acid, or pure acetic acid, to which the Senator has been referring.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is where nearly all of it ultimately ends, in glacial acetic acid, because of the fact that it has to be purified, and the only reason why they do not make it 100 per cent pure is the fact that it takes the refining process. The Senator knows that if it could be done with one process all they would have to do would be to add water to it and make it any strength they wanted. Nobody is going to ship 28 per cent or 60 per cent acid when he can ship 100 per cent acid, and the freight rate would be no more on the 100 per cent acid than it would be on the 28 per cent acid; in other words, it is paying a rate of freight upon the impurities in the acid that must ultimately come out.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Now, I will ask the Senator another question: Is there anything in this testimony which shows that they use the glacial acetic acid for the purpose of diluting it and making a lower grade?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, they do not have to do that. The only reason why a lower grade of acid is made in the United States than in Canada is because of the fact that they have no process here by which they can make the 100 per cent acid. It is just the same as it was when the alizarin dyes were first made to take the place of aniline dyes. When they first made alizarin dyes they could only make them of a certain strength, and then they began making them stronger and stronger, and at last, instead of making a liquid, they made them into a powder, and the powder went directly to the user in all parts of the world, instead of having him pay freight upon the water in the liquid. It is exactly the same as this. Everybody wants the 100 per cent if it can be made by the process. It has to be purified to get it to that degree of strength.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. To me the humiliating thing about it is that if an American wants to get this acid he must go to Canada to get it, where it will be manufactured by machinery that was paid for by the taxpayers of the United States. Having paid for it and constructed their plant, we likewise gave them a monopoly in America, so that even our own citizens are prohibited from making it here without going to Canada and getting the consent of the beneficiaries of our financial benevolence.

Mr. SMOOT. This rate, Mr. President, would not be necessary, perhaps, in a certain part of the United States because of the freight rate, but Canada is at our door on the north, and calcium carbide is made in Canada on account of the wonderful water power they have in Canada. Calcium carbide is made from lime and coal, and in order to make it they have to have extreme heat, which melts the limestone and burns the coal with it, and the calcium carbide comes as the product of that extreme heat being applied to the limestone mixed with coal. They went to Canada because of the cheap water power to be found there.

In the State of New York, or in other States along the border between the United States and Canada, the Canadians have all the advantage in the world over Americans in making this acetic acid to-day. But in Kansas and the other Middle States, where freight rates will have to be paid on shipments from Canada, if it is made there, they would not need this protection. We have imported very little acetic acid in the past, but there is no doubt, with the new process that is under way now, controlled in Canada, unless we have a duty upon the article, the greater part of this industry, as far as the border States are concerned, as well as the Atlantic Coast States, will have its market taken by Canada.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator from New Mexico to yield to me again. He has been very kind, and I have been talking about something else most of the time, but I want to say just a word bearing on this item. The Senator from Utah has just suggested something which brought a thought to my mind.

The Senator has said that if we put this tariff on it will equalize the cost of production. That may be, and I do not know now whether I am going to vote for a tariff on this or to put it on the free list. It depends on what the evidence discloses further on. But I want to suggest to the Senator from Utah that if this process is controlled by a patent, a tariff duty is not going to save it. Nothing in the world could save it with our present patent laws. If some one has a patent he is absolutely the monarch. He can refuse to manufacture it himself and he can refuse to let anybody else manufacture it, and if he does consent to its manufacture he can put any conditions or terms or prices he pleases on the manufacture.

Mr. SMOOT. We have provided rates which will equalize the difference between the cost of manufacture in Canada and that in this country. It is a very cheap article.

Mr. NORRIS. I know that, and perhaps its importance is not so great. I would not have said anything about it if it had not been that it is really illustrative of other things. The point illustrates, for instance, the effect of the patent law on other articles which are much more important than this item. But I want to say to the Senator that if the cyanamid process for the extraction of nitrogen from the air is undertaken by the Government or anyone else at Muscle Shoals there will be as a by-product in that operation immense quantities of calcium carbide.

I do not know whether the Senator from New Mexico is familiar with it or not, but one plant at Muscle Shoals is now complete, and they use there what is known as the cyanamid process. It is as complete as any plant in the world, as up to date as any plant in the world to-day, and it is owned by the Government. Personally, I do not think it is the most modern. I think there are scientists who agree with the proposition that it may be thrown in the discard, but we constructed the plant there at a cost, in round numbers, of about $67,000,000. It is one of the largest and most complete plants. There is nothing superior to it anywhere in the world, as far as the plant itself is concerned, and they will use in the manufacture there, as I remember, 1,200 tons of limestone every day, which is converted into lime, and a large portion of it becomes calcium carbide as a by-product.

But we are met at once with the question of patent rights, private individuals having patents, and we are at their mercy to a great extent in the use of some of these by-products. Oxygen is another element that will be produced in immense quantities, but we can not handle it because somebody has a patent on it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I thank the Senators for their contribution to this discussion. I was just wondering whether it would be advisable for me to proceed this evening. I want to put into the RECORD, as briefly as possible, a statement of some of the facts on the production of this commodity, and I believe that I shall be able to demonstrate that the only effect of this tariff would be to aid in the monopolization of the product in the American market.

I understand the Senator from Mississippi desires to offer and have passed a resolution, and as it is getting near 5 o'clock, our usual time to adjourn or take a recess, I yield that the Senator may offer his resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the tariff bill be temporarily laid aside merely for the purpose of allowing me to offer a resolution, and I shall ask for its immediate consideration. I feel that there will be no opposition to it, because it calls for information which every Senator would want.

The resolution calls upon the Tariff Commission to send to the Senate as soon as practicable a report of the facts in the commission's possession, as well as their findings, touching the operation of the rates and the results of the rates which were carried in the emergency tariff act.

We were told, when that emergency tariff bill was passed, that it was the panacea for all agricultural ills, and that it would save the agricultural interests of the country. We knew at the time that it was largely "buncombe," but it has been some time since that bill was passed. The Tariff Commission have investigated the matter, I understand, and have information as to certain facts which the country is entitled to know, and which certainly the Congress is entitled to know.

So, in the wise consideration of this tariff bill, containing schedules where rates in some instances are increased over the rates carried in the emergency tariff act, some where the rates are the same, and some in which the rates have perhaps been reduced, I thought the Senate would go a long ways to get the facts from the Tariff Commission.

I therefore ask that this resolution may be read; that the tariff bill be temporarily laid aside; and that there be immediate consideration of my resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to laying the tariff bill aside, but I have no objection to having the resolution read at this time. To-morrow, if it is deemed wise, the Senator can ask unanimous consent for the consideration of his resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. I will ask to have it read, then, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 284), as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, such facts and findings as it may have in its possession from a study and investigation of the operations and results of the rates carried in the emergency tariff act approved May 27, 1921, and as extended by the act approved November 16, 1921.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, if the Senator from Utah thinks it is better to let the resolution go over until to-morrow, I can not object.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to have it go over until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over, under the rule.

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, some time ago I offered a resolution directing an investigation of alleged inefficiency in the administration of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. May I inquire the status of that resolution? Is it still on the table?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is on the Table Calendar, next to the last entry.

Mr. KING. I shall seek an early opportunity for its consideration. I shall not ask to have it considered to-night.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 26, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 25 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Lafayette French, jr., of Minnesota, to be United States attorney, district of Minnesota, vice Alfred Jaques, resigned.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Fred E. Sisson, of Colorado, to be register of the land office at Pueblo, Colo., vice James F. Drake, deceased.

APPOINTMENT IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Henry Edward Finnegan, of New York, to be aid, with relative rank of ensign in the Navy, in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, vice J. D. Crichton, promoted.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Charles D. Kirtley to be postmaster at Robertsdale, Ala. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

ARKANSAS.

Lela L. Henderson to be postmaster at Waldron, Ark., in place of H. L. Fuller. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

CALIFORNIA.

William L. McLaughlin to be postmaster at Sanger, Calif., in place of J. M. Qualls. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

FLORIDA.

Thomas Roden to be postmaster at Fort Pierce, Fla., in place of A. B. Brown, resigned.

GEORGIA.

Beulah L. McCall to be postmaster at Hinesville, Ga. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Gussie C. Lyon to be postmaster at Roswell, Ga. Office became presidential April 1, 1920.

ILLINOIS.

Thomas E. Cahill to be postmaster at Lake Bluff, Ill., in place of T. E. Cahill. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

James M. Carey to be postmaster at Maywood, Ill., in place of J. R. Pyne. Incumbent's commission expired July 7, 1920.

Clare E. Godfrey to be postmaster at Morris, Ill., in place of J. H. McGrath. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Raymond R. Rowland to be postmaster at Rutland, Ill., in place of J. R. Barclay. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

KANSAS.

John Woolman to be postmaster at Simpson, Kans. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

William Russell to be postmaster at West Mineral, Kans. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Frank W. Coleman to be postmaster at Oskaloosa, Kans., in place of W. B. Ford. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

KENTUCKY.

James Noble to be postmaster at Quicksand, Ky. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

George D. Montfort to be postmaster at Campbellsburg, Ky., in place of S. E. Coblin. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1920.

Ira W. See to be postmaster at Louisa, Ky., in place of Robert Dixon, resigned.

Willie G. Thornbury to be postmaster at Munfordville, Ky., in place of W. H. Atteberry, resigned.

MAINE.

Willard E. Day to be postmaster at Monmouth, Me., in place of E. A. Prescott. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

George O. Carr to be postmaster at Norridgewock, Me., in place of C. N. Staples, resigned.

MICHIGAN.

Floyd B. Gates to be postmaster at Mesick, Mich., in place of F. G. Hamilton. Incumbent's commission expired March 14, 1922.

MINNESOTA.

Archie M. Hayes to be postmaster at McGregor, Minn. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Arlie R. Wilder to be postmaster at Amboy, Minn., in place of M. T. Randall. Incumbent's commission expired August 7, 1921.

Charles C. Keller to be postmaster at Cloquet, Minn., in place of E. S. Scheibe, resigned.

MISSISSIPPI.

Charles W. Boen to be postmaster at Wiggins, Miss., in place of W. A. Davis. Appointee declined.

NEBRASKA.

Frank R. Morey to be postmaster at Gurley, Nebr. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

NEW JERSEY.

Nicholas T. Ballentine to be postmaster at Peapack, N. J. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Overton L. Snipes to be postmaster at Woodland, N. C. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Grace G. Berkness to be postmaster at Wolford, N. Dak. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

T. H. Hulbert Casement to be postmaster at Fordville, N. Dak. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Benjamin J. Schnedar to be postmaster at Pisek, N. Dak. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

OKLAHOMA.

Howard Blevins to be postmaster at Avant, Okla., in place of A. E. Howell, resigned.

Anna Lynde to be postmaster at Okarche, Okla., in place of C. J. Woodson. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Asa A. Puckett to be postmaster at Shattuck, Okla., in place of Edward Learnard. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Mary E. Collins to be postmaster at Lopez, Pa. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

McClean Stock to be postmaster at York, Pa., in place of E. C. Peeling. Incumbent's commission expired August 25, 1918.

TEXAS.

William B. McCrary to be postmaster at Cushing, Tex., in place of W. H. Pitman, resigned.

George A. Young to be postmaster at Hallettsville, Tex., in place of D. A. Paulus. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

William A. Crawford to be postmaster at Pampa, Tex., in place of Claudine Barnes, resigned.

VIRGINIA.

Mary C. Lewis to be postmaster at Camp Eustis, Va. Office became presidential April 1, 1922.

WASHINGTON.

Carl J. Gunderson to be postmaster at East Stanwood, Wash., in place of C. J. Gunderson. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Ray E. Simons to be postmaster at Leavenworth, Wash., in place of G. A. Hamilton. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Clifford S. Musser to be postmaster at Shepherdstown, W. Va., in place of A. S. Lucas. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1922.

WISCONSIN.

Arthur C. Bishop to be postmaster at Bloomington, Wis., in place of A. C. Bishop. Incumbent's commission expired September 8, 1921.

William H. Goldthorpe to be postmaster at Cuba, Wis., in place of H. H. Fiedler. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 25 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

J. H. Fulmer to be United States marshal, district of Nevada.

Jesse D. Moore to be United States marshal, eastern district of New York.

APPOINTMENT IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Elliott Burgess Roberts to be aid with relative rank of ensign in the Navy.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Charles E. Brooks, Fort Deposit.

CALIFORNIA.

Clarence A. Dickison, Compton.
Josephine M. Costar, Greenville.
Margaret R. Faber, McKittrick.
Bernard G. Larrecou, Menlo Park.
John R. Chace, San Jose.

COLORADO.

Hugh L. Large, Longmont.
Pearle L. Gabbett, Orchard.

CONNECTICUT.

Mary H. Newton, Uncasville.

IDAHO.

Andrew Christenson, Laclede.

INDIANA.

Chester F. Morris, Parker.
William S. Matthews, North Vernon.
Katheryn L. Huckleberry, Whitestown.
Fred Dunn, Windfall.

KANSAS.

John L. Lee, Atlanta.
David E. Hill, Nortonville.
Francis B. Brungardt, Victoria.

KENTUCKY.

Bud Morgan, Lothair.
Thomas D. Tapp, Springfield.

MAINE.

Earle R. Hayes, National Soldiers' Home.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Walter L. Burt, Canton.
William F. Searle, Peabody.
Helen K. Hoxie, Sunderland.

MICHIGAN.

John H. Boehm, Fountain.

MINNESOTA.

Olney A. Solberg, Brooten.
Olans E. Burtness, Caledonia.
E. Jay Merry, Fairmont.
Emanuel Nyman, Foley.
Anton E. Rishof, Gary.
John L. Beck, Mountain Iron.
Sarah E. Schumacher, Zimmerman.

NEBRASKA.

Ernest E. Goding, Dix.

NEW JERSEY.

Elizabeth Transue, Delaware.
Peter A. Greiner, jr., Woodbridge.

NEW MEXICO.

Ernest A. Hannah, Artesia.

NEW YORK.

John E. Gubb, Batavia.
Everett H. Axtell, Deposit.
Philip J. Brust, Medina.
Sarah M. Taylor, Westbury.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Carl Indergard, Belfield.
Mary B. Engbrecht, Goldenvalley.

OHIO.

Ernest C. Ludwig, Anna.
Fred O. Bates, Bellevue.
George S. Laskey, Custar.
John J. Haines, East Liberty.
Ruth G. McWilliams, Grand Rapids.
James B. Emery, London.
Leo Mutach, Marblehead.
Reinhart W. Kuck, New Bremen.
Everett F. Funk, Warsaw.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Thomas J. Dolin, Camp Crook.
Arthur H. Siem, Clark.
Jennie Dodge, Egan.

TEXAS.

Joseph D. Powell, Archer City.
Wyatt O. Selkirk, Blessing.
Clarence R. Redden, De Leon.
Velma Scott, Graford.
John C. Beever, Perryton.
Thomas B. White, Rogers.
Herman C. Feist, Rowena.
John W. Osborne, West Columbia.

WASHINGTON.

Richard A. McKellar, Cashmere.
Joseph H. Dean, Castlerock.
Paul W. Thiele, Grandview.
Martha M. Juvenal, Kahlotus.
Jennie A. Smith, Peshastin.
Frederick J. Fleischer, Prescott.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Daniel M. Shakley, Hollidays Cove.
Winnie O. Law, Mount Clare.

WYOMING.

W. Leroy Call, Afton.
Chester A. Lindsley, Yellowstone Park.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 25, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord God, Thou dost exceeding abundantly for us more than we can ask or think. We know Thee by all the words that bring us joy and confidence. In a world with such partial glimpses and broken lights we give Thee thanks and praise for such rich blessings. These are the greatest, the strongest, and the deepest facts of life. O keep us in close relationship with Thee. Bless the whole great body of citizens, and may our country always be great in intelligence and in love to God and man. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 1009. An act for the relief of H. C. Mullins, his wife and minor children;

H. R. 6686. An act for the relief of George Ciszek and Anna Ciszek;

H. R. 7415. An act to correct and amend the service and military record of Herbert Langley, United States Marine Corps;

H. R. 5820. An act to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps;

H. R. 8690. An act to add a certain tract of land on the island of Hawaii to the Hawaii National Park;

H. R. 3346. An act for the relief of the heirs of Oscar Chrysler;

H. R. 9671. An act to amend section 87 of the Judicial Code;

H. R. 5588. An act to repeal section 5 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, in the State of California, and for other purposes," approved August 9, 1916;

H. R. 10740. An act authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices; and

H. J. Res. 57. Joint resolution making the provisions of section 2296 of the United States Revised Statutes applicable to all entries made under the homestead laws and laws supplemental and amendatory thereof.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1077. An act to authorize the payment of $5,000 to the Government of Japan for the benefit of the family of Torahachi Uratake, a Japanese subject, killed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, on November 25, 1915;

S. 1610. An act to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.;

S. 1733. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the president of the Milwaukee Press Club, of Milwaukee, Wis., the bell of the wrecked cruiser Milwaukee;

S. 1767. An act for the relief of the owner of the derrick Capitol;

S. 157. An act for the relief of the Rosen Reichardt Brokerage Co., of St. Louis, Mo.;

S. 2147. An act to authorize patent to the Ed E. Richardson Co. (Inc.) of certain lands;

S. 667. An act for the relief of John B. H. Waring;

S. 518. An act to carry out the provisions of an act approved July 1, 1902, known as the act entitled "An act to accept, ratify, and confirm a proposed agreement submitted by the Kansas or Kaw Indians of Oklahoma, and for other purposes," and to provide for a settlement to Addie May Auld and Archie William Auld, who were enrolled as members of the said tribe after the lands and moneys of said tribe had been divided;

S. 3268. An act to authorize the Chicago, Detroit & Canada Grand Trunk Junction Railroad Co., or its successors or assigns, to lease certain of its properties in the State of Michigan; and

S. 2765. An act for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that April 22 they had presented to the President for his approval the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 3057. An act for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown;

H. R. 2393. An act to provide for the establishment on the Mississippi River of a fish-rescue station, to be under the direction of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce;

H. R. 2158. An act to provide for the monthly payment of pensions;

H. R. 2004. An act for the relief of Frank Ferrin;

H. R. 927. An act for the relief of Capt. Fred S. Johnston;

H. R. 3270. An act for the relief of Estella Barnett;

H. R. 5762. An act providing for a municipal park for the city of Butte, Mont.;

H. R. 7234. An act for the relief of Miles Swift;

H. R. 8342. An act to empower the Attorney General of the United States to fix the compensation of clerks of the United States district courts;

H. R. 8460. An act to authorize the occupation and use of certain lands in Alaska by Ketchikan Post No. 3, American Legion, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9710. An act authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government land purchases within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, N. Dak. and S. Dak.; and

H. J. Res. 309. Joint resolution appropriating $1,000,000 for the preservation, protection, and repair of levees under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 7272. An act for the relief of Monroe B. Shealy.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to bill of the following title:

S. 1059. An act for the relief of J. B. Waterman.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3195. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept completion of Carey segregation No. 11 and to issue patent therefor.

SCRAPPING OF NAVAL VESSELS.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have read the following resolution, which I send to the desk, for the information of the House, and that it may have its proper reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires it read instead of introducing it through the basket?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the resolution to which he referred may be read. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to what does this resolution pertain?

Mr. TUCKER. It is in reference to the scrapping bill which is coming up later. The resolution is in a form which has been adopted by this House many times before.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is rather an unusual request, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw it for the time being.

Mr. TUCKER. Very well, I shall withdraw it and show it to the gentleman.

PERSONNEL PAY OF ARMY, NAVY, ETC.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, to-day I expect to file the report of the special committee on the bill (H. R. 10972) to readjust the pay and allowances of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service, and I ask unanimous consent that the minority members of that committee may have the remainder of this week in which to file their views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the minority members may have the remainder of this week in which to file their views on the bill H. R. 10972, the personnel pay bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that this is to be a report on a bill, or does the gentleman expect to report a bill?

Mr. McKENZIE. It is reporting a bill, and accompanying that bill with a report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means may have the remainder of the week in which to file their views on the Liberian loan bill, not to interfere with its consideration, of course, if it be called up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means may have the remainder of the week in which to file their views on the Liberian loan bill, not to interfere with the consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

The was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill H. R. 9981, the independent offices appropriation bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that this is the conference report upon the independent offices appropriation bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed, and the Sergeant at Arms was directed to notify absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Brand	Codd	Dale
Ansorge	Briggs	Cole, Ohio	Darrow
Anthony	Britten	Connell	Davis, Tenn.
Bixler	Brown, Tenn.	Connolly, Pa.	Deal
Blakeney	Butler	Copley	Dempsey
Bland, Ind.	Chalmers	Crisp	Doughton
Blanton	Clark, Fla.	Cullen	Driver
Bond	Cockran	Curry	Dunbar

Dupré	Kahn	Mudd	Slemp
Echols	Kelley, Mich.	Newton, Mo.	Smithwick
Edmonds	Kelly, Pa.	O'Brien	Snell
Ellis	Kendall	O'Connor	Snyder
Fairchild	Kennedy	Olpp	Speaks
Favrot	Kindred	Paige	Stafford
Fess	Kitchin	Perlman	Stephens
Fields	Kleczka	Petersen	Stiness
Focht	Knight	Pou	Strong, Pa.
Fordney	Kraus	Pringey	Sullivan
Foster	Kreider	Purnell	Summers, Wash.
Freeman	Kunz	Rainey, Ala.	Sweet
Gorman	Lampert	Rainey, Ill.	Tague
Gould	Lee, N. Y.	Reavis	Taylor, Ark.
Greene, Mass.	Lehlbach	Reber	Taylor, Colo.
Hardy, Tex.	Little	Reed, N. Y.	Taylor, N. J.
Hawes	Logan	Riordan	Taylor, Tenn.
Herrick	Longworth	Rodenberg	Tinkham
Hicks	Lyon	Rossdale	Towner
Himes	McArthur	Rucker	Treadway
Hogan	McLaughlin, Pa.	Ryan	Upshaw
Hudspeth	Madden	Sanders, Ind.	Vestal
Husted	Maloney	Sanders, N. Y.	Volk
Ireland	Mann	Schall	Ward, N. Y.
Jefferis, Nebr.	Mead	Sears	White, Me.
Johnson, Miss.	Michaelson	Shelton	Wilson
Johnson, S. Dak.	Moore, Ohio	Shreve	Woods, Va.
Johnson, Wash.	Morin	Sisson	Woodyard

The SPEAKER. On this vote 286 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

INVITATION TO VISIT QUANTICO.

The SPEAKER. The Secretary of the Navy has sent to me a letter extending an invitation to all Members of the House to visit Quantico, the headquarters of the Marine Corps, on May 5, which is next Friday week. The President has placed the Mayflower at the disposal of the Navy Department for the day, and it will leave the navy yard wharf at 8 o'clock a. m., and, returning, leave Quantico about 6 p. m. Dinner and supper will be served at Quantico. Members desiring to go will please secure tickets from the House Committee on Naval Affairs.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is recognized.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 9981.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up the conference report which the Clerk will report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 31.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Salaries: Comptroller General, $10,000; Assistant Comptroller General, $7,500; assistants to Comptroller General—4 at $6,000 each; chief clerk, $3,000; chiefs of divisions—7 at $3,000 each; chief of appointment division, $2,500; assistants to chiefs of divisions—3 at $2,750 each, 4 at $2,500 each; chiefs of sections—10 at $2,500 each, 13 at $2,250 each, two at $2,000 each; assistant chiefs of sections—11 at $2,000 each, 1 at $1,900; chiefs of subsections—3 at $2,000 each; disbursing officer, $3,000; deputy disbursing officer, $1,800; private secretary, $1,800; attorneys—1 $5,000, 4 at $4,000 each, 4 at $3,600 each, 1 $3,100, 5 at $3,000 each, 1 $2,750; law clerks—1 $2,500, 4 at $2,400 each, 4 at $2,250 each, 2 at $2,200 each, 9 at $2,000 each, 4 at 1,800 each, 1 $1,600; accountants—1 $2,500, 2 at $2,400 each, 3 at $2,100 each, 3 at $2,000 each; investigators—1 $4,000, 1 $3,000, 20 at $2,000 each; reviewers—8 at $2,100 each; principal clerks—17 at $2,000 each; clerks—164 of class 4, 218 of class 3, 255 of class 2, 267 of class 1, 56 at $1,000 each, 70 at $900 each; check assorters—4 at $1,000 each; duplicating machine operator, $900; carpenter, $1,400; foreman of messengers and laborers, $1,400; chief messenger, $1,000; messengers—1 $1,000, 15 at $840 each; assistant messengers—29 at $720 each; laborers—1 $720, 21 at $660 each; messenger boys—14 at $480 each, 1 $420; forewoman of charwomen, $660; charwomen—22 at $240 each; and temporary clerks, stenographers, typists, and other assistants, to be paid at a rate not exceeding $1,800 per annum, $375,000; in all, $2,293,190.

"Contingent expenses: For traveling expenses, rent, telephone service, purchase and exchange of books, office supplies (including stationery) and equipment, repairs and maintenance, and miscellaneous items, $175,261."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "No officer or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid a salary or compensation at a rate per annum in excess of $11,000 except the following: Six at not to exceed $25,000 each, two at not to exceed $20,000 each, and one at not to exceed $15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

WILL R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
W. L. JONES,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
CARTER GLASS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 21: Appropriates $2,468,451 for the General Accounting Office in the detailed manner proposed by the House instead of $2,496,101 in a lump sum as proposed by the Senate. The detailed salaries proposed in the House bill have been reduced in amounts of individual salaries, and in number of salaries, in the aggregate of $400,000, of which $375,000 is made available for temporary clerks, stenographers, typists, etc., with a salary limitation of $1,800, and $25,000 is added to the appropriation of $150,261 proposed in the House bill for contingent and miscellaneous expenses. The aggregate proposed in the substitute for the House provision is $150 less than the amount carried and is $27,650 less than the amount proposed by the Senate under the lump sum.

On No. 31: Strikes out the language inserted by the Senate granting authority to the United States Shipping Board to continue to use sums received from the liquidation of assets up to $55,000,000.

On No. 35, relating to salary limitations on Shipping Board and Fleet Corporation funds: Inserts a substitute for the House and Senate provisions, which allows 6 employees at not to exceed $25,000 each, 2 at not to exceed $20,000 each, and 1 at not to exceed $15,000, instead of 13 in excess of $11,000 as proposed by the Senate, and 6 between $11,000 and $25,000 each as proposed by the House.

WILL R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state briefly what this conference report is. If it is adopted, it disposes of this bill. The change in the present report as compared with the preference one is as follows:

The Senate has receded from its amendment to the House bill providing that the Shipping Board be authorized to expend $25,000,000 of the $55,000,000 heretofore appropriated during the fiscal year 1923. So that is out of consideration. It also receded with reference to the salaries paid to the officers of the Shipping Board by knocking out a $15,000 position. I desire to state, in order that the membership may know the exact situation, that by reason of the present legislation four $35,000 men that they were authorized heretofore to employ and did employ, and to whom they were paying these salaries of $35,000 each, are eliminated, and these gentlemen, under this act, if it becomes a law, will receive only $25,000 each.

I am confident that we have done the best that can be done. Our work may not be satisfactory to anyone. It is not entirely satisfactory to me, but it is the very best that can be accomplished under the circumstances, and I think we labored as best we knew how, at least, to conform to the ideas of this House. As was stated here the other day by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who was in favor of the conference report then under consideration, conferences and results of conferences are a matter of compromise. If we had this whole thing to do ourselves, it might present quite a different picture, but we must get along with gentlemen on the other side. Their ideas and conclusions are entitled to respectful consideration. Their ideas on this matter differed from ours, but they have yielded much in their demands, and we are yielding but little if this report is adopted. In dollars and cents the amount is negligible, and to quibble further over this report will injure others much more than it will harm the Shipping Board.

I desire to impress upon this body again the fact that we are punishing unintentionally a great number of good citizens of this country who are dependent upon this appropriation for the purpose of getting money long since due them, their claims having been agreed upon and settled. As I cited the other day, I know of one instance where a man has been here from Michigan since early in January with a complete agreement between himself and the Shipping Board, and yet without any possibility of relief until this appropriation bill has become a law. That is only one case. I expect there are Representatives here from many States that have similar instances in their own districts. Therefore I ask the gentlemen here to be considerate in this matter of all who are concerned.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I understand that the provisions of this bill make that amount immediately available?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; $30,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What $30,000,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There was $50,000,000 appropriated for the settlement of claims, and $30,000,000 of that is made immediately available.

I have stated as briefly and succinctly as I know how the changes that have been made by reason of this conference report, and I submit it, gentlemen, for your consideration.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. In the previous conference report made on this same bill there was an item, No. 31, in which there was something about $55,000,000, was there not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I say that the Senate has receded on that proposition, and that is now out of consideration.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman state generally that if this conference report is adopted that for all of these settlements that have been made by the Shipping Board money will be available, so that the Shipping Board can go ahead and confirm those settlements by the payment of money?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Up to the amount of $30,000,000. The other $20,000,000 would be available after the 1st day of July.

Mr. MILLER. That will relieve the tie-up, then, so to speak, on all of these?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this matter has been before the House several times, to a large extent upon the same proposition. The question before the House to-day, in so far as this report is concerned, is whether or not the House will specifically authorize salaries of employees in the Shipping Board at $25,000 per annum, which is nearly twice as much as the justices of the Supreme Court receive, more than twice as much as any Cabinet member draws, more than twice as much as the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of this House draw. This report provides that six employees of the Shipping Board shall receive not exceeding $25,000 a year, two not exceeding $20,000 a year, and one not exceeding $15,000 a year.

Mr. WASON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. WASON. In the original appropriation bill which passed the House did it not authorize these men at a salary not exceeding $25,000?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It did not.

Mr. WASON. Will the gentleman look at the original bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have the original bill in my hand now.

Mr. WASON. Page 34?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Page 34. It provides that six officers or employees of the Shipping Board may be paid an annual salary or compensation in excess of $11,000. The gentleman is correct as to that. I was mistaken. It does read, "but no compensation or salary shall exceed $25,000."

But this report not only provides that six employees shall not exceed $25,000, but it adds three additional employees, who may receive $20,000 for two of them and $15,000 for one. It was the expectation of the House when this bill was pending and the provision referred to by the gentleman from New Hampshire was adopted that those six employees who might receive over $11,000 each were to be the operating heads, because Mr. Lasker stated that in order to get men to operate the Government ships it was necessary to pay them a salary exceeding $11,000. But, gentlemen, I make the assertion that every debate that has occurred in this House upon these conference reports as they have come back here and the amendment in the Senate as adopted by the Senate and the amendment to the old law reported by the House Committee on Appropriations shows that it is the purpose in making these increases to provide additional salaries for attorneys in the Shipping Board. You can not get away from it. That is exactly what this increase is intended for, and the statement has been made time and again, and the amendment adopted in the Senate shows on its face, that this is its purpose.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] says we will do a great injustice to certain claimants if we do not pass this report to-day, notwithstanding the fact that the provisions of the bill do not become finally effective until July 1; and the basis of that statement is that this bill contains a provision that $30,000,000 of the $50,000,000 that is appropriated for the payment of claims becomes immediately available. I say if the Shipping Board is more anxious to secure big salaries for attorneys in the Shipping Board than they are to take care of these $30,000,000 of claimants, who, I understand, are pressing at their doors for payment, then it seems that the House, in taking that into consideration, should say to the Shipping Board, "If you are as anxious to pay these claims as you say, then drop these high-priced attorneys."

We all know that we can get attorneys down there for $11,000 and less. Everyone knows that if the Shipping Board desires competent attorneys they can get them for not exceeding $11,000. How is it that the Attorney General of the United States, having claims under his jurisdiction amounting to $500,000,000 and over, involving property now in litigation in every Federal court in the United States, from the Supreme Court down—how is it that he can get competent attorneys for $12,000, and most of them for less?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask for three minutes more?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Gentlemen, this is nothing more or less than an effort, I repeat, to provide salaries for attorneys, some of whom, we know from statements made upon this floor, have come here more for the enjoyment of social advantages in Washington than for the purpose of rendering legal services in the Shipping Board; and I for one am not willing to abandon my convictions on the subject and vote to confirm this report in order to provide these great salaries.

We noticed the other day that there is to be a deficit, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, of more than $359,000,000, and his statement showed that when you added to the $359,000,000 deficit interest payments of $125,000,000 and the ship subsidy it will run about $500,000,000 next year or more. The Washington Post, which I am sure represents this administration, threw out the intimation, or made the plain statement in effect, that it would be necessary to raise additional taxes to meet that deficit. Are you willing to levy new taxes on an overburdened people in order to pay the big salaries carried in this report? They may amount to but a few thousand dollars in comparison with the great deficit, but I am not willing to vote to increase the salaries in the amount that this report calls for, and I hope the report will be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, as I recall, the limitation of $25,000 as a maximum that the Shipping Board could pay in salaries was put into the bill when it first passed the House upon my motion, and since that time we have had this matter up before us under conference reports upon two or three occasions. The situation now is that the Senate has acted upon this conference report, so that a motion to recommit would not be in order, and we are presented now with the alternatives of voting the conference report up or down.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman state that the Senate has acted upon this conference report?

Mr. WALSH. I am so advised. The House asked for the conference the other day, and I am advised that the Senate has agreed to this conference report, and that it was agreed to last Saturday.

Now, I have been opposed, as the membership knows, to the payment of these exorbitant salaries, and I am opposed to it now as a matter of principle. But we are confronted with this situation: The Senate has already agreed to this report. We can not recommit it. We have eliminated another objectionable amendment that was put on in another body, namely, this $55,000,000 amendment, and we have also reduced the number of these high salaries from 13, as originally proposed by the Senate, to 9 in this bill, only 6 of whom can receive $25,000 each. And while my views upon paying exorbitant salaries have not changed, and although I believe it is a bad principle to establish, I can readily understand that having engaged men at $35,000 who are now in the midst of very important work, it will be rather difficult to take and say, "You can not get more than $10,000 hereafter." I understand that these gentlemen who have received $35,000 will complete their work, even though their salary is reduced under the provisions of this bill to $5,000.

Now, I doubt whether, as a matter of fact, the employment of these high-salaried officials in the Shipping Board is going to result ultimately in the saving of very much money, but I understand the motives which prompted the officials down there to seek to secure the best talent available, as they stated, in order to wind up these affairs.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Massachusetts thinks that the Shipping Board has now nine men receiving salaries over $11,000?

Mr. WALSH. No. I stated that the Senate amendment would permit 13, and that has been reduced to 9 by the provisions of this conference report.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I referred to the statement of the gentleman that some employees now receiving a salary of $25,000 or $30,000 would have to consent to a reduction.

Mr. WALSH. They have, I think, four employees now receiving $35,000, and when this bill becomes a law on the 1st of July, if those gentlemen continue on the pay roll, they will have to suffer a cut of $10,000 each in their salary.

And so, under the provisions of this compromise, with no opportunity to recommit the report with instructions for further elimination——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the House votes down this report the bill will go back to conference, will it not, and will come up again?

Mr. WALSH. If the House votes down this report its action will be a message to the Senate, requiring them to reconsider their vote and to ask for a further conference.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That would not be particularly unusual. It has been done in other cases.

Mr. WALSH. Very seldom has that been done.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman another question. The gentleman refers to the fact that some employees down there under the provisions of the present law are drawing more than $11,000. If the House provision is adopted these particular officials will not be disturbed. In other words, this report provides for only three additional employees over and above those who are now on the salary roll at over $11,000.

Mr. WALSH. It will disturb it to this effect, that there will be only two employees getting up to $20,000, and one, as I recall from the report, who will be permitted to receive in excess of $15,000, and now there is no limitation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And six at $25,000.

Mr. WALSH. And six at $25,000. But it is the parliamentary situation, Mr. Speaker, which prompts me reluctantly to agree to support this conference report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. My time has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield me about three minutes?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the mere fact that a parliamentary situation has arisen, brought about by the Senate acting upon this conference report in advance of action being taken by the House, is, I respectfully submit, no legitimate argument why the House should forego the conviction which it has so vigorously and earnestly expressed heretofore upon this subject. The appropriation bill is in no danger. The proceedings of the Congress have not reached that point where there is any danger of the appropriation bill failing. So that there is no coercion of time even upon the House. The House has heretofore expressed itself upon this proposition in no uncertain terms.

I do not propose to criticize the conferees. They had to deal with the conferees of the other body. We do not know what went on in the conference. I do not say this in criticism, but the conferees have failed to maintain the sentiment of the House as expressed to them on this particular matter. There is ample time to pass this bill and to have the will of the House carried out, and no parliamentary subterfuge ought to prevent the House asserting its continuing belief in that policy which it has so resolutely asserted heretofore. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield me five minutes?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina five minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Gentlemen of the House, I have only this additional thought to submit: During the war and immediately afterwards the Government was paying high salaries to employees. It was the expressed desire of this House that we should discontinue authorizing these high salaries. This year there has been a demand for economy by the people and a demand for economy by the Members of this House. On three occasions we have gone on record reflecting that demand and have attempted to limit the number of high-salaried employees of the Shipping Board. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] says to-day he is of the same opinion still, that not more than six should be paid over $11,000, and the only reason he urges the adoption of the report is that the parliamentary situation makes it impossible for us to exercise our best judgment. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has shown that position is not well taken. One other reason, and one other reason alone, is urged. That is that in this bill $30,000,000 is made immediately available for the payment of claims.

One gentleman on the floor asked if that meant that if this conference report is adopted the Shipping Board can proceed immediately to the payment of claims, and when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] answered yes, immediately his inquisitor was satisfied. But can the Shipping Board say to this House that because you have a constituent who may have a claim that the constituent will not be paid unless you come across and agree to pay high salaries to three additional employees of the Shipping Board? Are you going to be coerced because some claimant may desire immediate payment of his claim? If we do not agree, the House conferees can go back and tell the Senate that until they agree to limit these employees this bill can not go through. Let us tell the Senate that while salaries of men engaged in industry are being reduced we are not going to authorize two additional salaries of $20,000. No great harm will be done if this $30,000,000 is not made immediately available for the payment of these claims. But if the Shipping Board thinks it so essential, let them withdraw their demand for these increased salaries. Do not be coerced into voting against your own convictions, expressed on three occasions, in order to pay the claims of some contractors who are demanding immediate payment from the Shipping Board.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, just a moment, to make clear, if I can, exactly what the situation is.

The House provided that not to exceed six employees of the Shipping Board should receive in excess of $11,000, and that they should not receive more than $25,000. The Senate amended that by providing that not more than 13 should receive in excess of $11,000, so that under the Senate provision 13 of the employees might receive any salary that the Shipping Board saw fit to fix. There was no limit whatever placed by the Senate. Now, we are not dealing with the Shipping Board. We are dealing with a coordinate branch of the Congress. And while we do not always agree with those gentlemen, we realize that we can not always and altogether have our way about matters. The fact is that the report now presented by the committee does give us essentially the provision as written by the House when the bill was passed. The only difference is a matter of $21,000 in salaries in this particular item.

Mr. WASON. Twenty-two thousand dollars.

Mr. MONDELL. They can now give salaries as high as $20,000 to two men who are not provided for by the House. That is the difference between $11,000 and $20,000, and twice $9,000 are $18,000. They can grant a salary of $15,000 to one man whose salary was limited to $11,000 by the House, and $4,000 and $18,000 make $22,000. The gentleman is correct. It is a difference of $22,000. Gentlemen upon the other side have entirely forgotten that the conferees have insisted, and the Senate has receded in this conference report, upon a matter involving the possible expenditure of $55,000,000.

But still gentlemen quibble over a matter of $22,000 in this bill providing for a great establishment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman does not overlook the fact that the $22,000 is to be divided among three men by way of increase in salaries.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; I think I stated that was to be divided among three men. The House has had its way in this matter, not only in the matter of salaries but in the vastly more important matter of $55,000,000 which the Senate insisted should be made available. I think under the circumstances the committee is to be congratulated on the agreement they have been able to make with the Senate and that the House should adopt the conference report.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add but one word. This report is absolutely saving money to the Treasury of the United States, as has been clearly stated by the gentleman from Wyoming, when compared with salaries now being paid. If these three men were added, it would make a difference of only $22,000, and I want you to bear in mind that there are four who are now getting $35,000 each. We have limited these by this bill to $25,000 each, so there is the difference between $25,000 and $40,000, and we are making a saving of $15,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Did the gentleman say there were four employees getting $35,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Were these salaries increased since the bill was in the House for consideration?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; but they were paying it under the old law.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman will remember that a list of the employees was submitted to the House at the time the bill was under consideration, and there were no four getting $35,000 at that time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; they had a limitation there.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There were only two salaries of $35,000, and I want to know if since that time they have increased it to four?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; long before the bill was under consideration; and so there is to be a saving of $15,000, anyway.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I think the statement was made by some member of the committee, as I recall it, during the original discussion of the bill that there were only two members of the Emergency Fleet Corporation getting $35,000, and one $25,000. That may have been an error, but that statement was made.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was never before questioned.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I possibly may be mistaken. The hearings on this bill, however, disclose that there are three getting $35,000, Smull, Love, and Frey, and another getting $30,000. So instead of a saving of $18,000 we are saving $10,000. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee) there were 74 ayes and 66 noes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that no quorum is present, and I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point that no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 143, answered "present" 1, not voting 149, as follows:

YEAS—137.

Andrew, Mass.	Elliott	Knutson	Purnell
Appleby	Evans	Kraus	Ransley
Arentz	Faust	Larson, Minn.	Reed, W. Va.
Atkeson	Fenn	Lineberger	Riddick
Bacharach	Fish	Longworth	Robsion
Begg	Freeman	Luce	Rogers
Bland, Va.	French	Luhring	Rose
Bond	Fuller	McCormick	Siegel
Bowers	Gernerd	McKenzie	Sinnott
Brennan	Glynn	McLaughlin, Mich.	Smith, Idaho
Brooks, Ill.	Graham, Pa.	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sproul
Brooks, Pa.	Green, Iowa	McPherson	Steenerson
Burroughs	Greene, Mass.	MacGregor	Swing
Burtness	Greene, Vt.	Magee	Temple
Burton	Griest	Merritt	Thompson
Cable	Griffin	Michener	Timberlake
Campbell, Pa.	Hadley	Miller	Underhill
Cannon	Hardy, Colo.	Mills	Vaile
Chandler, N. Y.	Harrison	Millspaugh	Vare
Chindblom	Hawley	Mondell	Volstead
Christopherson	Henry	Montoya	Walsh
Clague	Herrick	Moore, Ill.	Walters
Classon	Hersey	Moores, Ind.	Wason
Cole, Iowa	Hickey	Morgan	Webster
Colton	Hill	Murphy	White, Me.
Crago	Hukriede	Nelson, Me.	Williams
Cramton	Hutchinson	Nelson, A. P.	Williamson
Curry	Jefferis, Nebr.	Newton, Minn.	Winslow
Dale	Jones, Pa.	Nolan	Wood, Ind.
Dallinger	Kearns	Norton	Wurzbach
Denison	Kiess	Ogden	Wyant
Dickinson	King	Osborne	Young
Dunbar	Kirkpatrick	Parker, N. Y.
Dunn	Kissel	Patterson, N. J.
Dyer	Kline, N. Y.	Pringey

NAYS—143.

Almon	Fitzgerald	Layton	Roach
Andrews, Nebr.	Frear	Lazaro	Rouse
Anthony	Frothingham	Leatherwood	Sabath
Bankhead	Fulmer	Lee, Ga.	Sandlin
Barbour	Funk	Linthicum	Scott, Tenn.
Barkley	Gahn	Little	Shaw
Beck	Gallivan	London	Sinclair
Beedy	Garner	Lowrey	Speaks
Bell	Garrett, Tenn.	McClintic	Steagall
Bird	Garrett, Tex.	McDuffie	Stedman
Black	Gensman	McFadden	Stevenson
Bowling	Gilbert	McSwain	Stoll
Box	Goldsborough	Mapes	Strong, Kans.
Briggs	Graham, Ill.	Martin	Summers, Wash.
Browne, Wis.	Hammer	Montague	Sumners, Tex.
Buchanan	Hardy, Tex.	Moore, Va.	Swank
Bulwinkle	Hawes	Nelson, J. M.	Ten Eyck
Burke	Hayden	O'Connor	Thomas
Byrnes, S. C.	Hoch	Oldfield	Tillman
Byrns, Tenn.	Hooker	Oliver	Tincher
Campbell, Kans.	Huddleston	Overstreet	Tucker
Carew	Hull	Padgett	Tyson
Carter	Humphreys	Park, Ga.	Vinson
Collier	Jacoway	Parks, Ark.	Voigt
Collins	Jeffers, Ala.	Patterson, Mo.	Ward, N. C.
Connally, Tex.	Johnson, Ky.	Perkins	Watson
Cooper, Ohio	Jones, Tex.	Pou	Weaver
Cooper, Wis.	Keller	Quin	Wheeler
Coughlin	Ketcham	Radcliffe	White, Kans.
Davis, Tenn.	Kincheloe	Raker	Wilson
Dominick	Kline, Pa.	Ramseyer	Wingo
Dowell	Kopp	Rankin	Wise
Drane	Lanham	Rayburn	Woods, Va.
Drewry	Lankford	Reece	Wright
Favrot	Larsen, Ga.	Rhodes	Zihlman
Fisher	Lawrence	Ricketts

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Aswell

NOT VOTING—149.

Ackerman	Deal	Kahn	Newton, Mo.
Anderson	Dempsey	Kelley, Mich.	O'Brien
Ansorge	Doughton	Kelly, Pa.	Olpp
Benham	Driver	Kendall	Paige
Bixler	Dupré	Kennedy	Parker, N. J.
Blakeney	Echols	Kindred	Perlman
Bland, Ind.	Edmonds	Kinkaid	Petersen
Blanton	Ellis	Kitchin	Porter
Boies	Fairchild	Kleczka	Rainey, Ala.
Brand	Fairfield	Knight	Rainey, Ill.
Britten	Fess	Kreider	Reavis
Brown, Tenn.	Fields	Kunz	Reber
Burdick	Focht	Lampert	Reed, N. Y.
Butler	Fordney	Langley	Riordan
Cantrill	Foster	Lea, Calif.	Robertson
Chalmers	Free	Lee, N. Y.	Rodenberg
Chandler, Okla.	Goodykoontz	Lehlbach	Rosenbloom
Clark, Fla.	Gorman	Logan	Rossdale
Clarke, N. Y.	Gould	Lyon	Rucker
Clouse	Haugen	McArthur	Ryan
Cockran	Hays	McLaughlin, Pa.	Sanders, Ind.
Codd	Hicks	Madden	Sanders, N. Y.
Cole, Ohio	Himes	Maloney	Sanders, Tex.
Connell	Hogan	Mann	Schall
Connolly, Pa.	Hudspeth	Mansfield	Scott, Mich.
Copley	Husted	Mead	Sears
Crisp	Ireland	Michaelson	Shelton
Crowther	James	Moore, Ohio	Shreve
Cullen	Johnson, Miss.	Morin	Sisson
Darrow	Johnson, S. Dak.	Mott	Slemp
Davis, Minn.	Johnson, Wash.	Mudd	Smith, Mich.

Smithwick	Sullivan	Tilson	Ward, N. Y.
Snell	Sweet	Tinkham	Woodruff
Snyder	Tague	Towner	Woodyard
Stafford	Taylor, Ark.	Treadway	Yates
Stephens	Taylor, Colo.	Upshaw
Stiness	Taylor, N. J.	Vestal
Strong, Pa.	Taylor, Tenn.	Volk

So the conference report was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Cullen (for) with Mr. Knight (against).

Mr. Fairchild (for) with Mr. Driver (against).

Mr. Lee of New York (for) with Mr. Kitchin (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Treadway with Mr. Cockran.

Mr. Butler with Mr. Upshaw.

Mr. Sanders of Indiana with Mr. Fields.

Mr. Shreve with Mr. Hudspeth.

Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Dupré.

Mr. Taylor of New Jersey with Mr. Kunz.

Mr. Free with Mr. Doughton.

Mr. Lehlbach with Mr. Aswell.

Miss Robertson with Mr. Logan.

Mr. Lampert with Mr. Sisson.

Mr. Gorman with Mr. Mansfield.

Mr. Ellis with Mr. Sanders of Texas.

Mr. Chandler of Oklahoma with Mr. Lyon.

Mr. Shelton with Mr. Sullivan.

Mr. Kahn with Mr. Taylor of Arkansas.

Mr. Ackerman with Mr. Brand.

Mr. Volk with Mr. Blanton.

Mr. Foster with Mr. Smithwick.

Mr. Reed of New York with Mr. Tague.

Mr. McArthur with Mr. Kindred.

Mr. Davis of Minnesota with Mr. Mead.

Mr. Newton of Missouri with Mr. Johnson of Mississippi.

Mr. Olpp with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.

Mr. Snyder with Mr. Crisp.

Mr. Perlman with Mr. Deal.

Mr. Blakeney with Mr. Cantrill.

Mr. Kendall with Mr. Lea of California.

Mr. Johnson of South Dakota with Mr. O'Brien.

Mr. Maloney with Mr. Sears.

Mr. Snell with Mr. Riordan.

Mr. Stephens with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.

Mr. Morin with Mr. Rucker.

Mr. Himes with Mr. Clark of Florida.

Mr. Fordney with Mr. Rainey of Illinois.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

APPLICATION OF RECLAMATION LAW TO IRRIGATION DISTRICTS.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4382, to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4382, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. KINKAID, Mr. SINNOTT, and Mr. HAYDEN.

PROMOTION OF TRADE IN CHINA—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill H. R. 4810, to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up a conference report on the bill H. R. 4810, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4810) to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That this act may be cited as the 'China trade act, 1922.'"

DEFINITIONS.

"SEC. 2. When used in this act, unless the context otherwise indicates—

"(a) The term 'person' includes individual, partnership, corporation, and association;

"(b) The term 'China' means (1) China including Manchuria, Thibet, Mongolia, and any territory leased by China to any foreign government, (2) the Crown Colony of Hongkong, and (3) the Province of Macao;

"(c) The terms 'China trade act corporation' and 'corporation' mean a corporation chartered under the provisions of this act;

"(d) The term 'Federal district court' means any Federal district court, the United States Court for China, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia;

"(e) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Commerce; and

"(f) The term 'registrar' means the China trade act registrar appointed under section 3.

REGISTRAR.

"SEC. 3. The Secretary is authorized to designate as China trade act registrar an officer of the Department of Commerce. The official station of the registrar shall be in China at a place to be designated by the Secretary. All functions vested in the registrar by this act shall be administered by him under the supervision of the Secretary; except that upon appeal to the Secretary, in such manner as he shall by regulation prescribe, any action of the registrar may be affirmed, modified, or set aside by the Secretary as he deems advisable.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

"SEC. 4. (a) Five or more individuals (hereinafter in this act referred to as 'incorporators'), a majority of whom are citizens of the United States, may, as hereinafter in this act provided, form a District of Columbia corporation for the purpose of engaging in business within China.

"(b) The incorporators may adopt articles of incorporation which shall be filed with the Secretary at his office in the District of Columbia and may thereupon make application to the Secretary for a certificate of incorporation in such manner and form as shall be by regulation prescribed. The articles of incorporation shall state—

"(1) The name of the proposed China trade act corporation, which shall end with the legend, 'Federal Inc. U. S. A.,' and which shall not, in the opinion of the Secretary, be likely in any manner to mislead the public;

"(2) The location of its principal office, which shall be in the District of Columbia;

"(3) The particular business in which the corporation is to engage;

"(4) The amount of the authorized capital stock, the designation of each class of stock, the terms upon which it is to be issued, and the number and par value of the shares of each class of stock;

"(5) The duration of the corporation, which may be for a period of not more than 25 years, but which may, upon application of the corporation and payment of the incorporation fee, be successively extended by the Secretary for like periods;

"(6) The names and addresses of individuals, a majority of whom are citizens of the United States and at least one of whom is a resident of the District of Columbia, to be designated by the incorporators, who shall serve as temporary directors; and

"(7) The fact that an amount equal to 25 per cent of the amount of the authorized capital stock has been in good faith subscribed and paid in cash, or, in accordance with the provisions of section 8, in real or personal property which has been placed in the custody of the directors.

"(c) A China trade act corporation shall not engage in the business of discounting bills, notes, or other evidences of debt, of receiving deposits, of buying and selling bills of exchange, or of issuing bills, notes, or other evidences of debt, for circulation as money; nor engage in any other form of banking business; nor engage in any form of insurance business.

CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION.

"SEC. 5. The Secretary shall, upon the filing of such application, issue a certificate of incorporation certifying that the provisions of this act have been complied with and declaring that the incorporators are a body corporate, if (a) an incorporation fee of $100 has been paid him, (b) he finds that the articles of incorporation and statements therein conform to the requirements of, and that the incorporation is authorized by, this act, and (c) he finds that such corporation will aid in developing markets in China for goods produced in the United States. A copy of the articles of incorporation shall be made a part of the certificate of incorporation and printed in full thereon. Any failure, previous to the issuance of the certificate of incorporation, by the incorporators or in respect to the application for the certificate of incorporation, to conform to any requirement of law which is a condition precedent to such issuance, may not subsequent thereto be held to invalidate the certificate of incorporation or alter the legal status of any act of a China trade act corporation, except in proceedings instituted by the registrar for the revocation of the certificate of incorporation.

GENERAL POWERS.

"SEC. 6. In addition to the powers granted elsewhere in this act, a China trade act corporation—

"(a) Shall have the right of succession during the existence of the corporation;

"(b) May have a corporate seal and alfer it at pleasure;

"(c) May sue and be sued;

"(d) Shall have the right to transact the business authorized by its articles of incorporation and such further business as is properly connected therewith or necessary and incidental thereto;

"(e) May make contracts and incur liabilities;

"(f) May acquire and hold real or personal property, necessary to effect the purpose for which it is formed, and dispose of such property when no longer needed for such purposes;

"(g) May borrow money and issue its notes, coupon or registered bonds, or other evidences of debt, and secure their payment by a mortgage of its property; and

"(h) May establish such branch offices at such places in China as it deems advisable.

SHARES OF STOCK.

"SEC. 7. Each share of the original or any subsequent issue of stock of a China trade act corporation shall be issued at par value only, and shall be paid for in cash or in accordance with the provisions of section 8, in real or personal property which has been placed in the custody of the directors. No such share shall be issued until the amount of the par value thereof has been paid the corporation; and when issued each share shall be held to be full paid and nonassessable; except that if any share is, in violation of this section, issued without the amount of the par value thereof having been paid to the corporation the holder of such share shall be liable in suits by creditors for the difference between the amount paid for such share and the par value thereof.

"SEC. 8. No share of stock of a China trade act corporation shall, for the purposes of section 7 or of paragraph (7) of subdivision (b) of section 4, be held paid in real or personal property unless (1) a certificate describing the property and stating the value at which it is to be received has been filed by the corporation with the Secretary or the registrar in such manner as shall be by regulation prescribed, and a fee to be fixed by the Secretary or the registrar, respectively, to cover the cost of any necessary investigation has been paid, and (2) the Secretary or the registrar, as the case may be, finds and has certified to the corporation that such value is not more than the fair market value of the property.

BY-LAWS.

"SEC. 9. The by-laws may provide—

"(a) The time, place, manner of calling, giving notice, and conduct of, and determination of a quorum for, the meetings, annual or special, as the stockholders or directors;

"(b) The number, qualifications, and manner of choosing and fixing the tenure of office and compensation of all directors; but the number of such directors shall be not less than three, and a majority of the directors and a majority of the officers holding the office of president, treasurer, or secretary, or a corresponding office, shall be citizens of the United States resident in China; and

"(c) The manner of calling for and collecting payments upon shares of stock, the penalties and forfeitures for nonpayment, the preparation of certificates of the shares, the manner of recording their sale or transfer, and the manner of their representation at stockholders' meetings.

STOCKHOLDERS' MEETINGS.

"SEC. 10. (a) Within six months after the issuance of the certificate of incorporation of a China trade act corporation there shall be held a stockholders' meeting either at the principal office or a branch office of the corporation. Such meeting shall be called by a majority of the directors named in the articles of incorporation, and each stockholder shall be given at least 90 days' notice of the meeting either in person or by mail. The holders of two-thirds of the voting shares shall constitute a quorum at such meeting authorized to transact business. At this meeting or an adjourned meeting thereof a code of by-laws for the corporation shall be adopted by a majority of the voting shares represented at the meeting.

"(b) The following questions shall be determined only by the stockholders of a stockholders' meeting:

"(1) Adoption of the by-laws;

"(2) Amendments to the articles of incorporation or by-laws;

"(3) Authorization of the sale of the entire business of the corporation or of an independent branch of such business;

"(4) Authorization of the voluntary dissolution of the corporation; and

"(5) Authorization of application for the extension of the period of duration of the corporation.

"(c) The adoption of any such amendment or authorization shall require the approval of at least two-thirds of the voting shares. No amendment to the articles of incorporation or authorization for dissolution or extension shall take effect until (1) the corporation files a certificate with the Secretary stating the action taken, in such manner and form as shall be by regulation prescribed, and (2) such amendment or authorization is found and certified by the secretary to conform to the requirements of this act.

"(d) A certified copy of the by-laws and amendments thereof and of the minutes of all stockholders' meetings of the corporation shall be filed with the registrar.

DIRECTORS.

"SEC. 11. The directors designated in the articles of incorporation shall, until their successors take office, direct the exercise of all powers of a China trade act corporation except such as are conferred upon the stockholders by law or by the articles of incorporation or by-laws of the corporation. Thereafter the directors elected in accordance with the by-laws of the corporation shall direct the exercise of all powers of the corporation except such as are so conferred upon the stockholders. In the exercise of such powers the directors may appoint and remove and fix the compensation of such officers and employees of the corporation as they deem advisable.

REPORTS AND INSPECTION OF RECORDS.

"SEC. 12 (a) For the purposes of this act the fiscal year of a China trade act corporation shall correspond to the calendar year. The corporation shall make and file with the registrar, in such manner and form and at such time as shall be by regulation prescribed, a report of its business for each such fiscal year and of its financial condition at the close of the year. The corporation shall furnish a true copy of the report to each of its stockholders.

"(b) The registrar shall file with the Secretary copies of all reports, certificates, and certified copies received or issued by the registrar under the provisions of this act. The Secretary shall file with the registrar copies of all applications for a certificate of incorporation, and certificates received or issued by the Secretary under the provisions of this act. All such papers shall be kept on record in the offices of the registrar and the Secretary, and shall be available for public inspection under such regulations as may be prescribed.

DIVIDENDS.

"SEC. 13. Dividends declared by a China trade act corporation shall be derived wholly from the surplus profits of its business.

REVOCATION OF CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION.

"SEC. 14. The registrar may, in order to ascertain if the affairs of a China trade act corporation are conducted contrary to any provision of this act, or any other law, or any treaty of the United States, or the articles of incorporation or by-laws of the corporation, investigate the affairs of the corporation. The registrar, whenever he is satisfied that the affairs of any China trade act corporation are or have been so conducted, may institute in the United States Court for China proceedings for the revocation of the certificate of incorporation of the corporation. The court may revoke such certificate if it finds the affairs of such corporation have been so conducted. Pending final decision in the revocation proceedings the court may, at any time, upon application of the registrar or upon its own motion, make such orders in respect to the conduct of the affairs of the corporation as it deems advisable.

"SEC. 15. (a) For the efficient administration of the functions vested in the registrar by this act, he may require, by subpœna issued by him or under his direction, (1) the attendance of any witness and the production of any book, paper, document, or other evidence from any place in China at any designated place of hearing in China, or, if the witness is actually resident or temporarily sojourning outside of China, at any designated place of hearing within 50 miles of the actual residence or place of sojourn of such witness, and (2) the taking of a deposition before any designated person having power to administer oaths. In the case of a deposition the testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. The registrar, or any officer, employee, or agent of the United States authorized in writing by him, may administer oaths and examine any witness. Any witness summoned or whose deposition is taken, under this section, shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"(b) In the case of failure to comply with any subpœna or in the case of the contumacy of any witness before the registrar, or any individual so authorized by him, the registrar or such individual may invoke the aid of any Federal district court. Such court may thereupon order the witness to comply with the requirements of such subpœna and to give evidence touching the matter in question. Any failure to obey such order may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"(c) No person shall be excused from so attending and testifying or deposing, nor from so producing any book, paper, document, or other evidence on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing as to which, in obedience to a subpœna and under oath, he may so testify, except that no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"(d) For the efficient administration of the functions vested in the registrar by this act he, or any officer, employee, or agent of the United States authorized in writing by him, shall at all reasonable times for the purpose of examination have access to and the right to copy any book, account, record, paper, or correspondence relating to the business or affairs of a China trade act corporation. Any person who upon demand refuses the registrar or any duly authorized officer, employee, or agent such access or opportunity to copy, or hinders, obstructs, or resists him in the exercise of such right, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $5,000 for each such offense. Such penalty shall be recoverable in a civil suit brought in the name of the United States.

"SEC. 16. In case of the voluntary dissolution of a China trade act corporation or revocation of its certificate of incorporation, the directors of the corporation shall be trustees for the creditors and stockholders of the corporation; except that upon application to the United States Court for China by any interested party, or upon the motion of any court of competent jurisdiction in any proceeding pending before it, the court may, in its discretion, appoint as the trustees such persons, other than the directors, as it may determine. The trustees are invested with the powers, and shall do all acts, necessary to wind up the affairs of the corporation and divide among the stockholders according to their respective interests the property of the corporation remaining after all obligations against it have been settled. For the purposes of this section the trustees may sue and be sued in the name of the corporation and shall be jointly and severally liable to the stockholders and creditors of the corporation to the extent of the property coming into their hands as trustees.

REGULATIONS.

"SEC. 17. (a) The Secretary is authorized to make such regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect the functions vested in him or in the registrar by this act.

"(b) That the Secretary is authorized to prescribe and fix the amount of such fees (other than the incorporation fee) to be paid him or the registrar for services rendered by the Secretary or the registrar to any person in the administration of the provisions of this act. All fees and penalties paid under this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

PENALTIES.

"SEC. 18. No stockholder, director, officer, employee, or agent of a China trade act corporation shall make, issue, or publish any statement, written or oral, or advertisement in any form, as to the value or as to the facts affecting the value of stocks, bonds, or other evidences of debt, or as to the financial condition or transactions, or facts affecting such condition or transactions, of such corporation if it has issued or is to issue stocks, bonds, or other evidences of debt, whenever he knows or has reason to believe that any material representation in such statement or advertisement is false. No stockholder, director, officer, employee, or agent of a China trade act corporation shall, if all the authorized capital stock thereof has not been paid in, make, issue, or publish any written statement or advertisement, in any form, stating the amount of the authorized capital stock without also stating as the amount actually paid in, a sum not greater than the amount paid in. Any person violating any provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"SEC. 19. No individual, partnership, or association, or corporation not incorporated under this act or under a law of the United States, shall engage in business within China under a name in connection with which the legend 'Federal Inc. U. S. A.' is used. Any person violating this section shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $1,000 for each violation.

JURISDICTION OF SUITS AGAINST CORPORATION.

"SEC. 20. That the Federal district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all suits (except as provided by the act entitled 'An act creating a United States Court for China and prescribing the jurisdiction thereof,' approved June 30, 1906, as amended) to which a China trade act corporation, or a stockholder, director, or officer thereof in his capacity as such, is a party. Suit against the corporation may be brought in the United States Court for China, or in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or in the Federal district court for any district in which the corporation has an agent and is engaged in doing business.

FEDERAL TAXATION.

"SEC. 21. Title II of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

'CHINA TRADE ACT CORPORATIONS.

"'SEC. 264. (a) That for the purpose only of the tax imposed by section 230 there shall be allowed in the case of a corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, a credit of an amount equal to the proportion of the net income derived from sources within China (determined in a similar manner to that provided in section 217) which the par value of the shares of stock of the corporation owned on the last day of the taxable year by individual citizens of the United States or China, resident in China, bears to the par value of the whole number of shares of stock of the corporation outstanding on such date: Provided, That in no case shall the amount by which the tax imposed by section 230 is diminished by reason of such credit exceed the amount of the special dividend certified under subdivision (b) of this section.

"'(b) Such credit shall not be allowed unless the Secretary of Commerce has certified to the Commissioner (1) the amount which, during the year ending on the date of filing the return, the corporation has distributed as a special dividend to or for the benefit of such individuals as on the last day of the taxable year were citizens of the United States or China, resident in China, and owned shares of stock of the corporation, (2) that such special dividend was in addition to all other amounts payable or to be payable to such individuals or for their benefit by reason of their interest in the corporation, and (3) that such distribution has been made to or for the benefit of such individuals in proportion to the par value of the shares of stock of the corporation owned by each; except that if the corporation has more than one class of stock the certificate shall contain a statement that the articles of incorporation provide a method for the apportionment of such special dividend among such individuals and that the amount certified has been distributed in accordance with the method so provided.

"'(c) For the purposes of this section shares of stock of a corporation shall be considered to be owned by the person in whom the equitable right to the income from such shares is in good faith vested.

"'(d) As used in this section the term "China" shall have the same meaning as when used in the China trade act, 1922.'

"SEC. 22. Subdivision (b) of section 230 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) For each calendar year thereafter, 12½ per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in sections 236 and 264.'

"SEC. 23. Subdivision (f) of section 238 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by adding after the figures '262' the word and figures 'or 264.'

"SEC. 24. Subdivision (c) of section 240 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: 'A corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, shall not be deemed to be affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of this section.'

"SEC. 25. That section 2 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"'(12) A corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, shall, for the purpose of this act, be considered a domestic corporation.'

"SEC. 26. Subdivision (b) of section 213 of the revenue act of 1921 is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (12) thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding after paragraph (12) a new paragraph to read as follows:

"'(13) In the case of an individual, amounts distributed as dividends to or for his benefit by a corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, if, at the time of such distribution, he is a citizen of China, resident therein, and the equitable right to the income of the shares of stock of the corporation is in good faith vested in him.'

"SEC. 27. Subdivision (a) of section 216, paragraph (6) of subdivision (a) of section 234, and paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) of section 245, of the revenue act of 1921, are amended by inserting in each after the word and figures 'section 262' a comma and the words 'and other than a corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922.'

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO AMEND.

"SEC. 28. The Congress of the United States reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal any provision of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "An act to authorize the creation of corporations for the purpose of engaging in business within China"; and the Senate agree to the same.

A. J. VOLSTEAD,
L. C. DYER,
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
T. J. WALSH,
FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4810) to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The amendment of the Senate strikes out all after the enacting clause in the House bill. The House recedes from its disagreement therewith with an amendment which is a substitute for the Senate amendment. The effect of the substitute amendment is explained under the following headings:

SCOPE OF BUSINESS.

The House bill restricted the scope of the business of a China trade act corporation to business to be conducted wholly within China and carried on with persons in China, except that the corporation might purchase in the United States for transportation to China goods necessary to the establishment and conduct of its business, might issue and sell its stock at places outside of China, and might do business outside of China which was approved by the Secretary of Commerce as necessary to the establishment and conduct of its business in China. The corporation could not engage in the banking business, but could engage in the insurance business.

The Senate amendment places one general limitation upon the scope of business in which a China trade act corporation may engage; namely, that the business must constitute commerce between the people of the United States and the people of China, or be business properly connected therewith or necessary and incidental thereto. In effect the business of a China trade act corporation under the Senate amendment might be held limited to the import and export trade.

The bill as agreed to by the conference committee retains the House provision of restricting the business of a China trade act corporation to business within China and to such other business as is properly connected therewith or necessary and incidental thereto, and further requires that the principal business be such as will, in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce, aid in developing markets in China for goods produced in the United States. This corporation is prohibited from engaging in either the banking business or the insurance business. Corresponding to the scope of business as agreed upon by the conference committee is the provision restricting the privilege of the use of the legend "Federal Inc., U. S. A." to its use in connection with business in China conducted by a China trade act corporation or by any other corporation created under Federal law.

FEDERAL SUPERVISION.

The House bill placed the supervision of a China trade act corporation and the administration of the act in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce; except that, if the Secretary chooses to have the functions vested in him performed in China instead of the District of Columbia he must do so by delegating the performance of such functions to an agent designated jointly by himself and the Secretary of State. The House bill also contained a further provision that the regulations for the administration of the act were to be jointly prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of State.

The Senate amendment places this supervision and administration solely in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce. It contains no restrictions as to whether the Secretary of Commerce is to perform the functions vested in him in the District of Columbia or in China through subordinates.

The bill as agreed to by the conferees places the supervision of a China trade act corporation and the administration of the provisions of the act in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce, with the limitation that certain of these functions are to be performed, under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce, by a registrar located in China and appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, while other of the functions are to be performed in the District of Columbia by the Secretary of Commerce.

In order to facilitate supervision in the District of Columbia by the Secretary, the bill as agreed to by the conferees requires the corporation (1) to be a District of Columbia corporation, (2) to file its articles of incorporation and its application for a certificate of incorporation with the Secretary of Commerce and have the application granted and amendments to the articles approved by the Secretary at his office in Washington, and (3) to have as one of the temporary directors a resident of the District of Columbia. On the other hand, such functions as the valuation of property received by the corporation in exchange for shares of stock is left either to the Secretary of Commerce or the registrar, and revocation proceedings are to be instituted in the United States Court for China by the registrar only. The bill as agreed to by the conferees also requires that copies of the report of the corporation, the certificate of incorporation, and all other certificates and certified copies issued by either the Secretary or the registrar in respect to such matters, for instance, as the value of property of the corporation received in exchange for shares of stock, amendments to the articles of incorporation, by-laws, and the minutes of stockholders' meetings shall be filed and open to inspection in the offices of both the Secretary of Commerce and the registrar.

CAPITAL STOCK.

The House bill provided, and both the Senate amendment and the bill as agreed to by the conferees provided likewise, that an amount equal to 25 per cent of the amount of the capital stock must at the time of the filing of the articles of incorporation have been in good faith subscribed and actually paid in cash or personal or real property. The House bill further provided that all shares of stock shall, when issued, be paid for in cash or personal or real property at not less than their par value, and when issued shall be held to be full paid and shall be nonassessable, whether or not they have been full paid prior to issuance.

The Senate amendment provides, as in the House bill, that the shares of stock shall be issued at par value and may be paid for either in cash or personal or real property. The Senate amendment does not provide, however, that the shares when issued shall be full paid and nonassessable, but provides that the amount of the par value that has been paid shall at all times be indorsed upon the face of the certificate representing the share.

The bill as agreed to by the conferees retains the House provisions that the shares shall be issued at par value only, may be paid for in cash or personal or real property, and shall be, when issued, held full paid and nonassessable. The bill as agreed to by the conferees further places the duty upon the corporation not to issue any share until the amount of the par value thereof has been paid in.

The House bill places no liability upon shareholders except that provided in their subscription contracts after the share has been issued to them.

The Senate amendment provides that the shareholder is liable not only upon his subscription contract, but also that the indorsement of the amount of the par value of the share paid shall not relieve the shareholder from liability to creditors, and, further, does not prevent the stock from being assessable even after the subscription price has been paid in full. The Senate amendment also provides that the shareholders shall be individually liable to the creditors to the amount of the unpaid stock held by them for all debts of the corporation until such time as the whole amount of the capital stock has been paid in.

The bill as agreed to by the conferees, while requiring the full par value of the share to be paid at the time it is issued, does not place any liability, either by way of assessment by the corporation or liability to the creditors for its debts, upon the shareholder after the issuance of the share.

AMERICAN CONTROL.

The House bill provided that a majority of the voting shares should at all times be owned by citizens of the United States, that a majority of the temporary directors and a majority of the temporary officers shall be citizens of the United States, and that a majority of the permanent directors and a majority of the permanent officers holding the office of president, treasurer, or secretary shall be citizens of the United States resident in China.

The Senate amendment merely provided that a majority of the temporary directors and a majority of the permanent directors shall be citizens of the United States, with no limitation as to residence.

The bill as agreed to by the conferees requires that a majority of the temporary directors shall be citizens of the United States, that at least one of them shall be a resident of the District of Columbia, and that a majority of the permanent directors and a majority of the permanent officers holding the office of president, treasurer, or secretary shall be citizens of the United States resident in China.

SUITS AGAINST THE CORPORATION.

The House bill provided that suits against a China trade act corporation might be brought in the United States Court for China, the judicial district in which the cause of action arose, or the judicial district in which a corporation has an agent and is engaged in doing business. The House bill further provided that any judgment or decree rendered by the court in any suit against a China trade act corporation should, upon the presentation of a certified copy thereof to the United States Court for China or any Federal district court, be enforced by such court.

The Senate amendment has no provision in this respect, the result being that under the Senate amendment suit might be brought against the corporation only in the place whereof it is an inhabitant.

The bill as agreed to by the conferees retains so much of the House provision as provides for suit to be brought against the China trade act corporation in the United States Court for China, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or the Federal district court for the judicial district in which the corporation has an agent and is engaged in doing business.

FEDERAL TAXATION.

The House bill provided that a China trade act corporation should be totally exempt from the corporation income tax and excess-profits tax unless it derived 5 per cent or more of its gross income from sources within the United States. The exemption was conditioned on the distribution in dividends during the taxable year of at least one-third of the net income of the corporation. The legal effect of the language of the House bill was also to exempt such of the stockholders of the corporation as were United States citizens from normal income tax on dividends received from the corporation. The House bill also provided that a China trade act corporation should be considered a domestic corporation within the meaning of the income tax law, but that it should not be deemed to be affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of the section of the income tax law providing for consolidated returns of net income.

The Senate amendment provides no exemption from Federal taxation.

The bill as agreed to by the conference committee contains amendments to the income-tax law allowing narrower exemptions than provided in the House bill. It is proposed to allow to a China trade act corporation a credit on its net income of an amount equal to that proportion of its net income from sources within China which its capital stock owned by citizens of the United States or China, resident in China, bears to its entire capital stock. This exemption is, however, allowed only if an amount, equal to the saving in tax, is distributed as a special dividend to such of its stockholders as are citizens of the United States or China and reside in China. Citizens of China, resident therein, are exempted from tax on their dividends, but all other stockholders are subjected to both surtax and normal tax on all their dividends from a China trade act corporation. The provision of the House bill treating these corporations as domestic corporations for the purposes of the income tax law is retained, as well as the provision prohibiting such a corporation from making consolidated returns of net income with other corporations. The conference bill also provides that a China trade act corporation shall not be permitted to avail itself of the privilege allowed other corporations by the revenue act, namely, to credit against its income tax, dollar for dollar, the amount paid to foreign countries as income, war profits, or excess-profits taxes.

A. J. VOLSTEAD,
L. C. DYER,
HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I think it is not necessary to devote a great deal of time to the further discussion of the bill, as the report gives, I hope, in a fairly intelligent way the various changes that have been made in the bill in conference. The Senate bill proceeded upon the theory that what was wanted was power to create corporations that would engage simply in foreign commerce, shipping goods from this country to China, and from China back. The object of the legislation was not to do anything of that kind. The object was to create corporations that might do business practically as domestic corporations in China. The business is being developed over in that country in that fashion by foreign nations—by England, Japan, Germany, and other countries. Up to within recent times our people have taken advantage of English charters. Lately, however, the English Government saw fit to change those charters so as to place the control of their corporations entirely with the English subjects. In that fashion they have been able within the last year or so to exclude Americans from participation in a great deal of Chinese trade which otherwise might have been secured.

The bill, as it has been finally agreed upon by the conference committee of the two Houses, practically restores the House bill. The provisions agreed on authorize the creation of corporations for the purpose of doing business in China. The Senate bill struck out the provision contained in the House bill granting tax exemption. We have in conference substituted a provision in lieu of the one that we have in the House bill, exempting to some extent these corporations from taxation. It is absolutely necessary as we look at it, if we are to do business successfully in China, to place the American citizen upon the same plane in that respect as the English, German, French, or Japanese subjects who do business there. They, as I understand it, have exemption from taxes. The bill, as we have agreed upon it, does not give quite as much exemption as was given in the House bill. Through a mistake in an amendment offered and agreed to on the floor of the House, we actually gave more tax exemption than the House intended, more than the bill as we reported it from the Committee on the Judiciary really gave.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. KING. What further taxes are exempted?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The citizen resident in this country gets no exemption whatever. If he lives here and does business in China, he pays the same tax as though he was incorporated in some other corporation formed in this country; but an American citizen residing in China, or a Chinaman residing in China, gets an exemption to the extent of the Chinese business only. The normal income and surtax upon the dividends, however, have to be paid by the American citizen resident in China or elsewhere; he gets no exemption except of the corporation tax on business done in China. The Chinaman gets an exemption from all taxes if he is a resident of China, but the American citizen resident in China pays the normal income tax.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What is the necessity for this exemption feature? What is the reason for this?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The English, Japanese, and other corporations that are foreign to China are granted an exemption, and it is necessary that our citizens, if they are to compete, must get a certain amount of exemption so as to be on a par with them in doing business.

You can not expect Chinamen who are resident in China to pay taxes to the United States. The foreigner who comes over here, for instance the German or the Englishman, does not pay any taxes to Germany or to England when they become residents of this country. The Chinese who live in their own country can not be asked to pay any tax to this country. We must exempt those people, and to some extent exempt residents of the United States who live in China.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have been very much opposed to special charters issued by the Federal Government, by acts of Congress. I do not believe that it is a very good policy.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. These are not special charters.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Why is it deemed desirable to authorize the corporations to be formed in the District of Columbia? Can they be formed under the State laws of the various States?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They can be formed under the State laws, but here is the difficulty. The Chinese do not know the States nor their laws, but they do know the United States. The United States is looked upon with favor in China, and if they can secure American corporations in which to do business, it is believed, and I believe they are entirely justified in that belief, that it will be a decided advantage in trying to build up commerce between this country and China.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am wondering whether it was that or this tax-exemption feature that could not be managed under the State laws.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is another very good reason. I think you have to allow Chinamen to be exempt from American taxes in their own home. You can not expect a Chinaman to become interested in the business we are trying to build up in China if he has to pay taxes in this country in addition to paying taxes in his own country.

Mr. LAYTON. How could a Chinaman living in China be taxed by any authority of the United States, anyhow?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He might be if he becomes a stockholder in an American corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair). The gentleman from Minnesota moves the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

"BLUE-SKY" LEGISLATION.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 332.

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order for the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to call up for consideration under the general rules of the House H. R. 10598, being a bill to prevent the use of the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce for transporting and for promoting or procuring the sale of securities contrary to the laws of the States, and for other purposes, and providing penalties for the violation thereof. Consideration of the bill not to interfere with bills from the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Ways and Means, or conference reports.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution just read makes in order the consideration in the House of what is known as the "blue-sky" bill. It may not be out of place to state that the "blue-sky" bill refers to a bill that prohibits the sale of stocks in spurious companies or companies without assets to the people. Several States have adopted laws of that character.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for just a minute?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would prefer that the gentleman let me go on.

Mr. Speaker, 12 years ago the State of Kansas, finding a large number of enterprising gentlemen surveying the sky, and selling large areas of it to prospective buyers, decided to put a stop to that practice. Thereupon the legislation that prevented the sale of stocks in companies of that character that had blue sky to sell was enacted and called "blue-sky" legislation. Up to this time, following the lead of the State of Kansas, 42 other States have adopted similar laws. Much improvement has been made in the character of the legislation, as the States one after another have taken up legislation of this character. It now becomes necessary for the States that have this legislation to be protected from States that are without it. There are still six States in which no laws have been enacted against companies organizing with hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars of capital, but with mere pennies of assets. This bill will prevent the use of the mails and other instrumentalities of interstate commerce in communicating information in respect to or in the carrying of the stock of these companies from one State to another.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. KING. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement as to the "blue sky." It undoubtedly covers, I presume, the blue sky of the United States, but it does not cover the blue sky of Italy, Yugoslavia, and France, and other foreign countries that sell stock in this country now.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Many people invest in the blue skies of Italy, and always have. Many are now investing in the blue skies of Yugoslavia, but the legislation now under consideration deals with the United States mails and interstate commerce.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know how careful a study the gentleman has made of this measure, but does it in any way abrogate State laws or affect them in any way?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It does not.

Mr. WALSH. They still would be the law and this will not supplant them?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On the contrary, this is intended to and is calculated to strengthen the State laws. This is to enable the States to enforce their own laws, such as they have enacted, and it is to prevent interstate commerce in stocks that are prohibited in intrastate commerce.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather move the previous question, after I have yielded some time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and permit somebody who has studied the details of this bill to answer questions.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The inference is that nobody else has studied it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce are thoroughly prepared to answer questions concerning the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think I shall not use all of that time.

This bill came with the unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the question of a special rule for its consideration was presented to the Committee on Rules several weeks—indeed, I think, some months ago—and the Committee on Rules unanimously reported the rule. From my study of the bill, which I confess has been somewhat superficial, it seems to me to be a very important measure and a very meritorious one; at any rate one well worthy of consideration by the House.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10598.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10598.

Mr. WINSLOW. Pending action on that motion, the chairman would ask that we proceed in general debate for three hours, the time to be evenly divided and controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], of the committee, and the chairman of the committee, and the debate be confined to the subject matter of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours on the subject matter of the bill, and that the time be divided equally, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the other half by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Since I had the conversation with the gentleman from Massachusetts as to the time to be allowed for general debate, I have had requests from two or three Members for a short time, but not on the bill. I have had requests for very little time for debate on the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. Of course, the gentleman realizes that this bill is one upon which the Members may need some information, and it naturally will excite more or less interest as it goes along.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the gentleman will find that those explanations will be required more during the reading of the bill for amendment than in the general debate. It is rather a technical bill and will provoke interrogatories as the debate proceeds. The only time that I have had requests for so far is for time to be devoted to subjects not limited to this bill. If it is limited to the bill I will not have requests for the yielding of much time.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman promise that the time to be devoted to other subjects will not be unduly prolonged?

Mr. BARKLEY. It will not be more than 30 or 40 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Then I agree.

Mr. WALSH. Is it expected that the House will do any more than conclude the general debate to-day?

Mr. WINSLOW. It would seem that it would not be necessary to do it, so far as I know.

Mr. WALSH. And that the consideration will be continued on Thursday under the five-minute rule?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that three hours be the limit for general debate, half to be controlled by himself and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] will please take the chair.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10598, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10598, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10598) to prevent the use of the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce for transporting and for promoting or procuring the sale of securities contrary to the laws of the States, and for other purposes, and providing penalties for the violation thereof.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. ARENTZ. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act the term "person" shall mean and include a natural person, firm, copartnership, association, syndicate, joint-stock company, unincorporated company or organization, common-law trust, or any corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia or of any State or Territory of the United States or of any foreign government—

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the House has had under consideration for several months the appropriation bills, and it ought to be more or less refreshing to turn for a part of the day to the consideration of a bill that affords an opportunity for real constructive and remedial legislation. Our Congress is, I think, one of the most conservative of all legislative bodies. No reforms ever start here. We usually follow other Governments in progressive legislation, and we act only after other Governments have acted and after we are forced to do so by organized public sentiment.

Now, that has been the case with regard to legislation to prevent the sale of fraudulent and worthless securities. All of the great Governments of the world, except our own, have enacted legislation upon this subject. England passed such legislation as early as 1862. It passed a more comprehensive bill of that kind in 1895, and in 1908 Parliament passed what is known as the consolidated companies act, which regulates the issue and sale of securities in Great Britain. It is a very good measure. In fact, since the passage of that act the people of Great Britain have not been imposed upon by the sale of fraudulent securities as has been the case in the United States. France has also a similar law, as have also Germany and Italy and Belgium and some of the British dominions; and fraudulent security laws have been enacted in at least three of the Provinces of Canada—in Manitoba, Alberta, and Saskatchewan—and other Provinces of Canada are now considering similar laws.

We have what is known as "blue sky" bills in 39 of our States. Kansas, as has been the case with other important questions, blazed the trail for fraudulent securities legislation in the United States by the enactment of the first law in 1911. The banking commissioner of that State discovered that the people of Kansas were being imposed upon by fraudulent flotations, and he began an agitation which resulted in the enactment of the first "blue sky" law, as it is called, in 1911.

Kansas was followed by other States, South Dakota, I believe, and West Virginia, and Michigan and Iowa and other States, until now 39 States have enacted what are called "blue sky" laws. Three other States, namely, New York, Maryland, and New Jersey, have enacted what are called fraud laws, which are not a success, and are not effective to prevent the sale of fraudulent securities. The legislature of the State of Washington passed a bill of this character to prevent the sale of fraudulent securities last year, but the governor of the State vetoed it because he felt it was not what it ought to be. It was too loosely drawn with reference to oil leases or oil stock, and might have allowed the sale of fraudulent oil stocks, and for that reason he vetoed the bill. I am told by the secretary of state of the State of Washington that the next legislature will, in all probability, enact a comprehensive fraudulent securities law. The question is being agitated in other States that have not any legislation of that kind now.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have not had opportunity to study this measure, but I wish to ask the author of the bill what provision is being taken to prevent the formation of legitimate companies that might compete with companies already in operation? I have had in mind a similar case where a company was organized, where the organizers were legitimate business men, and the competitors of the company made it so interesting through the Post Office Department for this company that by process of a lawsuit they put the company out of business.

Mr. DENISON. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that this legislation does not deal with the question of the formation of companies, or the issuance of stock, or anything of that kind. That is a question that must be governed by local laws. This legislation, as I will explain in a few moments, deals only with interstate transactions in securities. The question of the organization of corporations and the issuance of stocks, bonds, and so forth, is a question that is, and ought to be, controlled by the local laws of the respective States. Now, the question that arises is whether or not legislation of this kind is needed. Is there any necessity for it?

Gentlemen, I want to give you some information that may be of interest. The complaint that is being made by the officers who are charged with the administration of the different State laws is that their laws are being evaded and violated every day by dishonest and crooked promoters, who are organizing their corporations and sending their stocks and bonds for sale through the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce into the different States and selling them contrary to the laws of those States. The States that have blue-sky laws have been very successful in preventing these fraudulent flotations within their borders. They have not prevented all fraud, and no law can be enacted that will absolutely prevent all fraud, but they have controlled it to a large extent, and their laws are working very well, especially those that have been enacted in recent years. But they are being rendered more or less ineffective by reason of the immunities accorded to transactions in interstate commerce, these securities being sent into the States through the agencies of interstate commerce contrary to the laws of those States. During the war we had the War Finance Corporation, and there was a committee known as the Capital Issues Committee that in a general way controlled the issuance of all securities during the period of the war.

We enacted that legislation on the theory that we ought to marshal the credit of the Nation as well as its man power and its finances for war purposes, and so the Capital Issues Committee here in Washington had supervision over the issuance of securities and had a splendid opportunity to observe and study the applications that were made to them for permission to sell their securities. They made a study of this subject, and when they concluded their work and made their final report to the Congress they dealt somewhat with this subject. I want to present their report to the House briefly. I will ask the Clerk to read the part of the report which I have marked. It is illuminating and it shows the necessity for legislation of this kind.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee desires again to call the attention of Congress to the insistent demand and need for such legislation as will prevent the wholesale distribution of hundreds of millions of worthless or fraudulent stock which is being sold for cash or exchanged for Liberty bonds. The committee, had it continued its activities until the time prescribed in the act, would not have been able to meet the situation; first, because it was intended as a temporary body only, created for the purpose of conserving money, labor, and capital during the period of the war; and, second, because it had power neither to compel submission to its jurisdiction nor to enforce its findings.

One of the strongest arguments in favor of Federal legislation to check the offering and sale of fraudulent or worthless issues is the magnitude of the traffic. Before the war this traffic amounted to tens of millions of dollars annually, but reports made to the committee from all parts of the country during the past eight months indicate that this traffic has greatly increased during the war, due to high wages and to the further fact millions of people have invested in Liberty bonds. The estimate of $500,000,000 annually devoted to the purchase of such fraudulent or worthless stocks seems to the committee to be too conservative. This sum represents sheer waste and net loss to the people and the Nation not only of dollars but of morale, confidence, and the incentive to save. The Nation's loss can not be measured alone in money values but in terms of those things which make for good citizenship.

Worthless and fraudulent promotions have been reported from all of the 12 Federal reserve districts and from practically every State. One enterprise whose operations were condemned by the committee claimed to have sold its stock in 46 States, and probably there is not a community in the country, large or small, which has not suffered loss.

State regulation of security issues, which has been undertaken in more than half of the States, has been effective only to a limited extent, principally where a company has organized to operate and sell its securities in the State of its creation. But whenever the enterprise has crossed State lines and its securities are sold indiscriminately from ocean to ocean, the State commissions have been powerless, as they can not reach beyond their own boundary lines, and no State system can be devised for complete harmony by which the authorities of the several States may work in unison.

Purveyors of fraudulent and worthless securities do not generally approach the experienced investor, but operate among those who, through lack of experience and failure to consult responsible banking friends, fall easy victims.

In asking for the enactment of a law to protect the interests of the Government and the public investor, the committee calls your attention to the fact that regulation of security issues has long been an established practice among many nations which enjoy highly developed financial systems. This includes the leading countries of Europe as well as the English colonies. In England such regulation has existed in some form since 1862.

In saying that the United States is almost alone among the advanced nations in having no definite means of checking irresponsible forms of finance, the committee is not in ignorance of the work of the Department of Justice and the Post Office Department. Both have been successful in the detection and prosecution of fraud; but in the very nature of that task they do not and can not act until after fraud has been perpetrated. The purpose of new legislation should be to prevent the perpetration of the fraud.

Having in view the inability of the several States to control financial operations beyond their boundaries, it follows that there is but one agency which can check the major part of the traffic in fraudulent and worthless securities, and that agency is the National Government. As long as its powers are not invoked to suppress this traffic, the organization of irresponsible companies, the sale of their securities, and the deception of the public will proceed.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. In glancing over the bill I am not certain as to whether its provisions would apply to the securities of a corporation after it had gone into a certain number of States and obtained there a license and privilege to sell its securities in those States. Would this bill, if enacted into law, prevent the promoters of that organization or the owners of the stock from using the mails in sending their material to States where they had actually gotten their license to operate?

Mr. DENISON. It would not. The provisions of this bill apply only to securities that can not lawfully be sold in the States into which they are sent.

Mr. BURTNESS. It would not apply to States where the company had made its application and been granted the right to issue securities?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does this bill undertake to exclude matter from the mail that is not fraudulent, or only fraudulent matter, that is relating to companies organized with little or no capital, which issue a lot of stock and have nothing to sell except blue sky?

Mr. DENISON. Let me explain briefly what the bill does.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I should like to know what the scope of the bill is, and what you are trying to exclude from the mails that the criminal statutes do not already exclude from the mails.

Mr. DENISON. I was coming to that in a moment, but if the gentleman prefers to have me divert now——

Mr. RAMSEYER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not want to break into the continuity of the gentleman's argument, and if he will come to that later, that will be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. DENISON. I was coming to that, but I will stop here and do it now because I want my friend from Iowa to be perfectly satisfied.

The blue-sky laws of 39 States provide in different forms that before any security may be sold to the people of those respective States the issuing company must qualify the security by appearing before an officer of the State, a commission created by the act, or the secretary of state, or the State bank commissioner, or some other official of the State, and present information concerning the security that they propose to sell to the public. The laws require that they come before the official, present all the facts connected with the corporation, showing their assets and the amount of their liabilities, and so forth, and they must show the State officer that the proposition is free from fraud. Then when they make the showing required by the law of the State they are given permission to sell the securities in that State. In other words, the laws of these States provide in different forms that before the securities may be placed upon the market they must be qualified by showing to the State official that there is no fraud in them.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENISON. I want to answer the other question fully first, but I will yield.

Mr. LAYTON. As a matter of fact there is hardly one mining corporation in a thousand as to which you can prove the assets in advance. I remember distinctly that I was offered and I wish I had taken a wad of Tonopah Mining for a few cents a share. It was a gamble. Most mining corporations when they are first chartered are gambles. Nobody under heaven knows what they are going to be worth.

Mr. DENISON. I am not able to give much information on mining propositions. I do know this, that the people of the different States ought to have the right, and they do have the right, to enact such legislation as they think proper to protect their own citizens from fraud in the sale of securities. That is a broad proposition, upon which we all may well stand, that this is a matter with which the States ought to have the right to deal and protect their people as they think best. After a State has enacted a law of that kind it ought to be respected, not only by the people of that particular State but by the people of other States as well.

There has been a growing tendency in late years to centralize legislation and governmental activities here in Washington. We have been gradually encroaching upon fields of legislation that more properly belong to the States. I believe the time has come when we ought to decentralize our government as much as we can; and when practically all of the States have enacted legislation upon a particular subject that is being boldly evaded and violated by use of the mails and other Federal agencies Congress ought to act and cooperate with the States to the extent, at least, of prohibiting the use of its agencies for such unlawful purposes. This bill is intended to see that the people of each State respect the law of the other States.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Whether the State laws are limited to fraudulent schemes or not, I want to state that if they are fraudulent they can be kept out of the mails now. For fraudulent schemes such companies are being prosecuted now and their stuff excluded from the mail. We have a comprehensive law on the statute book, which has been there for over 25 years, and any scheme intended to defraud or a device to defraud is a violation of the criminal code.

Mr. DENISON. I will explain that to the gentleman directly. We have postal fraud laws, of course. But they will only punish fraud after the fraud has been committed; the purpose of this legislation is to stop the fraud before it is committed.

Mr. RAMSEYER. After the deal has been made; that is all you are doing.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman has apparently not read the bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. You would have arrested the greater part of the mineral development of the United States if you had had this law in operation.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman takes the position that all mining operations are pure gamble, and that we ought not to interefere with it in any way. I do not agree to that. I think some mining operations are straight and legitimate, and this bill would not interfere with them.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. ARENTZ. Gentlemen have all heard of George Graham Rice. He would hire a big office and spend 95 cents for every dollar he took in. Those are the men the gentleman is referring to as being legitimate dealers in mining stocks. But there are others who do not do that. I never purchased but two stocks in my life and those were in two corporations I was associated with. I never sold a share of stock in my life.

Mr. DENISON. Now, gentlemen, I will proceed if you will permit me to do so, and complete my statement, and then I will be glad to answer any questions that gentlemen may ask if I can. I would like to get an explanation of the provisions of the bill before the House, because I see that some gentlemen do not understand the bill. The Capital Issues Committee estimated that there are $500,000,000 of the people's money being lost each year through worthless securities. The highest estimate of the revenue that the Government will realize from any tariff law is $500,000,000. Think of it, gentlemen, and it is mostly the poor people whose savings are being invaded and who are losing this $500,000,000 each year through these fraudulent stock flotations. There is a duty resting on us as Representatives of the people to try to stop it if we can. Think what a great thing it will be if we can save to the people any great part of that amount that is being stolen from them by these dishonest piratical promoters. That is what this bill will do. It has teeth in it, and if we can pass it in substantially the form that it is reported we will drive the crooks out of the country or put them in the penitentiary. We can do it, and we ought to do it. Congress has been asleep too long now to this public menace. If we had enacted legislation of this kind four years ago, hundreds of thousands of our people who made heavy sacrifices to buy Liberty bonds would have owned their bonds to-day. As it is they have been induced to sell them or exchange them for worthless blue-sky securities that promised a greater return, but were in fact worth no more than so much blue sky.

The Treasury Department estimates that there had been $400,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds taken from the people after the war by dishonest promoters who went to the people and told them that they could not afford to keep the Government securities which only bore 4½ per cent interest. They persuaded them that they ought to change them for securities that would yield 15 to 25 and 50 per cent, and, of course, many fell for it. So many Liberty bonds which people had bought until it hurt out of patriotic motives were taken from them and they were given blue-sky securities pure and simple. Congress has never seemed to take any interest in this legislation, although the Treasury Department has time and again urged that something be done to stop it. President Taft recommended to Congress during his administration the enactment of a blue-sky law; President Wilson did the same, and Secretary GLASS appeared before a committee of the House urging it. But, as I said, we are inflicted here sometimes with inertia and have only after long delay been aroused to the necessity of protecting the people from this class of big-business buccaneers.

The State securities commissioners, the officials who are charged with the administration of the security laws of the different States, have reached the conclusion that they are powerless to prevent these fraudulent flotations unless the Federal Government does something to stop the evasion of their laws by use of the mails and other interstate agencies.

Here is the situation: These promoters have learned that they can not go into the States that have blue-sky laws and sell their dishonest stocks and bonds. They have learned that they can not do it without being prosecuted. So they have worked out their schemes by using the mails and the telephones to carry on their nefarious business through the channels of interstate commerce.

They are doing it to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars each year. They are robbing the people of moderate means, but they do not disturb the banks or business men. They select men and women of moderate means for their victims. Since I introduced this bill many letters have come to me telling of instances where widow women, whose husbands had been killed in railroad accidents and who had collected damages, have been robbed of every dollar they had by these promoters, who send them lurid literature describing their fraudulent offerings in glowing colors and promising fabulous returns.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Everybody is against these transactions, but the question I want to submit to the gentleman is this: Women who are defrauded out of money and Liberty bonds, is not that done through the men who go to them and sell the stock and not through the mails? My observation has been that these sales are made by persons coming in personal contact with the persons to whom they sell the stock, and such persons can be punished by the State laws, except in a few of the Eastern States which have not seen fit to pass such laws.

The gentleman's bill does not protect the people in the States that have no laws against blue-sky operations. What percentage of these sales is made through the mail or other agencies of interstate commerce and what percentage is made by individual salesmen?

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman from Iowa expects me to give him the percentage on that, he will be disappointed, because I can not do so. All I know is that the State officials who are charged with the administration of State securities laws tell me that the greater part of these fraudulent transactions is now being done through the mails. Of course, there is an occasional case of a fraudulent sale by persons inside the States, but that is a State matter and the Federal Government is not going to be concerned with that kind of a transaction. However, we can see to it that the Federal agencies—the mails and the other agencies over which the Federal Government has exclusive control—are not improperly used to violate these different State laws.

Mr. RAMSEYER. In 1919 there were a great many stock sales in the Middle West, especially in Iowa. I heard of a great number of them, and in every case I heard of the stock was sold by an individual. I did not hear of any sales being made through the mails or other agencies. Since that time the State has passed a law which prohibits that.

Mr. DENISON. Certainly. The State of Iowa now has a law which prohibits it. Iowa formerly had a securities law, but for some reason that law was held unconstitutional. If my friend from Iowa will consult the official who has charge of the administration of the securities law of that State, he will tell him to what extent the State of Iowa is being imposed on by these dishonest and crooked promoters who are carrying on their sales through the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce; and by the way, let me say that the administrative officer of the State of Iowa is very much in favor of this bill and is asking that we enact it as soon as we can in order to protect the people of Iowa from these promoters from other States. I do not believe that there is any State which has been imposed on more than the people of the State of Iowa through the sale of fraudulent stocks. I get that information from one of the Senators of that State and from certain of the members of the delegation of that State in the House.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Section 7 provides that every sale or contract for sale of any security or securities made or in any manner directly induced by or through any of the acts made unlawful by sections 2 or 3 of this act shall be void at the election of the purchaser. It then goes on to provide for suits in the United States courts. As I understand it, this bill makes it an offense to do certain things with the mail. I would like to have the gentleman discuss this section 7 in the light of whether that does not go beyond any protection of the mails and give rights in the United States courts that do not exist now.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman has asked that question and I shall answer it now.

Mr. HILL. I do not want to trespass on the order of procedure, but I would like to hear that explanation because it seems to me that is out of the purview of the first two sections.

Mr. DENISON. It is not at all. Let me state briefly what the bill does. It prohibits sending through the mails or through any other agency of interstate commerce any security from a point in one State to a point in another State where it is unlawful to sell that security. It also prohibits the sending through the mails or any other agency of interstate commerce any post card, letter, circular, or prospectus which offers for sale a security when it is sent into a State where that security can not lawfully be sold. In other words, this bill recognizes the right of the States to legislate upon this subject, and it gives to the States the cooperation of the Federal Government to the extent of forbidding the use of its agencies to violate the State laws; and I think the Federal Government ought to do that.

Mr. LAYTON. Right there will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. DENISON. If I can.

Mr. LAYTON. If I understand it, the power of exclusion is vested in the sovereignty of the State.

Mr. DENISON. What does the gentleman mean by the power of exclusion?

Mr. LAYTON. The power of excluding transmission through the mail into that State rests simply with that State.

Mr. DENISON. Not at all. The States can not control the United States mails.

Mr. LAYTON. I am not talking about that, but they do this: There is no security that can be sent into the State where the State has not approved of that security.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman from Delaware is mistaken. That is exactly what is being done to-day, and that is what this legislation seeks to prevent.

Mr. LAYTON. This bill endeavors to prevent that.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Suppose that State tried to exclude something of real value; suppose it arbitrarily attempted to exclude Liberty bonds from that State.

Mr. DENISON. None of the States would do that.

Mr. LAYTON. I am not talking about whether they would or not. Would they have that authority?

Mr. DENISON. They would have that authority, but this bill exempts certain securities from its own provisions, and among them is the security that the gentleman mentions. That is found in a subsequent provision of the bill. If the gentleman from Delaware will examine section 4 of the bill, he will find where securities are classified and certain classes of securities are exempted from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Following the question of the gentleman from Maryland, I was myself considering that section.

Mr. DENISON. I have not completed my answer to that question as yet.

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall ask my question while I am on my feet, so that the gentleman can have the benefit of my point of view. Is not the matter of a contract of sale made in a State one of State police regulation? It is determined by the State legislation, as to whether that sale is valid or invalid. In that event, can Congress say that a contract made under certain conditions in a State shall be invalid? That is a question that strikes me about this particular section.

Mr. DENISON. I will answer the gentleman and explain that.

In the first place, we do not deal with any contract made in the State. We are dealing with a transaction in interstate commerce. We are not dealing with any transactions that are intrastate, so that will answer that question. The bill provides penalties; it provides a penalty of a fine and imprisonment for any person who violates its provisions, but in order to better secure its enforcement it provides a double penalty. And it provides in the section referred to by the gentleman from Maryland that if anyone sends a stock through the United States mails into another State and sells it contrary to the law of that State and contrary to the provisions of this act the person who purchases that stock may recover the amount of his purchase price, together with all costs and attorneys' fees, so that the man who violates the law can not profit by his act.

Mr. HILL. May I ask a question about that? Why is not that a matter in which there should be procedure under the State law and not under the Federal law?

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman tell me how he could get at the matter in the State courts? This is an interstate transaction under this bill. A man in Texas may sell stock to a man in New Hampshire, but how can the man in New Hampshire get service on the Texas man in the New Hampshire courts?

Mr. HILL. Go to New Hampshire and get after him.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman must remember that this bill only deals with interstate transactions.

Mr. HILL. Now, section 215 of the Penal Code originally provided that there must have been devised a scheme to defraud and that the mails must be used in pursuance of that scheme. That was found not to be sufficiently broad, and so that section was modified so that anybody having devised any scheme to defraud, and incidentally using the mails, could be prosecuted. That added very largely to the criminal procedure under that section. Now, I would like to know exactly what this bill adds to the existing protection of the mails. It seems to me that sections 2 and 3 deal with protection of the mail, but it seems to me that section 7 goes beyond that and takes up matters which would seem to be normally within the police power of the States.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. We do not deal with anything that the States can control. It does not deal with any crime that the States can handle, and ought not to do so. This bill only deals with violations of State laws that the State itself can not punish. If a man in Oklahoma, for instance, violates the law of Illinois or Indiana by sending a worthless stock or fraudulent stock through the mails, he is not a refugee from justice. He has not committed any crime in the State of Illinois, and that State has no way of getting him.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Has the gentleman looked at the decisions on that question?

Mr. DENISON. I certainly have.

Mr. STEVENSON. I take it that the gentleman has, but I remember a case where a man in the city of Washington here sent some medicine to a young lady in South Carolina, which she took in pursuance of an unlawful purpose, and it killed her. They caught him over here, and they held that he had committed a crime in South Carolina.

Mr. DENISON. These questions have all been looked into by the various attorneys general of the States having "blue-sky laws." And, gentlemen, there are 40 of the States that need this legislation.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am with you on the legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. May I be permitted to say that it would depend largely on the decisions of the gentleman's own State of South Carolina in that particular; but is it not a fact that under the common law the sale is supposed to take place in the State where the matter is delivered to the mails or common carrier? If you sell stock from New Hampshire to Texas, in order to get recourse you would have to go to New Hampshire.

Mr. DENISON. There is no question about that. These promoters have learned that they can get around the State laws. The State can not prevent that, and there is only one authority in this country that can stop that class of fraud—that is the Federal Government—and that is the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. On page 5, subsection (e), it says:

Any security issued by a corporation organized exclusively for educational, benevolent, fraternal, charitable, or reformatory purposes, and not for pecuniary profit.

I suppose that is an exemption. Under that could not organizations be formed for one of those purposes and not for pecuniary purposes, and soak the public very strong through the mails and still be exempt?

Mr. DENISON. You will hardly find any fraud perpetrated by an organization that is organized for purely charitable or fraternal purposes.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Then, on page 6, paragraph (g), it says:

Any security issued by a State bank, trust company, or savings institution incorporated under the laws and subject to the examination, supervision, and control of any State or of the United States or of any insular possession thereof.

Is it not a fact that one of the biggest oil fakes or oil-stock fakes we have had was issued by a trust company in Texas, a regularly incorporated trust company, under State supervision, and that they soaked almost everybody that was gullible enough to invest?

Mr. DENISON. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I was not aware of the fact that the laws of any State permitted a banking institution or trust company to engage in the sinking of oil wells or promotion of oil stock. Now, I assumed that there would be no such unreasonable law as that in the country. There may be. At any rate, practically all the State laws exempt from their provisions security issued by banks and trust companies and financial institutions of that kind, and properly so; and this act, following the precedent set by the different States, makes a similar exemption.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. This was within the past two years. It was a monumental fake.

Mr. DENISON. I am not in a position to explain that or to answer the gentleman's question, because I was not aware of the fact that any bank had been perpetrating a fraud upon the people by the sale of oil stock.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. On page 10, subsection (e), it says:

To any bank, savings institution, trust company, insurance company, or to any corporation, or to any broker or dealer: Provided, That such broker or dealer is actually engaged in buying and selling securities as a business.

Would not that throw the door wide open to an oil broker?

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman misunderstands that. That provision exempts sales to brokers. Now then, this legislation is not intended, gentlemen, to protect brokers and others who are engaged in the business of buying and selling stocks. They do not need the protection. Banks are in the business of judging the value of securities and so are brokers who deal in these securities. They do not need this protection. They are never imposed upon by stock promoters. It is the individual, the average ordinary business man or workingman, who is not in a position to judge of the value of securities, who has not the information at hand, that we ought to protect; and so all the State laws, generally speaking, exempt sales to banks, to insurance companies, and to brokers who are engaged in the business of buying and selling stocks. The reason for the law would not apply to such persons, and therefore the law itself should not apply to them.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; but I would rather defer explaining the different exemptions until we come to the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not rise to participate in this debate, but merely to have read a resolution which I offered this morning, to which objection was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia desires to have read a resolution, as indicated. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 333, requesting the President of the United States to send the four-power treaty and other papers to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, It being declared by the second section of the second article of the Constitution that the President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur, the House of Representatives do not claim any agency in making treaties; but that when a treaty stipulates regulations on any of the subjects submitted by the Constitution to the power of Congress, it must depend for its execution as to such stipulation on a law or laws to be passed by Congress, and it is the constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives in all such cases to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such treaty into effect, and to determine and act thereon as in their judgment may be most conducive to the public good.

Resolved, further, That in order to facilitate the deliberations of the House of Representatives on the four-power treaty, which requires the action of Congress for its execution, ratified by the Senate of the United States on February 6, 1922, the President of the United States is requested to send to the House of Representatives a copy of said treaty and such explanatory papers as may be necessary for a proper understanding of the same by the House as may not be incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia yields back the balance of his time, two minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up very much of the time of the House in discussing this measure, but I do desire to give expression to my approval of it, and to give a few of the reasons why I favor it.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] has already explained some of the provisions of the bill very lucidly. Perhaps he did not reach as many of them as he intended on account of the number of questions which were propounded to him with reference to particular provisions of the bill. I desire to reemphasize one or two of the reasons why the committee felt impelled to report this bill favorably, and why we hope it will be enacted into law.

As has already been suggested, some forty or more States of this Union have adopted laws regulating the sales of securities known as "blue-sky" laws. I do not know how it happens that the other States followed in the leadership of the State of Kansas, or why it is that Kansas first found it necessary to pass such a law unless it be that the people of Kansas had more money to invest in securities or were more gullible than the people of other States. [Laughter.] But be that as it may, Kansas did lead off in legislation of this kind.

Mr. HOCH. The gentleman has at least observed that other States have followed the lead of Kansas.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and I am very glad to follow that leadership, and Kansas, as has been suggested, has its share of "blue sky," and it is entitled to that leadership.

But it is found that under legislation which States can enact separately, requiring that a corporation, before it can offer its securities for sale within the State, must go before their securities commission to obtain consent and approval, or before any person might be permitted to come into that State from the outside and sell securities that may or may not have been approved by the State of origin, many promoters have been able to avoid these provisions both in the State of origin and in the State of destination, because they used the United States mails and the express companies and other agencies of interstate commerce to advertise or correspond concerning a proposed issue of stock which had never been before the commission of the State in which it originated, and, of course, would never go before the commission in the State into which it was proposed to send it. And by that method neither the State where the security originated nor the State to which it is destined having any authority over either the issue or the sale or control of the stock, millions of dollars have been wasted by confiding people, who were persuaded by attractive literature to invest in bogus securities of all kinds. Thus the commercial and financial interests of the country have for a long time been looking toward a remedy for the situation which none of the States could handle, and the remedy that they have agreed upon and that they hope will be effective is the bill which we have reported.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. COLTON. Let me say that I am in sympathy generally with the purpose of the measure as I understand it, but I do not see why you permit stock exchanges in large cities to be exempt from the provisions of this act. It seems to me that if it is good for small cities it is also a good measure for large cities.

Mr. BARKLEY. That same question gave me a good deal of trouble in the committee, and it was a difficult situation for the committee to adjust; but in the commercial world and in the security world there are certain great stock exchanges which are universally recognized all over the country. There may be others that will come in under the exemption when they can qualify under the terms of this bill; but the committee recognized, and the investment bankers' associations recognized, and the regular bankers' associations recognized, and I think the commercial world recognizes that there are certain stock exchanges in the United States whose requirements are so rigid that if a stock is listed upon them we may assume that that stock is legitimate and not intended for fraudulent purposes; and while the limitation fixed here may exclude some other stock exchanges that are equally legitimate, they have not yet the established character that these exempted have, and have not existed a sufficient length of time to give absolute certainty that the stocks which they handle are absolutely safe. We fixed a limitation that could give confidence to the investing world that any stock that was listed upon any stock exchange that came within the definition of this bill might be regarded as safe without any other restrictions being placed upon it.

Mr. COLTON. I think the gentleman shows by his answer that he appreciates the fact that in some of the smaller stock exchanges there are just as rigid requirements as those in the larger exchanges, and this is the point that is in my mind: May not an exchange be organized in these large cities that may do all the damage that is now being done, and yet be exempted simply because of its being organized in the large city? I think the law ought to apply to all cities, irrespective of their size.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think so. It may be that in the course of time some of these smaller exchanges, organized in a small way, and just as legitimate and safe as the others, may be able to come within these requirements; but certainly no new exchange that might be organized in a city, that did not come within the provisions of this bill, could have its stock exempted from the provisions of the law.

Mr. COLTON. There is the point, if I may interrupt further. I notice that section 4 begins by saying:

That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any of the following classes of securities:

And then in subsection (f)—

(f) Securities issued, outstanding, distributed, and fully listed upon any organized stock exchange having an established meeting place in a city of over 500,000 population.

I have looked over the law and I can not find where it says that an exchange might not be organized in the future or even now be organized, if it has a regular place of meeting in one of the larger cities, and so far as the provisions of this bill are concerned might operate at will.

Mr. HOCH. The gentleman will observe in line 7, page 6, that the exchange must be one where actual transactions in the purchase and sale of United States bonds, and so forth, must have occurred during each of the preceding 20 years. Under that provision, therefore, a new exchange organized in a city of this size would not be eligible to the exemption provided in this bill.

Mr. COLTON. But after it has been in existence 20 years, irrespective of its methods of business procedure, it may then proceed to operate.

Mr. HOCH. That is theoretically true; but it is hardly probable that a concern intended merely for the purpose of floating fraudulent securities would start in with a 20-year record ahead of it in order to get its securities exempted under this statute.

Mr. COLTON. The gentleman misunderstands me. It may be organized in the beginning for perfectly legitimate purposes, but it has to be in existence only 20 years when it may operate at will, irrespective of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HOCH. But, as a matter of fact, there are no such exchanges in operation, where Government bonds have been listed upon those exchanges for 20 years.

Mr. COLTON. This does not relate to Government bonds entirely, does it?

Mr. HOCH. Oh, yes; I will read the provision:

Provided, That actual transactions on such organized exchange have occurred during each of the preceding 20 years in the purchase and sale of United States bonds or other bonds of any of the classes exempted herein from the provisions of this act.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a matter of fact, the definition there excludes all the exchanges in the United States except three, and that was one of the serious objections urged against that provision by some other exchanges that were just as legitimate and just as safe, perhaps, as these that are included here but that have not that long-established reputation for financial stability and integrity which we felt was necessary in order to entitle a stock exchange to be exempted from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. Does this bill affect in any way the sale of securities on the curb?

Mr. BARKLEY. The curb market is not included within the provisions of this exemption.

Mr. LAYTON. I am asking the gentleman what effect it will have upon the sale of securities?

Mr. BARKLEY. It will not have any effect upon the sale of stocks on the curb by men who are purchasing and selling there; but it might affect them if the curb market undertook to sell fraudulent stock by mail or any of the instrumentalities of commerce. It would affect that only in case the sale of that stock was prohibited in the State where the curb market exists and in the State to which it is intended to send the securities.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to make a statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. DENISON. This bill will not affect any stock exchange in the United States, and it is not intended to do so. No stock exchange had anything to do with the framing of this bill. In order to provide for an exemption for the great body of industrial stocks which have been already issued and are outstanding and have been sold and in which companies are no longer interested, we wanted to provide some sort of an exemption of stocks of that kind, and we adopted as a standard the lists on certain national stock exchanges. It will not affect the doing of business with any other stock exchange.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman from Kentucky will pardon me, I am not opposed to the bill. I want to be for any good measure. But I recognize the fact that this is probably the most highly developed mineral country in the world.

I have been a little bit familiar with matters in regard to corporations. It is a fact that there are very few mineral projects that are not developed on the basis of chance. When you think you have discovered a ledge or lode or outcropping it takes money to sink the shaft; it takes money to make the crosscut, to see how much mineral you have, to see how much it will assay to the ton, and they get the money by selling the stock without knowing that there is anything there at all. It may be an absolute fake as far as the result is concerned, not intended to be so, of course, but there is no certainty as to the value involved.

Mr. ARENTZ. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman should not use the word fake.

Mr. LAYTON. Well, I withdraw that word.

Mr. ARENTZ. Because it is not a fake if the money is spent in the ground. That is the trouble, not spending money in the ground received from the sale of stock.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman had any of his good money out of his pocket, and nothing to show for it but a hole in the ground he would spell it any way.

Mr. ARENTZ. No one would call it a fake if the money was spent in the ground. Now, if with the permission of the gentleman from Kentucky I may say a word further, there is a transition period in the life of nearly every one of these companies when they can not be listed on the Boston, New York, or Chicago Stock Exchange. During that period the work is being done, not by the financiers of Boston or New York or Chicago but by men like yourself and myself, men and women scattered all over the country who think they are interested in a legitimate enterprise. As soon as the company reaches the point where the ore is developed it gets the attention of men in New York, Boston, and Chicago, who purchase it for perhaps $200,000 or a million dollars, and incorporate it for from one to twenty million, and then the company sells the stock to the public without a question of doubt as to its legitimacy, because it is connected with the money interests of Chicago, New York, and Boston. It seems to me that some care should be given to companies that are in this transition period.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the gentleman's suggestion, but I want to say to the gentleman from Delaware that this bill will not interefere in the slightest degree with the legitimate development of any mineral industry or prospect in the United States, because this bill does not set up any standard of the Federal Government to determine what is a legitimate security. This bill adopts the laws passed by all the States, each State to deal with the company that wants to do business in that State, so that if there is a certain security or promotion project that can not obtain the permission in Delaware or Texas to organize to sell its stock to the people of Delaware or Texas it can not use the United States mails for the purpose of going somewhere else and writing into those States inducing its people to buy stock.

Mr. LAYTON. Suppose A, B, C, D, and E in the State of Kentucky think they have a good mining proposition somewhere. Do they have to go to your bureau or the authorities in Kentucky to get permission to obtain articles of incorporation for that company before they can incorporate?

Mr. BARKLEY. They have to file articles of incorporation with the secretary of state.

Mr. LAYTON. That will come first.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON Suppose A, B, C, and D go to Maine or Delaware and get articles of incorporation, do they have to be submitted to the State authority in Kentucky before they can get permission to do business?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; if a corporation organizes in Maine, if they want to go into Kansas, we will say, they can not do business with Kansas citizens without submitting it in some way to the authorities of Kansas. The trouble is now that they stay in the State of Maine and write letters into Kansas.

Mr. LAYTON. The trouble is this: If a corporation is incorporated in Delaware, before it can do business in 41 States under the blue sky laws they will have to get permission from those 41 States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; they would have to do that, but now they will not go into these States as long as they can stay back in Delaware or Maine and carry on their business through the mail.

Mr. LAYTON. But A, B, C, and D can go to New York and, by arrangement with the curb authorities, can sell that stock through the mails all over the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not the curb, because the curb market is not exempted from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Then you are going to put the curb out of business.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; because the curb market in New York for the last 8 or 10 years has promulgated and established and now is enforcing regulations that are almost as rigid as the New York Stock Exchange or the Chicago Stock Exchange regulations.

Mr. LAYTON. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that as a matter of fact, if the curb market had existed as long as the law requires this, it might be able to come within this law.

Mr. LAYTON. Still the New York Stock Exchange could put the stock on their list and sell it throughout the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the laws as they exist now, they could, but if it were a security that was prohibited in all of these 41 other States, they could sell it by mail without any power in the State to punish it under present conditions.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it not true that in most of these States those wishing to do business there under this bill must put up a fee of about $1,000 or more in order to sell stock, while under existing law this is not required when offering stock by mail?

Mr. BARKLEY. They have to give some sort of security to the State commissions.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I understand that on an average about $1,000 is required, so that a company organized to develop a legitimate mining or oil property must have $40,000 in its treasury to distribute around among the different States in order to be able to sell stock by mail if this bill is enacted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if you assume that each State requires a deposit of $1,000, and that the company wanted to send its agents into all of the States, then it would have to put up $1,000 in each State, but that is rather an exaggerated illustration. The trouble is that every company that might apply to some State for permission to do business in the State and might be denied it can go outside of the State as it is now and send literature back into the State without being required to go before the State authorities, and that is where these hundreds of millions of dollars are squandered every year.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If this law be enacted, it will practically make it impossible for a company of poor men to develop a mining property even if there is every reason to believe it is a valuable mining property.

Mr. BARKLEY. It will not make it any more difficult than it is now, because now if these 41 States require that deposit they would have to put it up before they could do business in the various States. This does not change that. This provides that if any party on the outside attempts by the use of the mails or the facilities of interstate commerce to sell securities in the States that have denied the right to sell those securities, the transaction is unlawful. Of course, if the State should be able to get them the State could punish them, but if they can not get possession of the individual—and that is the principal difficulty—in the absence of that power the Federal Government may punish by fine or imprisonment or by the right of recovery against any individual or corporation that engages in that sort of a transaction by use of the mails or through any other interstate commerce facility.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. A mining engineer writes to me and says:

> I understand that this bill provides that all stocks and bonds shall be handled by bankers, trust companies, or bond houses or stock exchanges in cities of over 500,000 population.

Has this gentleman the right conception of that?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; he has not the right conception at all. This bill does not require that stocks and bonds shall be handled by any particular class of people. These small stock exchanges and brokers can go on just as they have always and handle stocks and securities, but this bill exempts only from the provisions of the law stocks that are handled by banks, which are recognized by banks and by stock exchanges in cities of 500,000. In other words, the stock exchange in New York City or the stock exchange in Chicago or in Boston, the regular recognized stock exchanges, are permitted under this bill to handle such stocks as they are willing to list, without the restrictions provided in the bill, but it has no effect upon the transactions that occur in other stock exchanges, unless you can imagine a stock exchange organized for the sole purpose of defrauding the people, or unless they would permit fradulent stocks to be sold in States where they are not permitted to be sold, and in that case, I think, the law might cover them.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. He further says that the matter of complying with the State laws will entail an expenditure of at least a thousand dollars per State. I do not understand that he means, as the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] suggests, that a thousand dollars must be deposited, but that in order to send a representative to a State and satisfy the State authorities the company will be put to an expense of perhaps $1,000. Can the gentleman state anything in regard to that?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think there is anything to that. This bill has created a lot of imaginary fears and has erected a lot of purely imaginary barriers in the pathway of legitimate securities. There is nothing like that in the bill. Of course they have to do that now under the various laws. If they send individuals into the States for the purpose of selling securities, they have to comply now with the State laws. This does not increase the requirements of the State laws. It simply withdraws from legitimacy fraudulent securities sent into the State in violation of the State laws.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. I favor legislation of this character. While I have not had an opportunity to study the provisions of the bill very closely, I am wondering whether anyone could be convicted for a violation of this law if subsection (c) of section 5, on page 9, is permitted to remain in the bill. That subsection is peculiarly worded to my mind. I appreciate that isolated transactions should be protected in writing a bill of this character, but with the manner in which that subsection is written it occurs to me that it will be next to impossible to convict anyone for any offense under this law, unless it was a repeated transaction, either by the principal or the agent, and I would be glad to have the gentleman elucidate that particular subsection.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think that subsection raises any difficulty.

Suppose I as an individual own some stock in a corporation and want to sell it to you. It is perfectly legitimate stock. I want to sell it to you, not through any broker but because I want to get the money on it, and I sell it to you as an individual transaction. That would be an isolated case.

Mr. ROACH. That case would be protected?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. What is intended to be meant there by a repetition of the transaction is where men may have a series of stocks that they are trying to sell to numbers of individuals. In that case it could not be said to be an isolated case.

Mr. ROACH. Here is an instance, we will say. The gentleman from Illinois says that we desire to nip these fraudulent transactions in the bud, with which I heartily agree. But here is a transaction in which one of these fellows has fraudulent stock that he wants to impose on the public, and they undertake to nip him in the bud, and he has not repeated the transaction. But his stock is grossly fraudulent, and he sells it to the unsuspecting public. After the first sale he makes he is arrested, and he shows that it is the first sale—that it is not a succession of sales. Is not that an isolated case?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think in that sort of a case, if it was found he had made only one sale, if he had in his possession a succession of stocks he intended to sell, this could not be interpreted as being the kind of an isolated case to which the section refers.

Mr. ROACH. Those things make it hard to enforce this law, if you have to show all those things. My question is, whether, if it is the first offense, it makes it easy for him to get out.

Mr. BARKLEY. If he has started out on a career of making sales——

Mr. ROACH. He has started on this career, and at the very first transaction the authorities arrest him for the very first sale he makes. This law as it is written now provides that unless that is a part of successive transactions he is not guilty.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the gentleman will remember that the burden of proof is on him to show that it is not a series of successive sales, if he is caught with some stock that he has not been able to sell by reason of being caught in the first transaction.

Mr. ROACH. I am afraid that it renders this law inoperative.

Mr. DENISON. I think I can relieve the gentleman from Missouri from any fear on that account. It is a question that has arisen in States that have enacted this legislation. This is the way they solve it. The evil they intended to forbid is the flotation of fraudulent stock. A corporation issues a series of stocks or bonds that have no merit in them and are fraudulent in themselves, and they undertake to float them by putting them on the public. They will not go into a transaction of that kind unless there is prospect of big gains, and so they arrange to sell a big series of them to the public, and that is the evil this legislation is intended to correct. Now, in order to prevent it, we do not want to inflict an injustice upon men as individuals, and so the States have had to meet the problem by not imposing any injustice upon an individual who had a security at home that he wanted to sell as an individual to another individual. And the only way they have been able to solve it is by providing an exemption and exempting the sale by an individual in an isolated transaction.

Mr. ROACH. That is the only way they have solved it, but there ought to be some other solution.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman can suggest another solution, I am sure it would be welcome. All the States that have enacted "blue-sky" legislation have enacted this law.

Mr. ROACH. Unfortunately so, I think.

Mr. DENISON. It is the best thing that experience and study has given us in the preparation of this bill. We have used the very best judgment we have had in the light of experience, and we have exempted these individual or isolated transactions.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think all the gentlemen will recognize the hardship it would be to an individual if he was compelled to go through all the processes to sell one share of stock in any corporation in the United States if we did not provide such an exemption.

Mr. ROACH. This bill is subject to that criticism, and this bill does not provide a relief from one fellow passing a fraud onto another. Suppose the gentleman in the State of Illinois had been sold a block of fraudulent stock of no value and he wanted to pass it on to some gentleman in Missouri, under this provision he could do it without a violation of law.

Mr. DENISON. That is true. And I will say this, that there never has been a law devised or thought out that would absolutely prevent every thing or meet every circumstance. We have got to do the best we can. And this bill is not intended to prevent these individual cases of fraud. We can not do it. What we are trying to do is to prevent wholesale fraud in the flotation of worthless stock.

Mr. ROACH. Could it not be written in the law that in these isolated cases, which I agree should be exempt, where it was apparently a case of gross fraud and intended as a fraudulent transaction on the face of it, the exemption should not apply?

Mr. DENISON. I would be glad to have the gentleman figure out some appropriate language that would carry out the idea and submit it to me, and I will consider it.

But I will say this, that in the preparation of this bill I was advised by the National Association of State Security Commissioners, the executive officer of that association, that represents all the different States which have this class of laws, and this is the very best language that they could suggest, and it is the language that is found in all the State laws.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that the number of instances in which isolated individuals could take advantage of the United States mails to sell stocks that they own to other individuals are infinitesimal?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; they are very small.

Mr. BARKLEY. They do not amount to anything. The fraud upon the public by the use of the mails is by the men who organize for the wholesale flotation and sale of stocks to the public.

Mr. ROACH. If there is any way of bringing those cases together and prosecuting the offenders it would be a different proposition from the prosecution of men in isolated cases here and there where the public has been imposed upon.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Along the same line as that suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH], it would seem that this paragraph would place the burden of proof on the prosecution to prove that the defendant was the owner of the stock in the transaction.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the general language of the bill in section 9 the burden of proof is on the person claiming to be exempt to show that he comes within the exemptions.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think there should be a provision, if that paragraph remains in the bill, which should provide that the burden of proof should be in that case of an isolated transaction not upon the prosecutor, but upon the defendant.

Mr. DENISON. We have a special provision, section 9, which provides that the burden of proof is upon the person claiming the exemption.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I did not know of that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, under the general law governing the prosecution of a criminal offense that will apply until the offender shows that he is exempt, and then the burden shifts to him.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is one other thing that I wanted the gentleman to yield to me to ask about, and that is exemption of sales made through a stock exchange. Does the gentleman think that sales of that character should be exempted from the operation of the laws of the different States?

Mr. BARKLEY. We do not exempt them from the operation of the State laws.

Mr. JONES of Texas. You provide for that through the law you propose here.

Mr. BARKLEY. The provision we make here does not have any effect whatever upon the laws of the States.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The laws of the States would not apply unless you made them apply under the provisions of this bill as to transactions under interstate commerce.

Mr. BARKLEY. The only exemptions we make here of stock exchanges are stock exchanges that come under the definition of the exemptions which are already subject to the State laws. We do not at all diminish the amount of State regulation over these stock exchanges.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They are subject to State laws in the State where the main office is located, but they are not subject to the operation of State laws in an outlying section of the country where they undertake to sell these securities.

Mr. BARKLEY. We do not affect that at all.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But you grant them an exemption which you do not grant to others that are subject to the provisions of the bill. In other words, you make it more onerous on the man who operates in a small way than on the man who operates extensively.

Mr. BARKLEY. We had to draw the line somewhere and we had to make an exemption that would include only those exchanges that are recognized generally by the public, by listing all sorts of stocks with them, as being just as safe as a national bank. We could not take in all stock exchanges. We have made the limitation so rigid that others have complained of it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am inclined to dissent from the statement of the gentleman that securities that happen to be listed on the stock exchange are as safe as a national bank. If you notice, the quotations have sometimes changed suddenly overnight, even on the listed stocks.

Mr. BARKLEY. We can not prevent that. I did not say the securities were as safe as a national bank.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But you can avoid granting them exemption under State laws.

Mr. BARKLEY. This does not exempt any that are not exempted by State laws.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is exemption in all the States except in the States where they have their headquarters.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman from Texas understands that there are certain well-established stock exchanges in the United States that everybody recognizes as sound.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But they do not guarantee the securities.

Mr. BARKLEY. Neither does the national banks. You can buy stock through a bank, but it does not guarantee this stock.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But a national bank operates on a different basis.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does a stock exchange sell all over the United States, or simply on the stock exchange?

Mr. BARKLEY. On the stock exchange; but it sells to people all over the country.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They sell all over the country, too.

Mr. COLTON. Am I right in taking this position, however, that the purchasing public, when it purchases through a stock exchange on the three exchanges of Boston, New York, and Chicago, is not required to make any study of the standing of those companies, but if it purchases through any exchange other than the three it does have to make a study as to the requirements?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all. There is no difference as to the transactions that will occur hereafter with any stock exchange in the United States from the transactions that occur now with all those stock exchanges. The only difference is that these three are exempted from the provisions of this law because they are so well recognized all over the country as legitimate exchanges, by reason of their character and the length of time they have transacted business, that we did not feel it was necessary to restrict dealing through these particular stock exchanges by reason of danger of fraud on the public.

Mr. COLTON. They are unrestricted except as they are regulated by the States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Simply regulated by the States. New York regulates its own, and Illinois the same.

Mr. COLTON. The gentleman, then, will admit that these three being unrestricted, all the others are restricted.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Of course.

Mr. BARKLEY. Both gentlemen are mistaken. None of the stock exchanges are exempt. But this bill simply exempts stocks listed on certain well-established exchanges whose long existence and record entitle securities listed on them to the presumption of being legitimate.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Are not some of the Members confusing the stock exchanges with the securities listed upon those stock exchanges?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I think so.

Mr. MAPES. This bill does not exempt any stock exchange. It does not regulate in one way or the other the business of the stock exchange. It simply says that the securities listed upon three stock exchanges in the United States may be sent through the mails and may use other agencies of interstate commerce.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In other words, when a stock is once listed, then it may be sold in any State of the Union without being subject to the laws of that particular State?

Mr. MAPES. Oh, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, it is not free from the regulations of the particular State.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The State can not regulate it, because it is interstate commerce, and you exempt it from the operations of this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. If somebody representing the New York Stock Exchange should go down into Texas and try to sell stock there—which, I admit, is not the usual method of selling stock by anyone connected with the New York Stock Exchange—he would find that he would immediately come under the jurisdiction of the State laws regulating the sale of stocks in that State.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The New York Stock Exchange can use the mails to send its stocks to Texas without being subject to the provisions of this bill. Now, suppose the Sun Oil Co. lists its stock on the New York Stock Exchange. The exchange itself may be subject to the laws of New York, or the Chicago Stock Exchange may be subject to the laws of Illinois, but after the Sun Oil Co. gets its stock once listed, then the Sun Oil Co. can go anywhere in the United States and sell its stock.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Without being subject to the restrictions of this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman point out where they will be subject to the provisions of this bill when they are listed? What provision of the bill is there which makes them subject to it? If you will read subsection (f), on page 5, you will find that they are specifically exempted on all these issues of stock after they are once listed on the stock exchange.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let us read that and see:

(f) Securities issued, outstanding, distributed, and fully listed upon any organized stock exchange having an established meeting place in a city of over 500,000 population according to the last preceding United States census and providing facilities for the use of its members in the purchase and sale of securities listed by such exchange, and securities senior thereto or evidences of indebtedness guaranteed by companies the common capital stock of which is so listed: Provided, That actual transactions on such organized exchange have occurred during each of the preceding 20 years in the purchase and sale of United States bonds or other bonds of any of the classes exempted herein from the provisions of this act: And provided further, That such stock exchange requires financial statements to be submitted at the time of such listing and annually thereafter.

The gentleman will observe that this subsection applies to "securities issued, outstanding, distributed, and fully listed."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Now, if you will read in connection therewith the first provisions of section 4, on page 3, you will see—

That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any of the following classes of securities—

And those listed under subsection (f) are the ones referred to.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. I think I can explain to the gentleman from Texas what that means. Most of the exemption provisions of this act provide an exemption for certain classes of securities as they are issued by the issuing companies, but there are a great many securities of great industrial concerns that are already issued and outstanding and distributed and in the hands of the public. They have an established market value which has been gained by trading, actual buying, and selling in public, but the issuing company is no longer interested in them or concerned with them, because it has already sold them and gotten its money. Now, we do provide some method of exempting securities of that kind. Why? Because they are in the hands of third persons, individuals over the country.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I recognize the necessity of some exemptions along that line.

Mr. DENISON. We have exempted securities of that kind which have an established market value gained by actual trading upon the great national stock exchanges of the country. That is what that exemption is confined to—stocks that have already been issued, that have been distributed and are outstanding, stocks in which the issuing companies are no longer interested.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the presumption is that all such stocks have been listed upon stock exchanges whose requirements are so rigid as to give a presumption of honesty and integrity.

Mr. DENISON. Exactly.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is this provision limited to securities that have already been issued and distributed?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; entirely.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But it can not apply to new issues that are made hereafter?

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman gets the idea exactly. That is the language.

Mr. MAPES. That is the idea.

Mr. DENISON. It refers to securities already issued and outstanding.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that gentlemen who on first consideration discover provisions of the bill which arouse their fears will reach the conclusion that the measure is designed not only to punish fraud in the sale of bogus stocks and securities but is intended to interfere with legitimate business as little as possible.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have taken more time than I intended. How much time have I occupied?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 48 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some misunderstanding about the operation of this proposed law. There are 38 States in the Union with blue sky laws, and the commissioners of these States found that it was impossible to enforce State laws because the salesmen of fraudulent stocks in order to avoid the penalty of a State law would move into another State and use the agency of the mail or express company to do the thing that the State in which they operated prohibited. These blue sky laws are not entirely uniform, but in the main they are the same. The great difficulty of the blue sky law originates from the fact that unless carefully worded it would stop the circulation of millions of dollars of proper stocks and bonds, which would cripple the banking and brokerage business of the entire country. So these State commissioners found there were certain exemptions made in each State of certain forms of securities.

The committee in writing this law, having before it witnesses from the various States, sought to do two things, and only two things. The first was to strengthen the blue sky law, which the various States could not do, and protect them from the outlaw who lives outside of the State; and the next was to permit the free circulation of honest stocks and securities. So this bill will not make a single penalty that is not now upon the statute book of some State. But it does make a penalty for a man from another State who attempts to commit a fraud. The trouble in writing the law was to make the legitimate stock flow easily and freely through the arteries of commerce. These commissioners, acting in conjunction with other witnesses before our committee, investment bankers, associations, and State agencies, have set out in the national law which is now proposed certain exemptions so that legitimate stocks may not be interfered with. Among other exemptions were the stocks that are now listed on the leading stock exchanges of the United States. These leading stock exchanges are in the great cities. It does not mean that stock issued from a smaller city is not a proper and legitimate stock and can circulate, but it does remove from suspicion and interference in interstate transactions 75 or 80 per cent of the legitimate stock in the country. I venture the assertion that there is not a stock exchange in the United States that does not have this large class of securities listed from these three exchanges. That was why this particular exemption was made.

Our committee worked for several weeks trying to define this great volume of legitimate commercial paper in another manner, and we found it impossible to describe it other than by listing in this particular way.

The bill does not say that stock issued from any other State complying with the laws of that State that come under these provisions shall not freely circulate in the mail, but it says that this great class of securities which are not in dispute, that are not attacked by anyone, shall move. I confess that the hearings before the committee will show that I opposed most vigorously the exact language employed here, but our committee was unable to find any other description which would take its place.

It is reported that last year some $500,000,000 in fraudulent stock was sold in the United States, not to banks, not to trust companies, not to brokers, but to ignorant people who did not investigate. Five hundred million dollars in one year was the amount of fraud perpetrated upon the gullible people of the United States. So this law has but two objects—one to make the State laws enforceable, not to add to the penalties of the State laws or to make them more rigorous, but to take from the scoundrel who sells the stock to the unsuspecting public the use of the agencies of the United States Government.

The difficulty came in trying to protect the victims of these people and not to interfere with that great volume of business which was not tainted in any way. To interfere with this great volume of business would check the commercial liquidity of the stocks and bonds of the United States.

This is a technical bill. There is hardly a line in it that has not received close study. The words have been carefully gone over again and again to find out their exact meaning and every shade of meaning, and, after we finish our work, we believe we are doing the two things I have mentioned—strengthening the arm of the States to reach the rascal that defrauds the people of the States and yet leave free for circulation all legitimate stocks and securities. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to a member of the committee from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think time will develop that this is one of the pieces of big legislation that this Congress has passed if it becomes a law. I think it is really a measure of superlative merit and one that will rank with the pure food law and other laws of this kind that have been passed. The committee has given it very careful and close consideration. I have been asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] to pay some attention to the legal phases of this matter, with the idea that perhaps there might be some doubt in some minds about some of the legal questions in regard to it.

I do not care to weary the House with a long legal argument, but it may be advisable to refer briefly to some of the objections that have been raised by people who have opposed this bill. The bill, it will be noticed, in its first section makes certain definitions. The second section makes it unlawful to transport in interstate commerce certain securities, advertisements, and so forth. The third section makes it unlawful to deposit in the mails the same things. The fourth section exempts certain securities and so does the fifth, and the sixth provides penalties, while the seventh section in general makes void the contracts that were made in violation of this law. The right of the Federal Government to enact this kind of legislation is secured by the constitutional provision in Article I, section 8, giving Congress the right to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States and with the Indian tribes. From the earliest date our courts and our legislatures, both State and National, have been frequently engaged with the construction of this particular constitutional provision, as to just what it means, how far it goes, and what the particular relations are between the State and the Nation in the matter of commerce. Heretofore the question has always been, How far can the Federal Government go into the regulation of commerce between the States? It has finally come, in my judgment, after looking at the authorities and the laws passed, to the point where the question of commerce between States is not now merely a question of trade between the States but has become a question of intercourse between the States, which may be regulated by the Federal Government under this constitutional clause. It is astonishing to look at the great variety of things which have been held to be interstate commerce by law, and which one on a casual glimpse at the matter would think would not be so. Let me state a few of the acts that have been passed.

The first one is to be found in Third United States Laws, at page 529, and was passed in 1803. It prohibited the importation of slaves into any place where by law of that State importation was forbidden, and provided for suits for damages, and that one-half should go to the informer, and for the confiscation of vessels engaged in such trade.

In the Twenty-sixth Statutes at Large, page 313, the first interstate liquor law was passed. That law prohibited the transportation of liquor from State to State, and provided that all fermented liquors transported into a State for sale shall—and I wish the gentleman would notice the language—

> Upon arrival in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory.

That was as broad as any statute could be made.

In the Twenty-ninth Statutes at Large, page 512, it was made unlawful to deposit with a common carrier for transportation to another State obscene books, and so forth, and the act contained certain remedial provisions.

In the Thirty-fourth Statutes at Large, page 768, the shipment of adulterated foods or drugs from one State to another was prohibited and adequate punishment provided.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman is right on a point that I am bothered about in respect to this bill. That is the part that provides that any purchaser of these things may void the contract at his own election. None of the laws to which the gentleman has referred go so far as to say that the druggist who purchased the drugs which were not pure should have the right to rescind the contract. Of course, if it was a fraudulent transaction the State law would take care of the matter, and the State law is the proper law to take care of that.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, an answer to the gentleman from South Carolina is the Clayton antitrust law, which provides civil damages and provides that they may recover treble.

Mr. STEVENSON. But it provides recovery of that as a penalty for violation of a Federal law, to be recovered in the Federal courts.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In this pure-food law the provision was that any article misbranded or adulterated, within the provisions of the law, when shipped in violation of the act, might be libeled, confiscated, taken away, and destroyed.

Thirty-sixth Statutes at Large, page 825, the Mann Act, prohibits the transportation of women for immoral purposes and provides for the prosecution in any court in any jurisdiction through which the woman passed, and provides a penalty for the keeper of a prostitute who does not report that fact to the Commissioner of Immigration, which was the farthest stretch of the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution that had ever been enacted, and yet it was held to be constitutional.

Twenty-eighth Statutes at Large, page 963, prohibited the deposit of lottery tickets in the mail, and that act put an end to the lottery business in the United States.

In the case of Hoke v. United States (227 U. S. 392), which was the case deciding the Mann Act, the court said:

> The power reserved to the States and those conferred on the Nation are adapted to be exercised whether independently or concurrently, to promote the general welfare, material and moral. This is the effect of the decision, and surely if the facility of interstate transportation can be taken away from the demoralization of lotteries, the debasement of obscene literature, the contagion of diseased cattle or persons, the impurity of food and drugs, the like facility can be taken away from the systematic enticement to and the enslavement in prostitution and debauchery of women, and more insistently of girls.

Therefore, we can see by that brief glance at the laws that have been enacted, and I have not mentioned all of them, but some that are typical of the whole, that the field of regulation of interstate commerce extends much further than the original framers, I imagine, intended, and goes so far as to hold that the regulation of interstate commerce mentioned in the Constitution may amount to a prohibition of that commerce. Many of these statutes that have been passed had the effect of a prohibition of a particular traffic. This is more than a regulation, but it has been held to be a regulation under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

It has been claimed that this kind of a law in its exercise of police powers goes too far and transgresses upon the rights of the States, that the States alone have the right to regulate by the police power these various things sought to be inhibited by this bill.

That is not the law, as I understand it. There can be no doubt that the States have power to control the sale of securities of various kinds within their respective borders and may enforce their regulatory provisions by the exercise of such police powers as are necessary. In support of that proposition permit me to call attention to the recent case of Stewart v. Brady (300 Ill. 435). The Legislature of Illinois enacted a blue sky law, very stringent in its terms, providing penalties for a failure to comply with its terms and creating certain classes of exempted securities. The Supreme Court of Illinois, in the Stewart case, held that this was a proper exercise of the police powers of the State. There is no penalty or prohibition created by the bill now under consideration differing in principle from the Illinois statute in question. In Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co. (242 U. S. 539) a similar statute of the State of Ohio was held valid. In Merrick v. Halsey & Co. (242 U. S. 587) a Michigan statute of the same kind was upheld, and in the same volume, page 559, a South Dakota law of the same kind was held constitutional.

In all these cases, in ruling on statutes where exemptions were made, where classes of exempt securities were made as are made in this bill, where contracts were held to be voidable by the statute or made void, where all sorts of penalties were inflicted, the Supreme Court of the United States and the supreme courts of the various States have held distinctly and at length that those were proper powers to be exercised by the various States, and that laws exactly like this constituted a valid exercise of the police powers of the State.

Now we will go a step further. The Supreme Court of the United States has said in very distinct and positive language, in a long line of cases, part of which I shall cite, that the same police powers which any State has the Federal Government has; that the Federal Government in the enforcement of its laws can exercise exactly the same police powers that any State can exercise. It follows, therefore, as a matter of course, that if that is true, these incidental powers that are given by this bill, intended to be conferred on the various courts, the one as to holding a contract to be void, the other as to the infliction of a certain punishment, is a valid exercise of the power of Congress in passing this sort of legislation.

Let me now call attention to some of these decisions:

> A government intrusted with such ample powers, on the due execution of which the happiness and prosperity of the nation so vitally depends, must also be intrusted with ample means for their execution. (McCullough v. State of Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 408.)

The government which has a right to do an act and has impressed on it the duty of performing that act must, according to the dictates of reason, be allowed to select the means; and those who contend that it may not select any appropriate means, that no particular mode of effecting the object is excepted, take upon themselves the burden of establishing that exception. (410, supra.)

All admit that the Government may legitimately punish any violation of its laws, and yet this is not among the enumerated powers of Congress. (416, supra.)

The right to punish is a right incidental to the power and conducive to its beneficial exercise. (418, supra.)

The principle established by the cases is the simple one, when rid of confusing and distracting considerations, that Congress has power over transportation among the several States; that the power is complete in itself, and that Congress, as an incident to it, may adopt not only means necessary but convenient to its exercise and the means may have the quality of police regulations. (Mann Act, Hoke v. U. S., 227 U. S. 323.)

Mr. Justice Field said:

The power [to regulate interstate commerce] also embraces within its control all the instrumentalities by which that commerce may be carried on, and the means by which it may be aided and encouraged. The subjects, therefore, upon which the power may be exerted are of infinite variety. (Gloucester Ferry v. Pa., 114 U. S. 196, 204.)

Congress may establish police regulations as well as the States, confining their operations to the subjects over which it is given control by the Constitution. * * * Congress has the power to go beyond the general regulations of commerce which it is accustomed to establish and to descend to the most minute directions if it shall be deemed advisable. (215, supra.)

We are now arrived at the inquiry. What is this power? It is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed by the Constitution. (Chief Justice Marshall.)

The power * * * is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government, having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States. (Giffons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 197, 347.)

In determining the character of the regulations to be adopted, Congress has a large discretion, which is not to be controlled by the courts, simply because, in their opinion, such regulations may not be the best or most effective that could be employed. (Lottery case, 188 U. S. 321, 353.)

We think the sound construction of the Constitution must allow to the National Legislature that discretion with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it, in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional. (McCullough v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 421.)

The Constitution leaves to Congress—that discretion, with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it, in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional. (Lottery case, 188 U. S. 255.)

The whole subject matter is summarized by Cooley in his Constitutional Limitations as follows:

It is not doubted that Congress has the power to go beyond the general regulations of commerce which it is accustomed to establish, and to descend to the most minute directions, if it shall be deemed advisable. * * * Congress may establish police regulations, as well as the States. (Cooley's Cons. Lim., p. 856, 7th ed.)

So I think there is no doubt, gentlemen, about the constitutionality of that part of this act which provides the penalties and holds contracts void, because such powers are incidental to the general power which is doubtless in Congress.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have been trying to agree with the gentleman that they are void, because it is declared that the contracts are in violation of the State law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I believe you are right. But I believe the Federal Government could make them void, if necessary, to enforce this broad provision.

There is one remaining question, and one only, and that is that it is alleged to be a delegation of power to the States, giving them the power to make regulations which we by this act declare to be unlawful as soon as the States enact them. I have looked into that matter with some care.

Mr. HOCH. Right upon that point, the gentleman has made a study of the legal phase of this, and I want to ask him if he has investigated this particular question here as to whether it is an unlawful delegation of legislative power to provide that a thing which the States some time in the future may declare to be unlawful shall constitute a Federal offense? In sections 3 and 4 we provide that where there are certain things unlawful within a State it shall be now unlawful to do them as a Federal proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I extend the gentleman's time five minutes.

Mr. HOCH. I shall make my question very brief. I do not want to impose on the gentleman. As I understand it—and I am in sympathy with this proposition—we provide here that if at any time in the future any State makes any particular sale unlawfully, it shall then become unlawful to use the interstate commerce for effecting a sale in that State. The question in my mind is as to whether that amounts to a delegation of legislative power to the States—that is, do we permit the States to determine the nature of a Federal offense to such an extent as it might be held to be an unlawful delegation of legislative power? Has the gentleman investigated that?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I have. I have looked at all the cases I can find on that subject, and I have examined all the laws I can find that were ever passed by Congress, although I may have missed some. I have examined them and looked at their language to see whether they included things that might happen in the future. As I have called to your attention, I think these statutes do include things that might thereafter be made violations of law by the statutes of a particular State. For instance, the act heretofore cited prohibiting the importation of slaves into a State. This prohibition was made broad enough to include any State that might thereafter enact such slave-prohibiting legislation.

Mr. HOCH. The offense of bringing a slave into a State is determined in the act of Congress to which the gentleman refers. In this case it is not a question of determining it in a particular number of States. The question is whether we have made the offense so uncertain that we have opened it to the constitutional objection to setting up or providing a delegation of legislative power in effect. Take the Webb-Kenyon Act, to which the gentleman refers, and in that case, as I remember, there was no question of there being in the future an offense which was not an offense at the time of the passage of the act. But in this particular case something may become an offense in the future which is not an offense at the time of the passage of this act.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does not the West Virginia act provide that when you ship liquor into a territory which was then dry, or might thereafter be dry, you commit an offense?

Mr. HOCH. Yes. In that case the offense was the same—shipping liquor into dry territory. I think this is closer than that, because something may in the future be an offense which is not now an offense under this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Can the gentleman give me more time?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will give the gentleman three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In many instances the Congress has enacted laws to assist the various States in the enforcement of their local laws and to prevent inhabitants of other States from, in effect, violating such laws through the instrumentalities of interstate commerce. In recognizing the laws of such States and in protecting the people of such States from interstate commerce in violation of the spirit of the same, the Congress is not delegating to such State any of its legislative functions. The first act of Congress of the kind which I have found was the act of August 7, 1789, which provided that all pilots in bays, and so forth, of the United States should continue to be regulated by the laws of the various States where the pilots were located until further provision should be made by Congress.

Other laws making it unlawful to ship in interstate commerce persons or property where, by the laws of a State, trade in such things was forbidden are as follows:

Third United States Laws, 529, already referred to, which made the shipment of slaves into a State forbidding the importation of slaves by law unlawful.

Twenty-sixth Statutes at Large, 313, where fermented liquors could not be shipped into a State where by the laws of such State such liquor could not be sold.

Thirty-fourth Statutes at Large, 768, which recognized the laws of certain foreign countries in this language:

Provided, That no article shall be deemed misbranded or adulterated within the provisions of this act when intended for export or packed according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser when no substance is used in the preparation or packing thereof in conflict with the laws of the foreign country to which said article is intended to be shipped.

Thirty-ninth Statutes at Large, 1069 (Reed amendment), which contained this language:

That no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association, or other addressee at any place or point in any State or Territory of the United States at which it is by the law in force in the State or Territory at that time unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors or any of them, respectively.

Fortieth Statutes at Large, 755, the migratory bird treaty law, provided, in part:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful to ship, transport, or carry, by any means whatever, from one State, Territory, or District to or through another State, Territory, or District, or to or through a foreign country, any bird, or any part, nest, or egg thereof, captured, killed, taken, shipped, transported, or carried at any time contrary to the laws of the State, Territory, or District in which it was captured, killed, or taken, or from which it was shipped, transported, or carried. It shall be unlawful to import any bird, or any part, nest, or egg thereof, captured, killed, taken, shipped, transported, or carried contrary to the laws of any Province of the Dominion of Canada in which the same was captured, killed, or taken, or from which it was shipped, transported, or carried.

To the same effect, but as to different subject matter, was the Webb-Kenyon Act.

The bankruptcy law of the United States gives to each bankrupt the exemptions assured him by the laws of the State in which he resides. The act has been attacked on the grounds that it gives to different bankrupts different allowances and hence is not uniform in its operation. The Supreme Court, in holding the act constitutional, said, in part:

It was many times ruled that this provision was not in derogation of the limitation of uniformity because all contracts were made with reference to existing law, and no creditor could recover more from this debtor than the unexempted part of his assets. (Hanover Bank v. Moyses, 186 U. S. 189.)

In conclusion, I want to call attention to a decision in the case of In re Rahrer (140 U. S. 561, 564). The court, in passing on a statute making shipments of intoxicants into States where sale of such liquors was forbidden unlawful, said in part:

In so doing Congress has not attempted to delegate the power to regulate commerce, or to exercise any power reserved to the States, or to grant a power not possessed by the States, or to adopt State laws. It has taken its own course and made its own regulation, applying to these subjects of interstate commerce one common rule, whose uniformity is not affected by variations in State laws in dealing with such property.

Again, on page 564, this statement is made:

Congress did not use terms of permission to the State to act, but simply removed an impediment to the enforcement of the State laws in respect to imported packages in their original condition, created by the absence of a specific utterance on its part. It imparted no power to the State not then possessed, but allowed imported property to fall at once upon arrival within the local jurisdiction.

In view of the authorities cited I am of opinion there can be no question about the constitutionality of the bill.

Now, finally, I want to make just a few remarks apropos to the suggestion that has been made here by some of the Members, that this act gave a right to certain securities to circulate in certain States. It does not do anything of the kind. This list of exempted securities here does not exempt anything from the operation of State laws. Nothing could go into a State that can not go in now. The only thing that is done by that particular provision in this bill is that we say as regards certain kinds of securities, "We do not legislate." That is all there is to it. The power of the States remains as it always has been, inviolate. The only thing that this bill does is to help States to keep fraudulent securities out of their borders when they are attempting to do it, and it is a very laudable object. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCFADDEN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had still further insisted upon its amendments in disagreement to the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had requested a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. GLASS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 2616. An act to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey certain land; and

S. 3170. An act regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia.

"BLUE-SKY" LEGISLATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill is one of very considerable importance. The principle enunciated in it is a very proper principle, and while there may be some power conferred that will appear drastic, yet in consideration of the vast frauds that are perpetrated and have been perpetrated for years on the unsuspecting people of this country, I am inclined to think that it is a judicious bill to pass. There may be some amendments that should be adopted.

I wanted to talk for a little bit about taxation this afternoon, and taxation from the standpoint of the Sixty-seventh Congress. We were confronted a few days ago with a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury to the effect that in the fiscal year 1923 we would probably have a deficit of $500,000,000, and it was intimated and it necessarily follows that new legislation in taxation would have to be enacted in order that that deficit may be cared for, because it is inconceivable that this Government in times of profound peace, with the world proclaiming the fact that we are now at peace with all the world and have it nailed down, would sell bonds or borrow money with which to pay its current expenses.

Now, in that matter of taxation which is confronting us, it is a very pertinent question to ask, To whom will be committed the preparation of the proposed taxation in the Sixty-seventh Congress—that part of it which remains? That Congress must make provision if provision is made. I desire to put before this House a discussion made by a very distinguished Republican on that subject, a Republican who hopes to occupy a seat in this House during the Sixty-eighth Congress, although I hope some good Democrat will disappoint him. When this statement was written that gentleman had just been nominated for Congress. He says:

PUT MILLIONAIRE OUT OF CONGRESS—FRANK R. REID TELLS HOW HE DEFEATED COPLEY, HOUSE LEADER, IN PRIMARIES—URGES A "PEOPLE'S BLOC"—WAGED CAMPAIGN AGAINST SWAY OF BIG INTERESTS.

One of the big upsets in the beginning of this year's congressional campaign was the defeat of IRA C. COPLEY, member of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee, in the primaries in the eleventh Illinois district. The World asked Frank R. Reid, the successful Republican opponent, how he accounted for his victory. The reply is below:

CHICAGO, April 16.

To the WORLD:

The Volstead law had nothing to do with my victory. The campaign was waged against the system by which a dozen men of great wealth dominate the action of Congress on matters of tariff and taxation and use their great power to secure legislative protection of their own special interests.

I showed the financial and business interests of the 17 Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, of which 11, including COPLEY, are millionaires or multimillionaires, and urged the necessity of having a "people's bloc" to oppose this "millionaire bloc" to return the power of government to the people.

I pledged myself to uphold the policy of progressive, independent men in Congress who believe that the interests of the mass of the people deserve first consideration. I campaigned against the present certificate form of bonus bill in favor of a cash bonus, to be paid out of excess-profits tax and surtax or from foreign loans. Condemned COPLEY'S action in supporting the repeal of the excess-profits tax and in supporting the reduction of the surtax on incomes; also the action of COPLEY and the Ways and Means Committee on the dye embargo.

FRANK R. REID.

That is signed by Frank R. Reid, recently nominated for Congress by the Republicans in the eleventh district of Illinois. To that he appends a sample sheet of his literature upon which he appealed to the unterrified voters of the great State of Illinois. He says:

Who are the men who frame the revenue and impost laws of the Nation which vitally affect the interests of every business man who has something to sell or manufacture, every farmer who produces a bushel of grain or a pound of beef or hogs, and every wage earner in the eleventh district?

The committee is composed of 17 Republicans and 8 Democrats. The Republicans, of course, control the committee under the present administration; in fact, a bare half dozen of the leading members dominate the proceedings of the committee and determine its action in respect to legislation on taxation, tariff, and other vital subjects.

He gave this list of the 11 rich men:

Chairman JOSEPH W. FORDNEY, Michigan, millionaire lumberman.

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, Ohio, a millionaire by inheritance, interested in various banking and industrial enterprises, including an interest in dye and chemical companies.

IRA C. COPLEY, Illinois, multimillionaire, controlling gas companies and three newspapers of the eleventh district, interested also in mining and other properties.

LUTHER W. MOTT, New York, wealthy banker, former president of the New York State Bankers' Association.

ISAAC BACHARACH, New Jersey, millionaire real estate broker, first vice president and director of the Second National Bank and also director of Atlantic Safe Deposit & Trust Co. at Atlantic City.
ALLEN T. TREADWAY, Massachusetts, millionaire hotel owner and magnate.
CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE, Colorado, wealthy banker and stock raiser.
GEORGE M. BOWERS, West Virginia, millionaire banker and orchardist, president of People's Trust Co., Martinsburg, W. Va.
HENRY W. WATSON, Pennsylvania, wealthy retired business man who made his fortune in various commercial and manufacturing enterprises.
ALANSON B. HOUGHTON, New York, (a Member during the special session but recently resigned to become ambassador to Germany), a multimillionaire glass manufacturer.

And I might pause to say parenthetically that since his departure for Germany he has been succeeded by the distinguished gentleman, Mr. Ogden Mills, of New York, reputed also to be a multimillionaire and said to be exceedingly close to the great banking firm of J. P. Morgan & Co.

THOMAS A. CHANDLER, Oklahoma, millionaire oil magnate.

That, gentlemen, is not any of my fiction. If it is fiction, it is the fiction of one of the colleagues of gentlemen on the Republican side of the House in the next Congress if they can elect him from the eleventh district of Illinois. I am inclined to believe his testimony——

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TINCHER. Do I understand that the gentleman is indorsing or condemning that platform?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am proposing right now to discuss that question. I call this gentleman from Illinois and prove by him that the members of the Ways and Means Committee, which will frame this taxation bill foreshadowed by the Secretary of the Treasury and properly foreshadowed also by the Chief Executive of this Nation, are men who are interested in protecting and taking care of the millionaires of this country and unloading the burden that must be placed somewhere, upon the shoulders of the common people who have small incomes.

Now, gentlemen, there is another thing in connection with that matter that I want to say. I sometimes turn back and look at the Republican platform of two years ago:

We undertake to end executive autocracy and to restore to the people their constitutional Government.

That is one of the promises made by the Republican platform of 1920—one of its important planks. Well, let us see how much that has been done. In fact, I want to say without hesitation that it is a good thing this "blue sky" law was not passed before 1920. The gentleman told us how many people were defrauded and flimflammed in 1920 and 1921 by selling all sorts of stock and making all sorts of promises as to what they would do. If they had passed this bill before that and made it just a little broader, the Republican Party could have been indicted right now for having flimflammed the people on a promise of decentralizing the Government and reducing taxes and expenses. [Applause and laughter.]

Now, what has happened? Let us see what has happened about this autocracy business. Last year we passed a bonus bill through this House. What happened? It went over to the Senate, and the President of the United States, for the first time in the history of the Congress of the United States since its foundation, appeared on the floor of the Senate in a speech against a measure there pending. We have had Presidents who called both Houses together and advised and consulted with them and told them what ought to be done, but there was the spectacle of a President appearing in proper person and making a plea on the floor of the Senate of the United States to sidetrack the bonus bill that had been promised to the boys and by implication had been promised by the President himself.

Well, let us see another thing. He serves notice that this bonus bill which has lately been passed by the House must have a tax attached to it, and preferably a sales tax, which will hang a tag around the neck of every soldier in this country who receives it saying that he is taking money out of the pockets of his neighbors; because whenever a man goes in and buys a dozen cigars and has to pay a sales tax he remembers that he is paying this bonus tax, and he will say, "Yes; I am paying this to that fellow that is loafing around here in a uniform." That is what it will do, and the President told us that this must be done; and the prediction is made very freely that if the bill is passed he will veto it unless it contains that provision. Yet they were promising to end Executive interference in the Government. They made no such provision in the bill by which they gave the railroads six hundred and forty millions.

The President endeavored to control this House on the surtax bill. I am glad to see that Mr. Reid, if he comes here from the eleventh district of Illinois, is going to be in favor of a high surtax and for the excess-profits tax, and we are going to have it, unless the millionaires on the Ways and Means Committee succeed in putting it somewhere else. I will say, by the way, that the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] who was added to that committee the other day, when the revenue bill was under discussion on the floor of this House last summer, advocated raising the revenues of this Government by placing a tax on what you spend. Therefore, the man who made $1,000 and had to spend it all would have to pay a per cent of everything he made, while the man who made $1,000,000 and spent $50,000 of it would salt down $950,000 and pay taxes only on the $50,000 out of the $1,000,000, or on one-twentieth of what he made. That is the kind of timber they are adding to this committee that is going to frame this new tax bill.

Now, we had up here the other day the bill making appropriations for the Navy. What did we see? Talk about Executive interference! Why, gentlemen, let us see who all did come here. First we had Secretary of State Hughes. Who ever heard of the Secretary of State undertaking to interfere with the appropriations of the Government, and especially for the Army and Navy? Well, it did not look as if the House was going to get across with it, and then they had Secretary Denby, who had some legitimate right to communicate with us on the naval bill. That went along and did not seem to win, and then they called in the President, and to cap it all they called in Hanford MacNider with his demand for a big Navy and a big Army. Well, you say, "That is all right." Yes; it is all right; but it is not all right in the face of your declaration that you are going to stop the Executive from interfering with the liberties and deliberations of the House of Representatives. Ah, that did not succeed, you say. Well, several times he did not succeed, but he pocketed the bonus bill over yonder. He succeeded there for a good while.

He failed on the surtax. We passed another bonus bill without any tax feature in it; but, gentlemen, about three weeks ago Mr. Daugherty, who is a politician, opened the door a bit and gave out an interview and said that we are going to enforce the civil service in a sensible way, which means in a Republican way. Subsequently after the President turned off 28 men down here at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, when he called the boys over here this time with just a little fleeting smell of pie, he put his proposition across; that is what happened. Now, those are some of the Executive interferences we have had, but what is the latest? We are going to have a tariff—that is one of the promises that we were to have a tariff adjusted to the new conditions subsequent to the war. We have been in session 13 months and no tariff, and now the Senate of the United States has confessed its inability to write one by doing what? By writing one in which it gives the President the right to shift it up or shift it down; he can go 50 per cent up or 50 per cent down, as he sees fit, as I understand the bill; I do not know whether anybody else can or not. He is given the right to shift the tariff one way or the other, according to his discretion, and yet you say you want no autocracy. The gentleman from Illinois, I think, was exactly right. Now, let us see what the great organ says about this. We had an overturn here the other day on the naval appropriation bill, and, by the way, they are trying to raise the Army bill in the Senate and the President is behind it. [Applause.] The Washington Post had this to say relative to the overturn:

From the point of view of those Republicans in Congress who have seen in the exercise by the President of a general party leadership, the only method whereby unity of party action can be accomplished and legislation enacted in consequence of the development of a composite party opinion, yesterday's events in the House were of far more than passing and momentary significance.

MAY SHIFT LEADERSHIP.

Many see in this instance of exercise of party leadership the beginning of a new policy on the part of President Harding. They appreciate the importance of the influence which the President can exert in directing party action on the bonus and tariff legislation now about to demand attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, we have succeeded in extending the credit to a preferred class of membership, and I think it highly important we proceed with the bill to protect the people from the blue-sky frauds. For that purpose I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. McFADDEN. Can the gentleman from Kentucky yield me 10 minutes?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I realize, as many of the rest do, the need of some regulation such as is provided in this bill. I also realize that it is a delicate matter to provide a law of this character. The probabilities are that if such a law as this had been upon the statute books in the early days we would not have had much of the development that this country has had because of the fact that many of the developments when they first originated might have been subject to the provisions of a technical law like this. After they were developed, of course, they became more substantial. Therefore we ought to be very careful in legislation of this kind that we do not destroy initiative.

This measure seems to have much merit, and so far as it goes is desirable. For some reason, however, people who understand the mortgage business in this country have not been considered in the drafting of this bill and have had no opportunity to be heard at the hearings, and it would seem that there had been no study of the mortgage provisions of the bill by these people until after the bill had been reported out of committee.

I now find that this bill is defective from the standpoint of the legitimate mortgage banker in at least three particulars:

First. It seems to completely forbid the sale of investments secured by mortgage on properties not carrying buildings. This would bar several billions of dollars of mortgage financing of the highest grade and acceptable for the insurance companies and other conservative investors of the country.

Second. It forbids the sale of mortgage investments in the form of bonds, requiring that mortgages be sold to a single investor.

Third. It absolutely prohibits the offering of investments on real estate security outside of the confines of the United States. It puts a complete embargo, in other words, on all foreign investments of this character, although leaving the door wide open for every other type of foreign investment. It hardly seems to be the function of a "blue sky" bill to put a complete embargo on any one type of foreign investment, regardless of merit.

I want to point out that the effectiveness of the bill will not be interfered with in the least by the elimination of lines 4, 5, and 6, on page 7 of the bill, or at least the dropping of the words "60 per cent."

Paragraph "d" of section 4 permits bonds and notes to be issued against collateral securities, the full value of said securities, even though the market value thereof may be less than the amount of the notes or bonds issued against same.

I can not understand why there should be a line drawn between the common stock or collateral securities and the securities offered or secured by mortgages on real estate and to the discouragement of the latter.

The Ways and Means Committee to-day are considering a bill to amend the Constitution to repeal the tax-exemption subsidy. This will remove a barrier and will greatly relieve and facilitate the transactions in mortgage loans, and I want to protest against adding another burden equally as bad by such a proposal as I have just referred to.

I desire to show you that great injustice will be done to agriculture, and the financing of the farmers will be made much more difficult if this bill becomes a law in the form in which it has been reported. Equal injustice will be done to borrowers on city property.

The bill is intended to prevent the sale of fraudulent or valueless securities, and makes it unlawful to offer for sale through the mails or to transport through the mails certain securities with some exceptions. Sections 4 and 5 provide that the provisions of the act shall not apply to any of several classes of securities. Among those enumerated are the following described in section (h):

> Any bond or notes secured by a first mortgage lien on real estate or leasehold situated in the United States when the entire mortgage, together with all the bonds or notes secured thereby, are sold or offered for sale to a single purchaser or at a single sale. Also, any bonds or notes secured by first mortgage lien upon agricultural lands improved with farm buildings and used and valuable principally for agricultural purposes, or upon city or village real estate or leaseholds in the United States improved with buildings used principally to produce income through rental: Provided, That the par value of such bonds and notes does not exceed 60 per cent of the then fair value of the property so mortgaged to secure the same.

Within the last five years, since the graduated-income tax has gone into effect, a great change has taken place in the market for bonds and mortgages. Before heavy Federal surtaxes were imposed on wealthy investors who were formerly purchasers of large issues of bonds and of large mortgages it was comparatively easy to sell in large amounts. It is now almost impossible to sell taxable bonds or mortgages in large amounts, because the wealthy investors buy tax-exempt securities. A farm mortgage for ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand dollars is very difficult to sell, and the same difficulty is encountered in selling the bonds or notes of a mortgage of a similar amount to a single purchaser. In order to secure a ready market it is necessary to split up a $25,000 loan into thousand dollar parts or bonds and to sell one, or, at most, three or four of said bonds or parts to an individual. Individuals buying these portions of smaller value are those who receive small incomes not subject to heavy surtaxes. It is difficult to sell the bonds or notes representing a $5,000 loan to a single customer, and it would be almost impossible to finance large loans if obliged to sell under these restrictions.

The section further provides that in order to be salable the notes must be secured by first-mortgage lien upon agriculture lands improved with farm buildings.

A very large part of the most important farm loans are made upon lands not improved with farm buildings. These lands are cultivated and produce income the same as lands equipped with buildings. The farm-tenant problem is one of the most important that confronts American agriculture to-day. We have 2,454,746 farm tenants in the United States. Great efforts are being made to induce farm tenants to own their own homes. Thousands of tenants while occupying the buildings of rented farms purchase land without buildings, hoping to pay for their land while occupying buildings on the rented farm and later to equip their purchased land with buildings of their own. It would be very detrimental to the "own your own farm" movement if the procuring of such mortgage loans is made more difficult by this provision. In tens of thousands of instances farmers desire to extend their holdings by buying additional land for their own use or for the use of their sons. These additional lands are not usually equipped with buildings. It would be a waste of money in many instances to erect farm buildings on each new tract of land acquired. It is usually desirable to mortgage the newly purchased land. In thousands of cases farmers making loans give several mortgages each on a separate tract instead of one mortgage covering the entire farm. This is done for the purpose of making the loans attractive to small investors. The productive value of the land is the most important consideration in determining its mortgage value. Many companies make no allowance for buildings, and under the Federal farm loan act it is unlawful to allow more than 20 per cent of the insurable value of their buildings in determining the value, and thousands of loans are made by Federal land banks on which there are buildings. It would be unfair to borrowers from private investors to impose these additional restrictions. Without amendment, the bill as now drawn would work a great inconvenience to farmers desiring to purchase additional land.

The same sentence continues as follows:

> * * * and used and valuable principally for agricultural purposes.

Congress has made liberal appropriations to aid cattle and sheep men occupying ranches in the West. Grazing lands are not always classified as "agricultural." Until the language of a statute is finally passed upon by the Supreme Court no one can safely interpret its meaning. The Constitution of the United States was amended to provide that Congress might collect taxes on incomes "from whatever source derived." Our present Secretary of State, Charles Evans Hughes, then Governor of New York, addressed a message to the New York Legislature stating that in his opinion the amendment meant what it said.

By an involved and circuitous process of reasoning the majority of lawyers have convinced themselves that the Constitution does not permit the taxation of income from State and municipal bonds. Another amendment to the Constitution is now considered necessary in order to make the words "from whatever source derived" include income from State and municipal bonds. It is never safe to take chances on the meaning of a law. It is best to avoid ambiguity. A great injustice will be done to the cattle industry and the sheep industry unless the words "or grazing" after the word "agriculture" and before the word "purposes" are inserted. Congress ought not to enact laws to discourage cattle raising and sheep raising. The sentence continues:

> * * * or upon city or village real estate or leaseholds in the United States improved with buildings used principally to produce income through rental.

This would make it of doubtful legality for a loan agent to offer for sale bonds or notes secured by mortgages upon property occupied by the owners for dwellings and for business purposes, and would defeat the purposes of the "own-your-own-home" campaign that has been so patriotically supported by the American people. This would make it impossible for a merchant or hotel man or mill owner to borrow money on a large store or warehouse or hotel erected for use of the owner. In order to comply with the law the owner would be obliged to organize another company to hold title to the building, from whom it could be rented. This provision is of no value. It serves no good purpose and it is an inconvenience to honest business, without affording protection to investors. It would appear that this might be amended to make it more clear.

If this bill is to become a law all classes of securities ought to be treated impartially. All should be placed on the same level. There should be no discrimination against mortgages on farms and homes and factories. No criticism is urged now as to exceptions made in favor of other securities, but a comparison shows that unusual and unnecessary impairments have been thrown in the way of the borrower on real estate security.

Paragraph (i) of section 4 permits the sale of commercial paper with no limitations, except as to date and maturity.

Subsections "a" and "b" of paragraph (3), section 4, permit the sale of preferred stock in corporations at par if the net assets are equal to or exceed 125 per cent of the stock then offered for sale. That makes the preferred stock equal to 83⅓ per cent of the value of the property. Such assets are often some form of personal property, machinery, or merchandise liable to depreciation through obsolescence, fire, business competition, or other causes. Real estate is a much more stable security, and a loan of 100 per cent on the cash value of real estate is usually more reliable than 83⅓ per cent on the assets on the average corporation that could qualify under this act.

The profits possible in the sale of real-estate mortgages on honestly appraised property are too small to attract the high pressure stock salesman or the other get-rich-quick artists. Senator Kenyon, of Iowa, stated last year that the people of his State were defrauded of over $200,000,000 in one year. The Senator was probably conservative in his statement. These losses were not incurred through investment in mortgages on farms or city homes.

In the blue-sky law of the State of Illinois, which is extremely drastic, no prohibition is made against the sale of mortgages on land situated in the Dominion of Canada. In the Denison bill, recommended, Canadian securities are on the prohibited list. Canadian land mortgage securities sold in this country compare favorably with first-class mortgages based on real estate situated in the United States. Probably the attention of the committee was not called to the apparent injustice and unfriendliness of this legislation against Canadian securities. While the Canadian Government may not call attention to this action of the congressional Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in business and financial circles it will be considered a decidedly unfriendly act.

In its present form the bill seriously reflects on real-estate mortgages. They are not given the standing of common stock (see (c), p. 9), which may equal 100 per cent of the value of the property. Farm mortgages by the bill in its present form may be salable only when they do not exceed 60 per cent of the value of the property. This would cause great hardship to parties with small capital desiring to purchase farms or homes.

The restriction on real-estate mortgages is in marked contrast with the provision in paragraph (d) of section 4. The latter permits bonds and notes to be issued against collateral securities to the full par value of the said collateral securities, even though the market value of the collateral securities may be far less than the amount of the notes or bonds issued against them.

On page 13 of the report of the hearings of February 15, 1922, the following appears:

Mr. GRAHAM. In your fourth proviso under this section 4 you state that bonds or notes or other evidence of indebtedness issued by a holding corporation may be issued when they are backed by the securities mentioned in this clause, but provided that the collateral securities equal in par value the par value of the bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness so secured.

Now, then, you say:

"If any portion of the collateral securities consists of stock of no par value, then for the purpose of this subdivision such stock shall be deemed to have a par value equal to the price at which such stock was authorized to be issued by the public commission having supervision of the issue of such stock."

That is, I assume, irrespective of the face value at the actual time of pledging. It may have been issued at 25 cents on the dollar, and it may be worth at the time the securities are issued 5 cents on the dollar. Why is that value fixed arbitrarily in that way?

The question of Mr. GRAHAM was not satisfactorily answered.

The general purpose of the bill is to prevent the use of the United States mail and common carriers for the transportation of letters advertising matters and securities in order to make sales in violation of the blue-sky laws of the several States. The intent of the law will be approved by every honest lender and by every honest borrower, but it needs careful revision before it will accomplish the purposes intended. Section 12 of the bill provides an exception to the general rule regarding Federal statutes. Nothing in the act shall be construed to supersede "any law of any State now in force or hereafter enacted to regulate the sale of securities within such State."

Sections 4 and 5 of the bill are intended to render dealers in certain classes of securities immune from the penalties of this act. These sections were prepared by exceedingly able attorneys representing these interests. The reports of the hearings before the committee do not show that any representatives of farm borrowers or city real estate borrowers appeared before the committee to discuss paragraph (h) of section 4, relating to real estate loans. Neither did representatives of real estate mortgage dealers appear. Usually bills relating to bonds and mortgages are considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency. As this bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce because of its effect on commerce between the States, it did not come to the attention of borrowers, investors, and dealers until after it had been reported for passage.

In its present form the section relating to real estate loans will be more of an embargo on legitimate business than a hindrance to fraud.

Members of the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association and other reputable mortgage bankers produce and sell first mortgages on improved farm lands. Their loan limits are 50 per cent of the appraised cash value of the land. They are not directly interested in city mortgages or second mortgages as commodities of commerce, but they realize the handicap which the Denison bill in its present form will impose on deserving borrowers in city and in country.

If the bill were amended by striking out the two immunity sections 4 and 5 entirely, it would serve its purpose much better than in its present form unless paragraph (h) of section 4 is amended.

Real estate securities are not a prolific source of fraud. The public would be amply protected if paragraph (h), on page 6, was made extremely short and to read as follows:

(h) Any bonds or notes secured by a mortgage lien on real estate or leasehold (other than oil, gas, and mining lands) situated in the United States or in the Dominion of Canada, or any mortgage thereon, when the aggregate face value of such mortgage or bonds or notes (but not including interest notes or coupons) secured thereby does not when issued exceed the fair market cash value of such real estate or leasehold.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD] such time as he desires.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, during the World War the United States began and carried far toward completion a great development at Muscle Shoals at tremendous cost for the great purpose, among others, of obtaining nitrogen from the air for war purposes in time of war and for use in fertilizer in peace times.

Everyone was much in favor of the enterprise during the war. The enterprise would have been pushed to fullest capacity had the war lasted. Work would be immediately renewed should war start again. All agree Muscle Shoals, if finished, would be very valuable in a future war and would probably be worth more than many mighty battleships and millions of trained men, for these are of no value without ammunition. Why has the development stopped so suddenly? The answer must be apparent to everyone. There is a strong combination in and out of Congress which do not want the plant operated by the Government or any private enterprise for the benefit of the agricultural interest. There can not be any other reason. All favored it for war purposes. The opposition arose after the war. The development was suddenly stopped only when it became apparent that nitrogen was soon to be furnished at reduced prices for agricultural purposes. Many are extremely anxious to see the Government let go to wreck the work begun and lose many millions of dollars rather than see the enterprise operated for the farmers. Men in Congress have said on this floor that they would be willing for the work to be finished if assured it would be shut down and not operated for the agricultural interests or if they could be assured it would be sold or leased to some private enterprise to be operated for private gain. Those opposing the development do not want cheaper nitrogen for farmers. They would be glad for Muscle Shoals to be owned and operated by a syndicate which would furnish nitrogen at a high price and which would not at all interfere with those making enormous profits out of the farmers.

They think this would be a stimulant to business. They believe cheap nitrogen and cheap fertilizer would injure their business and the business of their friends. I believe cheap nitrogen would injure those making enormous profits out of the importation of Chilean nitrates and those engaged in dealing in nitrates on a large scale at excessive profits. I want to hurt their unfair business. Cheap nitrates would not hurt the small guano concern which is anxious to furnish fertilizer as cheaply as possible to the farmers. It would certainly be a godsend to the farmers of the country. I quote from the speech of Hon. EDWARD B. ALMON, of Alabama, before the Military Affairs Committee of the House on March 8, 1922:

Mr. Ford not only offers a very fair price for the nitrate plants, but agrees to keep nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals in an up-to-date running condition and available to the Government without cost if it should ever be needed for military purposes and the manufacture of munitions. It is now in a stand-by condition, expensive to guard and maintain. The older it grows the more expensive the maintenance charges will be. With the very best care it would rust out and greatly deteriorate in value. The fixation of atmospheric nitrogen is a comparatively new art, and it will be improved from time to time; and in order for this plant to keep pace with the progress of the art and be an up-to-date going concern in the event of a military emergency it must be operated in peace times.

Besides, the act of Congress making provision for its construction provided that it should be operated in peace times for the manufacture of fertilizer. So the acceptance of the Ford offer preserves this plant as a military plant and at the same time makes provision for its operation by private capital in peace time for the manufacture of fertilizer. The maintenance of the plant by the Ford company, relieving the Government of all expense and keeping it in an up-to-date running condition, is of inestimable value and would save the Government many millions of dollars, besides the advantages to agriculture, the basic industry on which the success and prosperity of every other business depends.

Mr. Ford further agrees to operate nitrate plant No. 2 during the entire period of the lease to its full capacity in the manufacture of commercial fertilizer and sell direct to the farmers at a price not to exceed 8 per cent over the actual cost of production, through a board nominated by the farmers' organizations and appointed by the President.

The present capacity of the plant would produce about 2,000,000 tons of fertilizer, which is about 30 per cent of the amount of fertilizer consumed in normal times. It has been clearly shown that with cheap water power the Ford company can make fertilizer at about one-half of the present price. The Nation's fertilizer bill is now nearly $250,000,000 annually. Suppose, for the sake of argument, that the operation of the Muscle Shoals plant should only result in a 20 per cent reduction in prices. That would amount to $50,000,000 a year saving to the farmers, and this amount for 100 years, out on compound interest—as the opponents of the Ford offer have undertaken to do in claiming what Mr. Ford would make from the Government in compounding interest—would be over $5,000,000,000 saved to the farmers of the country.

No one can possibly calculate the great good which will come to the farming interest of this country and to the entire Nation from a proper development of Muscle Shoals. At Muscle Shoals there is all that is necessary to make its development one of the greatest industrial moves of the South and the Nation. Minerals, water power, transportation, both rail and water, climate, and in fact everything that is necessary to make Muscle Shoals and its development one of the great things in our Nation's life are there.

Let us see that it is developed for the good of all the people and not for the good of the corporate interest. Henry Ford's proposition does not appeal to the monopolistic concerns which desire to either have the Muscle Shoals proposition closed down and "junked" or owned by them. His proposition does appeal to the farmers and those who are suffering because of the high price of nitrogen, which is so essential an ingredient in fertilizer and which is now obtained principally from Chile at an exorbitant and unreasonable price. Muscle Shoals is a mighty project, and should be utilized for the good of the Nation both in time of peace and in time of war.

Muscle Shoals has in its very waters a mighty power for the good of the Republic.

Some time in the dim past, no one now knows when, even before the happening of things remembered by the red man, a strange people gazed upon the mighty tumbling waters of the great river in northern Alabama and wondered at and worshiped with their benighted minds the mighty power of the seething, tumbling, roaring waters and felt in their souls that some mystic power was there at their very feet. These strange people have passed away and left no record except the mighty mound of earth where they worshiped, but the mighty magical power of the falling waters at which they wondered and which they worshiped has lasted through the years and is still there. The Cherokee Indians following these strange first children of the forest gazed at the mighty scene in admiration and amazement, and thought that they read within the rushing waves the force of the jagged lightning and that they heard there in the roar of the cataract the power of the thunder and called the shoals thundering waters. The Cherokees were right, the power of the lightning and the thunder was there and is still there.

After the Cherokees came the white man and their great war chief, Andrew Jackson, who saw and understood as man had never done before the tremendous power of the mighty torrent, and prophesied that a great city would be built upon the bluff overlooking the mighty rapids, and that it would probably become the future capital of the Nation. He saw in the power of the rapidly moving waters a force great enough to make and control the destiny of a mighty people.

Nearly a century later, while this Nation was engaged in a mighty conflict with a powerful combination of foreign foes, our statesmen anxiously sought for a mighty force which would make our victory more assured in time of war and which would marvelously enhance the prosperity of our people in time of peace. The tremendous power sought was found at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River, and our entire Nation has been aroused to a realization of the power there ready to be harnessed and used for the good of mankind. The red man and the white man, whether worshiper or warrior, were right when they saw in these mighty waters an unknown, tremendous, mystic power. It was there. It is there now. It was placed there by the Creator in the beginning as a part of the eternal plan. The unknown power worshiped by primitive man who first saw the turbulent stream, the power of the lightning and the thunder seen by the red Cherokee, the force sufficient to shape and control the destiny of a Nation admired by Jackson, and the power mighty enough to make our victory assured in time of war and our prosperity vouchsafed in time of peace as seen by the American people during the World War, are all there. They are all there for the everlasting benefit of our people and for the glory of God, if we will only reach out our hands and possess them and use them for the good of all.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, on general principles I am in favor of all legislation intended to compel fair and honest dealing on the part of those who engage in business transactions, but it appears to me that the legislation under consideration is of such a character that great injustice may be done honest men who are engaged in the legitimate development of the resources of the country, especially in mining and oil development. The prospector who discovers valuable minerals is generally a poor man and must necessarily look to those who have money to invest, and who are willing to enter a hazardous undertaking with the hope of reaping a large profit, and in order to secure the necessary money to develop the property a company is organized and shares offered for sale to those who are looking for investments of this character. The pending legislation is of a technical character, and I will not undertake to discuss the merits or demerits of the bill, but desire to read to the House letters received from prominent citizens in my State in whose judgment I have great confidence. The following letter is from Hon. Stewart Campbell, inspector of mines, who is naturally in close touch with the mineral development of the State:

THE STATE OF IDAHO, MINING DEPARTMENT,
Boise, April 3, 1922.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SMITH: H. R. 10598, introduced in the House by Congressman DENISON, of Illinois, and reported favorably from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, is one of the most destructive measures ever offered Congress if considered from the standpoint of western development. Our mines, Carey Act projects, irrigation districts, drainage districts, power companies, manufacturing companies, wholesale houses, etc., owe their life and existence to the sale of their securities, either stocks or bonds; and if all of these undertakings had been compelled to pass the "blue sky" laws of the various States, Idaho to-day would be a vast expanse of sagebrush sparsely inhabited and without operating mines or industries; and, further, if this bill becomes a law all future development will stop, particularly mining, as this industry depends entirely on the sale of stocks or bonds for the money necessary to develop the prospect into a mine. It is almost an impossibility for a mining company to pass the "blue sky" laws of the various States, and if able to do so the cost necessary would often exceed the amount the company expects to raise, and this cost is such that the promoter can not meet it, thus making it impossible to finance an undertaking of any kind.

The work of this office is such that I have had occasion to observe the operations of the "blue sky" laws of a number of States and the way this law is administered by them shows it to be impractical, as invariably the issuance of a permit lies in the hands of some banking clerk, or others equally as unqualified to pass on the merits or demerits of a mining venture; and that it is generally the illegitimate promoter who spends the time and money to procure a permit, which he then uses to further his operations, as this permit is recognized as a State indorsement. In fact, I have seen a number of reports made to the administrators of "blue sky" laws after the property had been visited by one of these examiners. The report generally indorses the venture, and the ignorance of the examiner is pitiful. Yet to these must Idaho bow if this bill becomes a law.

Two important questions come to my mind. Why legislate in favor of cities of over 500,000 population, and who is going to police the law? The Department of Justice or the Post Office Department? If the Department of Justice, would it not be a duplication of the work being done by the Post Office Department?

The necessity of a law of this kind is not clear to me unless it is to prevent the use of the mails, express, and telegraphs to defraud. If such is the case, why kill all legitimate promotions to reach a few illegimate promoters? If this is the intent of the bill, would it not be better to give the Post Office Department a small amount of the appropriation that would be necessary to police this bill, change the postal fraud laws so it will be possible to convict the illegitimate promoter who is now using the mails to defraud yet is able to avoid conviction and continue his operations through cunningly designed literature that is entirely misleading yet within the law? If this is done, and should be, there would be one Federal law that the people of the United States will have a unanimous respect for, with the reverse being true if H. R. 10598 becomes a law.

Frankly, my opinion is H. R. 10598 should be killed.

Very truly yours,

STEWART CAMPBELL,
Inspector of Mines.

I also desire to submit resolutions adopted by the Ada County Chapter of the Idaho Mining Association:

Whereas the blue sky laws of the various States are not uniform; and

Whereas the administration of the blue sky laws of various States is generally placed in the hands of officials who are not qualified to pass upon the merits or demerits of various business undertakings; and

Whereas experience has shown that the administration of the blue sky laws of various States is coupled with unlawful exaction as a condition precedent to do business; and

Whereas the Denison blue sky bill is rank class legislation; and

Whereas the Denison blue sky bill is the most destructive measure ever offered Congress, in that it will absolutely prevent development of any and all kinds and particularly in the Western States; and

Whereas the Denison blue sky bill is uncalled for paternalism; and

Whereas the Denison blue sky bill will add one more law for which the people of the United States will have no respect; and

Whereas the Denison blue sky bill will jeopardize all mining enterprises; and

Whereas general business enterprises are dependent upon the sale of their securities to a greater extent than the mining industry: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Ada County Chapter of the Idaho Mining Association respectfully requests that the Idaho congressional delegation use every power within their means to prevent the passage of such malignant legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That the Ada County Chapter of the Idaho Mining Association respectfully requests that the Hon. D. W. Davis, Governor of the State of Idaho; the Boise Chamber of Commerce; and all civic organization in the State take such action that the citizens of Idaho may realize the danger of this legislation.

J. B. ELDRIDGE,
STEWART CAMPBELL,
FRANK E. JOHNESSE,
W. H. PADDOCK,
I. H. FREAR,
JOHN E. LOOK,
JAMES S. BOGART, Committee.

I have also received the following letter from Hon. Miles Cannon, who is a close student of public affairs:

BOISE, April 10, 1922.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SMITH: Responsive to yours of March 29 relative to H. R. 10598, it is impossible for me to give you an expression as to the merits or demerits of this bill, as I am not a miner and have no idea of the conditions under which stock is sold and mining properties developed. I have no hesitancy in saying to you, however, that I have not talked with a mining man in this State relative to this legislation who has not condemned it in bitter terms. Several meetings have been held denouncing the act as being well intended to destroy the mining industry of the State. You can hear these expressions on any corner of the street wherever you find a mining man, and a large number of attorneys have expressed a similar view.

I want to emphasize, Mr. SMITH, the growing opposition of Federal interference with State industries. We are laboring under a burden of taxation which has reached the limit of our endurance. We are paying the Federal Government now three and a half million dollars per year out of money which we seriously need at home. If you were to ask my advice, I would say to devote every hour of your time from now to the end of the session in opposing further Federal interference in State affairs. It is unnecessary to discuss the merits of Federal bills. The great and overpowering fact is that it is necessary for us to preserve our principles of government, which is of far greater importance than the merits or demerits of any bill. The people who produce the wealth and pay the taxes must perform their functions or else our attempt at free government will fail. This is going to be the political trend for the next 10 years. I have heard any number of people say that they will not vote for any man who favors extension of Federal control. These men are men of affairs, whose influence will be felt. This is the very best of my judgment, and you can accept or reject it as you think best.

Very truly yours, MILES CANNON.

The following letter is from Frank E. Johnesse, a member of the American Institute of Mining and a mining engineer of wide experience, who has brought to the State of Idaho thousands of dollars from eastern investors for the development of the mineral resources of the State:

BOISE, IDAHO, March 22, 1922.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: All those with whom I have discussed the Denison bill (H. R. 10598—"blue sky") agree with me that it is devoutly to be hoped you will strongly oppose this amateurish, pernicious measure.

This bill simply tends to entrench stronger than ever the vested interests and to reduce to almost a state of peonage the small operator.

In our business of mining it will mean obliteration of the invaluable prospector and small operator, as no new enterprise could possibly withstand the added cost, for no adequate return, of some $1,000 for qualifying in each one of the numerous States, some $30,000 to $40,000 in all, in order to be in a position to be able to ask for public support. Besides subjecting the prospective shareholder to this added expense, unfair to all concerned, he would be compelled to risk the judging of his property to venal or incompetent officials. This condition will apply to all new industries and, carried to a logical conclusion, no industries could be promoted by other than wealthy people who would not need the new money. There are always accredited experts for the public to consult, men who know their business and whose integrity is unquestionable. Under the Denison scheme the whole country would finally stagnate from lack of new blood.

To-day the alleged "blue sky" laws inflict far more hardship upon honest endeavor than they do good by way of protecting the public from rascality. The good is made to suffer for the bad, a reductio ad absurdum, when the fact is that but a negligibly few people put their all into new ventures of any kind.

Anything more dangerous than to place the control of finance of new projects of a technical character in hands of persons so utterly uninformed, from a practical standpoint, in matters of constructive development as are the bankers as a class would be supremely ridiculous. Useful, undeniably, in their proper sphere, they are invariably singularly obtuse concerning potential values in raw materials; are naturally inclined to want to continue to turn over the gradually wasting old wealth rather than to attempt to visualize the positive economic necessity for continually providing new until the crying necessity for it has slowed down the wheels of progress to the point of impending calamity.

That nation which ceases to speculate dies.

As grown-up men we know that without incurring cheerfully reasonable business risks there can be no such thing as progress.

Respectfully yours,

FRANK E. JOHNESSE.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, two objections have been raised to this legislation. One is raised by those such as the constituents of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH], who think that the provisions of the bill are too stringent; the other by those who think the provisions of the bill are not stringent enough. I belive it would help both classes of objectors if they would keep clearly in mind the purpose and theory of the legislation. It is not really a Federal blue sky law. It is in fact a misnomer to speak of it as such. Its purpose is to make effective the blue sky laws of the different States and to make it harder for those who want to evade the State laws to do so. It does not in itself prevent the sale of any security, and it does not in itself authorize the sale of any security. As has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], the bill recognizes the right of each State to determine that question for itself. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] a few moments ago said that the bill would prevent the sale of farm mortgages. That is far from the fact. He misapprehends the provisions of the bill. It does not prevent the sale of farm mortgages at all. It simply prohibits in certain cases the use of the mails and other agencies of interstate commerce in selling securities in those States where they can not be sold without the consent of the securities commissions until they have obtained that consent. In those few States where there are no blue sky laws at the present time the mails may be used, and the other agencies of interstate commerce may be used without limit to sell any class of securities, as far as this legislation is concerned. In those States which have blue sky laws the mails can not be used to assist in the sale of securities contrary to their own blue sky laws, except these securities, which are specifically exempted by the bill. The legislation will hurt no one who is doing a legitimate business, and it will not unduly hamper anyone in the conduct of such legitimate business.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] in his modesty has not claimed the credit which he is entitled to for this particular legislation. He is entitled to great credit for originating it and for the work that he has put in upon this bill, and for the shape in which it is finally presented here on the floor of the House this afternoon.

The bill as now presented has the approval of the National Association of Securities Commissioners, the American Bankers' Association, and the Investment Bankers of America. Representatives of these associations met with Mr. DENISON and worked upon this proposed legislation for a long time, literally for weeks, I believe, putting in long hours every day before it was finally whipped into its present shape. As the bill was originally introduced, it met with the opposition of the representatives of some of these associations, but the bill as now presented has their approval. The president of the National Association of Securities Commissioners is the executive officer of the Michigan Securities Commission, Hon. H. N. Duff, a very efficient and capable official. He has taken great interest in this legislation. After the bill was reported by the committee and placed upon the calendar he wrote me a letter in which he said, among other things:

This bill is one in which this commission has unquestioned interest. The bill is designed to aid the Michigan blue-sky law, so called, in that it prevents fraudulent promoters from using the mails from outside the State into Michigan. It will close up the gap in the control of the sale of the fraudulent securities which Michigan at present has. We think it is absolutely necessary, and that as it stands it is a bill which will help nearly everybody and at the same time hurt nobody whose business is legitimate.

Mr. Chairman, the experience of the securities commission in Michigan has been this: It has refused the sale in Michigan of certain securities which that commission, a very conservative commission, thought ought not to be sold within the State.

The promoters of those same securties have gone over the State line into Ohio, established an office in Toledo, or they have gone over the State line into Indiana and established an office in Indianapolis, or into the State of Illinois and established an office in Chicago, and before anyone knew it the State was flooded with literature offering for sale the same securities which the Michigan Securities Commission had said could not be sold within the boundaries of the State. It is the purpose of this bill to make it impossible for the promoters of that sort of fraud to operate, or to make it possible to put them in jail if they continue to do that. Upon this point Mr. Duff, in a letter to me written some time ago, said:

> This bill is of more importance to the State of Michigan and the blue sky law than many people have any idea of. It would make amenable to the Michigan blue sky law all attempts of promoters outside the State to sell stocks and bonds of a suspicious nature by mail. With the amendments which the last legislature made to our Michigan blue sky law we think we have one of the best laws in the country, and the only hole in our armor plate is the proposition of stocks being sold here by mail from some other States. Many instances of such cases brought to our attention, where farmers and merchants of small towns have fallen for the exaggerated promises of the promoters of oil fields in Texas or sulphur deposits in Louisiana and other industrial work. I recall one case where a farmer and his wife living in Kent were stung $6,000 on a sulphur deposit in Louisiana. We have also had some cases where promoters of stock, which were not of the best type, after disapproval of this commission operated offices in Toledo, Chicago, and Indianapolis, and bombarded Michigan people by mail. Under our State law that the mails belong to the Government and are under interstate commerce we were absolutely helpless, and we have to sit by and see these outside promoters taking money through the mail. It is not only a crime upon our Michigan people but also unfair to Michigan promoters to live up to the letter of the law and take out of the State millions of dollars which should be invested in Michigan industry.

I do not believe that the constituents of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] or that gentlemen from any other State where they have blue-sky legislation, want people to be allowed to sell securities through the mails or otherwise to their people which their own State laws do not allow to be sold when all parties are within the territorial limits of the State. But that is all this bill does. It says no one can sell to the people of Idaho securities in the State of Idaho through the mails or through other agencies of interstate commerce that are not allowed to be sold under the laws of Idaho within the boundaries of that State. The same protection which gentlemen insist upon for the people of their own States they ought to be willing to accord to the people of other States.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. DENISON. I want to state for the benefit of those who are here that the protest we have just heard through my friend from Idaho, made by a certain organization out there, that they are making the same kind of an objection and the same kind of fight against their own State laws. They are opposing all sorts of laws that are intended to prevent the sale of fraudulent securities. Of course, I do not mean the gentleman from Idaho is doing that, but I mean the men who sent the communication to him are doing it.

Mr. MAPES. Certainly. One of the representatives of the National Association of Security Commissioners, who appeared before the committee in advocacy of the bill, was Mr. Canright, a member of the Wisconsin State Commission. He said of the bill as it was finally reported, referring to the conferences which were had between the representatives of the security commissioners, the investment bankers, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]:

> The bill was much better than we had hoped it would be possible to achieve, and it is with considerable pride and satisfaction after our long hours of work that we were able to get a bill which to both sides seemed to accomplish the object desired and at the same time not place any substantial or serious burden on the development of proper business enterprises.

Mr. Duff, president of the National Association of Securities Commissioners, in a letter to the chairman of the committee, which is printed in the hearings, very well said:

> The blue sky law of to-day, safeguarded as it is in most cases by court action and subject to enforcement by State officials who are men of experience, not only does not hurt legitimate business but helps legitimate business. Each and every dollar which the blue sky law saves from the crooked promoter goes into legitimate channels. The Denison bill can do no harm to legitimate business. Legitimate business is not so easily hurt nor is legitimate business attempting anything which it is afraid to tell the public, State officials, or anyone else. The theory of the State blue sky laws is merely "throw your cards upon the table." Legitimate business which is afraid to thus display its hand ceases to be legitimate business and becomes illegitimate business, and as such should be stopped by somebody, be it the Federal Government or the State governments.

And again, speaking of the bill:

> It hurts no one but the people it is intended to hurt, the crook who preys upon the widow and the orphan and the aged with alluring promises of great riches and gives them nothing.

In the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it would be well to keep this further thought in mind, which is well brought out in his letter by Mr. Duff, who has the welfare of this legislation very much at heart, when he says:

> This is an intricate bill and has been gone over by men who have made a study of the situation for years and have come in contact with the problem it deals with in all its phases. It is not perfect, but it should be put upon the books just as it comes from your committee, and we would respectfully ask that your committee, once it has agreed to report it, stand back of it on the floor of the House and see to it that it goes through without any emasculations or amendments which will destroy its efficacy and injure its effect.

Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of emphasis I repeat that the bill does not in itself purport to prohibit the sale of any security and it does not in itself make legal the sale of any security. Its aim is to make effective the State laws. [Applause.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I consider this a splendid piece of legislation, and am very glad to have the privilege of making an argument in behalf of the bill now under consideration. The conditions growing out of the recent war have greatly facilitated the increasing evil connected with the promotion of unsubstantial stocks and securities.

We have in South Carolina—in fact, in practically all of the States—a very satisfactory blue sky law governing the sale of securities, stocks, and bonds. We need, however, further aid in administering the State law by the help of a Federal statute. Those who have charge of administering the State law tell me that there are organized gangs who prey upon the innocent public by selling them fraudulent stock and worthless securities. We have in the United States thousands of concerns represented by professional experts, who in many instances are crooks. These experts are exploiting the unprotected public whose ignorance permits them to accept the terms of such unfair salesmen. These salesmen use all manner of attractive and enticing advertisements and schemes which fool the untrained man into thinking by investing he will greatly improve his financial status. To the trained business man these same schemes seem unthinkable. The men and women who invest in such stock and securities are usually those of small means and have little, if any, experience in dealing in such matters. They risk their little savings with the thought that they will become rich overnight.

I call your attention to a party in my section of the State who received through the mail some very attractive advertising matter in connection with the sale of oil-well stock which promised exceedingly large returns for a small investment. He purchased some of the stock, and in about three months he received a "handsome" dividend, with a statement showing the wonderful progress of the company. They offered him additional stock, stating that they had only a limited amount and that they wished their stockholders to have first choice. He swallowed the hook and line, baited with the "handsome" dividend, making a much larger purchase of the stock. Soon he found that the stock was worthless and lost all the money invested.

During the past few years, when money was plentiful in the Southern States, these expert salesmen with "get-rich-quick" schemes not only worked the city trade but the farmer as well. Folks living in the rural districts, not being in touch with their bankers and business men, were unable to judge the real value of such investments; therefore they were easily made victims by buying these fraudulent and worthless securities. It has been officially estimated that the people of the United States have lost as much as $500,000,000 annually through the sale of deceitful stocks. When one hears of the discovery of a new oil well or a mine in some distant part of the country these salesmen immediately organize, flooding the country with highly colored advertising matter and promising untold returns for investment in their organizations and in the end robbing thousands of innocent victims. The States are powerless, and unless we pass this kind of legislation they have no means of protecting their citizens. On account of the attractive promises many people even exchange their valuable Liberty bonds for these valueless securities.

A few days ago I received a letter from the Hon. John McMahan, commissioner of the insurance department of the State of South Carolina, stating that it is essential that we have such legislation as proposed in this bill in connection with our State law in order to fill the gap in the protection of the people against the sale of fraudulent securities.

I hope, therefore, that the House will pass this bill, so as to give the States the needed assistance in preventing the sale of worthless stocks and thereby putting an end to the robbery of thousands of innocent people.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. MAPES, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. DENISON were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10598, the "blue-sky" bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. TILSON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of public business.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which House Resolution 320 was passed on yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present at the time the vote was taken?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. I desire to explain in this connection that I simply wanted to enter the motion in order to preserve the status of the matter for a day or two, until the committee has a chance to see whether an error was made or not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman advise us as to what the resolution is?

Mr. JONES of Texas. It was to provide a month's salary to the secretary of the late Mr. Parrish. A question rose as to how to apportion the amount. The chairman of the committee is out of town, and no member of the committee desired to take the responsibility, and in order to have it pending, I make this motion. I understand to-day is the last day on which a motion to reconsider could be made, and I desire to make it and not have it acted upon now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves to reconsider the vote whereby House Resolution 320 was passed.

Mr. MONDELL. He enters the motion but does not call it up?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; I just enter it.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS MEMORIAL.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, by request I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, giving a brief outline of the ceremonies connected with the unveiling of the Columbus statue on the Depot Plaza, and including an address delivered by the Hon. James T. McCleary, at that time a Member of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the account referred to:

THE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS MEMORIAL.

Mr. RUCKER. Everyone who has a little time to look around the Plaza in front of the Union Station in this city must be struck by the majesty and beauty of the memorial to Christopher Columbus that stands directly in front of the station. I have lately been looking up that fine memorial. The best account of its dedication that I can find is given in the Columbiad, official organ of the Knights of Columbus. In its issue for July, 1912, a copy of which I hold in my hand, the opening article, by Denis A. McCarthy, who at the banquet in the evening of June 8, 1912, read an original poem in honor of the occasion, tells the story of that ceremonial nearly 10 years ago, when the memorial was dedicated. In part it reads as follows:

UNVEILING A MAGNIFICENT SUCCESS.

In the brilliant sunshine of a day whose summer temperature was modified by a delightfully cool and pleasant breeze, the greatest nation in the New World which Columbus discovered in 1492 paid fitting tribute to his memory when amid scenes of splendor and enthusiasm a national memorial to the admiral of the ocean was unveiled in Washington, Saturday, June 8.

The tribute no doubt was tardy; the full and frank recognition by the United States of America of the debt which this Nation and the world owe to the fearless mariner had been a long time withheld (other men of lesser note being honored in the meantime); but the beauty and impressiveness of the memorial to Columbus, and the dignity and brilliancy which marked the unveiling, were such as to make the spectator forget the long years of neglect.

Standing before the majestic monument, or pacing the streets of the Nation's Capital, all ablaze and aflutter with flags and bunting and signs of welcome and festivity, one could not but feel proud of the order which bears the name of Columbus; for, were it not for the knights, it is safe to say that this long-deferred act of justice to the name and fame of Christopher Columbus would be still longer deferred, if indeed it would ever be performed at all. They it was who initiated it; they it was who untiringly advocated it; they it was whose clear presentation of the propriety of erecting such a monument won for the project the friendship and adherence of just and thoughtful men of all creeds and classes.

Saturday, June 8, was therefore with excellent reason a Knights of Columbus holiday in Washington. They thronged the city. The hotels were filled with them and their ladies; and shops, buildings, and public places were gay with bannerettes and badges of the members of the order from all over the country. Honoring Columbus, Washington and the Nation honored them also; and it may well be said that for them the Capital City hung its banners on the outer walls; for them receptions and other functions were held; for them, and of them, parades were organized; and for them the night sky was bright with fireworks.

THE STORY OF THE MEMORIAL.

The story of the memorial whose unveiling was the cause of all this festal beauty in Washington, though often told before, has a place here. By an act approved March 4, 1907, Congress appropriated $100,000 for the erection in the Capital City of a suitable memorial to Christopher Columbus, and created a commission, composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the chairmen of the House and Senate Committees on the Library of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and the supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus, with authority to select a fitting design and to contract for and superintend the construction of the memorial.

On February 4, 1908, the commission selected as a site for the memorial the plaza in front of the new Union Station. In February, 1909, the commission, after carrying out a program of competition, selected Lorado Taft, of Chicago, as the sculptor, and on March 4, 1910, a contract was entered into with Mr. Taft to furnish the models for the sculptural work, to exercise supervision over its execution in stone, and to superintend its erection.

No picture that we have seen gives an adequate idea of the size, beauty, and impressiveness of the memorial. It is constructed of Georgia marble, and is 66 feet broad, 44 feet deep, and its central pylon or shaft is some 45 feet high. This shaft is crowned with a globe which is supported by four eagles connected by garlands. From the front of this shaft a boat's prow extends into the upper basin of the fountain, for the whole memorial is a monumental fountain. The winged figure of decorative prow symbolizes the spirit of discovery. The prow serves as a pedestal for the statue of Columbus, which is 15 feet in height and carved from a single block of beautiful white marble.

This figure—

Writes the sculptor himself in a description of the memorial—wrapped in its medieval mantle, stands in a quiet pose with folded arms and steady gaze, expressive of the confidence of the great spirit within.

It is the first object to greet the eye of the stranger entering Washington through the Union Station, and, as President Taft pointed out in his address at the unveiling, it leads the gaze to the dome of the Capitol, which is dedicated to human liberty. The whole memorial is a striking example of a noble thought nobly executed, and everybody in any way connected with the placing in Washington of such a work of art to speak to all future ages of the genius of Columbus may well experience gratification. The Knights of Columbus particularly may point to it as one of the many noble works they have accomplished since their organization.

THE DEDICATION EXERCISES.

The assemblage was called to order by Secretary of State Philander Chase Knox, chairman. He introduced the Right Rev. Monsignor Thomas J. Shahan, rector of the Catholic University, who prayed the Almighty and Eternal Ruler to look down benignly on the work that was that day being accomplished; to let the light of His countenance shine on the multitude of His people gathered at their national center to honor—the illustrious man who threw open to religion, civilization, and liberty the gates of a new world and made free to mankind the high and broad pathways it since has trodden. Increase in all Thy children the spirit of faith in which Thy chosen agent crossed the unknown seas and braved many perils to make Thee known to far-off peoples that sat in darkness of heart and mind. Arouse in us, O Lord, some measure of sublime courage with which Thy glorious agent ever faced adversity.

When the prayer was ended Mr. Knox introduced Hon. Victor J. Dowling, justice of the Supreme Court of New York, who paid eloquent tribute to the great discoverer, saying at the close that it was fitting that after centuries recognition should be given, sincere if tardy, to Columbus's great services to humanity.

It is the appreciation of his nobility of character—which is leading to the spreading movement to make Columbus Day a holiday, in which 30 States have now joined, and to whose ranks it is hoped that the Nation itself will soon be added.

Said Justice Dowling—

Representative James T. McCleary, of Minnesota, a member of the original commission which chose the design and site for the memorial, then made a much-applauded address, in which he lauded the virtues of Columbus. (This address in full follows.)

Then followed the most dramatic moment of the ceremony, as the Italian ambassador, Marquis Cusani Confalonieri, made a short address in English, followed by another in his native tongue, and then drew the cords which unveiled the memorial.

It was a stirring moment and one that was marked by enthusiastic applause as the flag which had hidden the figure of Columbus was drawn aside and the majestic statue of the fearless mariner was revealed to the expectant throng. As if in answer to the applause of the people in the stand, immediately the artillery began to thunder forth its salute of 21 guns.

After this salute and the playing of the Star-Spangled Banner by the Marine Band, His Excellency William Howard Taft, President of the United States, was introduced and made an address which was listened to intently and vigorously applauded.

It is true—

Said the President—

that there were other mariners as skilled as Columbus, as brave in exposing themselves to danger as he was, in that heydey of Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese manhood. And the risks they ran, the dangers they encountered and survived arouse in the reader of the present day amazement and profound admiration. But the supreme merit was his to do first that which, until he did it, presented unknown terrors to the adventurer.

From Mr. McCarthy's inspiring account of the dedication I have taken enough to enable the reader to get an idea of the occasion.

I was in Congress at the time and I well remember the day. It was a real pleasure and satisfaction to me, as it was to all Members of both Houses, to vote for the bill providing for the memorial. Its spirit and purpose were generally approved. That great organization, the Knights of Columbus, had made known to the country the meaning of it all.

The address of Hon. James T. McCleary at the dedication is so well worthy of presentation in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that I ask unanimous consent to incorporate it in the extension of my remarks. It is as follows:

THE MEANING OF MEMORIALS.

Mr. McCLEARY. The framers of this program evidently believe in proverbs. In selecting the speakers and arranging the order of the three formal addresses they have illustrated three of these proverbs. "What is well begun is half done," so for the opening address they were fortunate in securing the eminent jurist from New York to whose address we have listened with so much of pleasure and profit. "All's well that ends well," and the occasion is honored by having the closing address made by the foremost citizen of the Republic. With such an opening and such a closing of the formal speaking program, with its success thus assured, it was not necessary for the committee to look far for the one to deliver the middle address. They need only act on the theory, "The ends justify the means."

With the vision of a poet and the skill of an artist, Justice Dowling has pictured for us the career of Christopher Columbus. To that picture it were idle for me to try to add. On the other hand I am not unmindful of the fact that this occasion has certain aspects, some of them international in character, which can most appropriately be presented by the Chief Magistrate of the Nation. My field, therefore, as the representative of the Columbus Memorial Commission, seems in the nature of the case circumscribed to the memorial itself and some of the things that it suggests.

WHAT ONE SEES DEPENDS LARGELY ON WHAT HE IS.

Our first transcontinental railway was completed in 1869. Westward from Omaha and eastward from the Golden Gate the work of construction had for years been pushed. Across the plains and over the mountain passes strong men had long been building the two sections of the road toward each other. Nearer and nearer month by month they came. Finally not far from Ogden the two sections were united, and to mark the wedding of the east and the west a golden spike was driven.

From all parts of the country prominent men journeyed out to the Sierras to witness the crowning act of the epoch-making achievement. Among those assembled on the day appointed for the ceremony were groups of aborigines. These Indians saw the wondrous locomotives which always impress us with awe. They looked on those engines, but marveled not at their mechanism or their power. On the moving palaces that we call railway coaches they gazed with stolid faces. They saw the wires stretching from pole to pole away off into the distance, and they were told that over those lines men hundreds of miles apart could talk as if face to face. Even this wonderful thing evoked from them no sign of surprise.

But there was one performance that seemed to fascinate them, one that called forth from them great grunts of admiration. On it they gazed with eyes and ears and mouths—every avenue of approach to the brain—wide open with appreciation and approval. As they watched it they became tremulous with excitement; every fiber of their bodies seemed to vibrate with enthusiastic admiration. And what was it that called forth such marked evidences of appreciation? It was the way in which the linemen climbed the telegraph poles to fix the wires!

Why did this comparatively unimportant performance command their admiration while the really great things to be seen were unable even to secure their attention? It was because the climbing of the telegraph poles came within the range of their experience and thus came within their power to appreciate. They had climbed trees. They knew the difficulty of tree-climbing even with the aid of bark and branches. Here were bare trees, barkless and branchless, and yet these wonderful white men climbed them with surprising quickness and certainty!

The powerful locomotives, the beautiful coaches, the wonderful electric telegraph—none of these made any impression on the natives. Why? They failed to admire simply because they could not understand. Under such conditions men always and everywhere are prone to do one of two things, either remain wholly unmoved or else be so overwhelmed that they regard the phenomena as supernatural.

A CREDIT TO THE NATION.

Only those who have themselves achieved can intelligently appreciate achievement. Only she who has patiently day after day run her fingers back and forth over the keyboard can really understand and adequately admire the technique of the pianist. Only those who have participated in the construction of some great work can appreciate constructive achievement at its true worth. Intelligent appreciation of greatness in others argues a measure of greatness in oneself. Monuments to great men are honorable alike to those for whom they are set up and to those who erect them. It is to our own credit as a Nation, therefore, that even though tardily we have erected out of public funds, and are now dedicating with dignified ceremonial, this fine memorial to the world's foremost discoverer, perhaps its greatest secular benefactor.

It is a principle of human nature that what men habitually contemplate they come to resemble. That is the lesson of Hawthorne's story of The Great Stone Face. And every-day observation and experience confirm its truth. Those whose minds habitually dwell on mean and petty things tend to become mean and petty. Those who think often on large and noble things grow day by day in breadth of mind and magnanimity of soul. "As a man thinketh, so is he." And so I extend my hearty congratulations to that great society so numerously represented here to-day on having named their organization after him in whose honor we are now assembled. The very name, Knights of Columbus, is elevating and ennobling. Knights! Columbus! What pictures of chivalry the words conjure up! What courage in the presence of danger! What persistence in the face of discouragement! What kindness to the weak! What generosity to the poor! What sympathy for the suffering! What faith! What constancy! How could a man fail to be bettered by membership in an organization "so conceived and so dedicated?"

It was Italy that gave Columbus to the world. So it seems fitting that this memorial should be unveiled by the distinguished gentleman who as ambassador so worthily represents that great country at this Capital. When in a few minutes now the ambassador shall have performed that pleasant duty it will be found that the memorial is to Christopher Columbus alone. Not a man who accompanied him on his memorable voyage is here remembered. Even Ferdinand and Isabella are honored only by a medallion on the back of the memorial. Is this a just arrangement? To the American people it is more important than may at first appear that the popular answer to this question be right.

The men shared with Columbus the dangers of the deep; should they not here and now be honored with him for the achievement? In a certain sense, yes. But who knows their names? The human mind has limitations. The ability to remember some things depends on the power to forget many things. Only the loftiest mountains can be seen at great distances; the supporting hills at their base soon disappear from view.

COLUMBUS THE CHIEF FIGURE.

Ferdinand and Isabella rendered their own country many and great services, and for those services they are justly honored in the annals of Spain. But the world at large remembers them chiefly as the patrons of Columbus in his fateful enterprise. Their fame is due primarily to his achievement. Their relation to that achievement was such that it seems fitting that their names and faces should appear on this memorial.

And here it seems proper to note that whenever and wherever a great deed for humanity is done, it will usually be found that connected with it in some inspiring and helpful way is a good woman.

Considering now the particular achievement that we are assembled to commemorate, whose brain conceived the enterprise? Whose skill wrought out the details? Whose soul furnished the courage that surmounted all difficulties? Who pushed on when everyone else wished to turn back? Who was the one person for whom there could be no substitute? Who was the one person indispensable to the success of the enterprise? As a matter of inherent justice and the highest equity, whose should be the supreme credit for the result? The world rightfully ascribes to Columbus the chief glory. This memorial is evidence that we concur in the world's opinion. That judgment will never be reversed or recalled.

It would be out of place on this occasion to discuss questions of a partisan character. We have come as one people to pay honor to Columbus. Our hearts are beating in unison with gratitude to our benefactor. The memorial is the tribute of all our people—all sections, all parties, all creeds—to a man who has rendered a service of incalculable value to the entire world. But the very setting up of the memorial to this heroic soul contains a suggestion too vital to the welfare of all our people to be allowed to pass unnoticed here.

In essence, though not in form, the achievement of Columbus is constantly being duplicated.

NEW WORLDS ARE CONSTANTLY BEING DISCOVERED.

Within the lifetime of many in this audience clothing was all handmade. At that time the making of garments was one of the incidents of housekeeping. Few people were able to find in garment making a distinct means of earning a livelihood. Since the invention of the sewing machine the making of clothing has become a great industry, one in which hundreds of thousands of our people find opportunity to earn an honest and useful livelihood. More than that, for every person who a century ago was able to get one new dress or one new suit of clothes a year a hundred can now afford two or more new suits or dresses every year. By inventing the sewing machine Elias Howe opened up a new world to industry, vastly increased opportunity, and placed within the reach of millions of people comforts that but for his invention would have remained wholly unattainable.

One of the honored residents of this Capital City, Alexander Graham Bell, who still moves modestly among us, has opened up another world which but for his invention would have remained closed to mankind. The telephone has made possible a vast number of useful services that without it would be impossible. It has added immensely to the comfort and convenience and safety of the world's teeming millions. The communication of intelligence is the world's greatest civilizer. And for every person formerly employed in transmitting messages hundreds are now so employed. To the wage earner the telephone has opened up a new world of opportunity.

The men on the caravel with Columbus several times threatened to throw him overboard. If they had done so, would they have promoted or retarded the world's progress? Would they have helped or hurt the great mass of mankind? Suppose that the people of those days in all countries had definitely decided that they would use the power of their governments to prevent men of the type of Columbus from exercising their talents; would they have been wise or unwise? Would it be to the advantage of the mass of our people for our Government to adopt the policy of preventing men from doing the best and the most of which they are capable?

Wonderful as was the nineteenth century, its achievements can be far eclipsed in the twentieth. The men could have thrown Columbus overboard. Progress can be hindered. Shall this great Nation, the flowering century plant of time, promote or retard the opening up of these new worlds waiting to be discovered? Do we really desire progress or do we simply wish to talk about it?

THE SPARTAN SYSTEM.

For a long time ancient Sparta pursued the policy of exposing all puny infants on the hillsides to die. Only those infants could lawfully be nourished that gave promise of growing up into vigorous manhood or womanhood. Under that system Sparta developed a great race and was able to maintain itself in the midst of powerful foes. Since then the world has grown kinder and the Spartan policy of deliberately killing off the weak has been abandoned. But would it not be unspeakably foolish to adopt the opposite policy of deliberately killing off the strong? And who would be the chief sufferers under such a policy? Precisely those whose interest it is professed to serve thereby. The weak need the strong vastly more than the strong need the weak.

Among men there are more warm hearts than wise heads. Men differ not so much in their motives as in their methods. Though pain and poverty seem to have been ordained by One infinitely wiser and kinder than we, all of us would like to banish them from the earth. Not everyone knows how to do it, but everyone ought to know how not to do it. The lowly can not be permanently lifted up by pulling down the exalted. The real interest of the many can not be promoted by unjust treatment of the few.

We have met to honor achievement. We pay tribute to-day to the Genoese boy who rose from the deepest obscurity to world-wide, age-enduring fame. He heard the voices of the sea and followed the beckoning waves of the blue Mediterranean. Step by step he solved old ocean's mystery and conquered all its terrors. His achievement enlarged the world for man and gave new glory to the sovereigns who lent him aid. Had he received as his reward an infinitesimal part of what he gave to mankind, he would have been rich beyond the dream of avarice. He would have become rich not by taking from others but by preserving to himself a little of what he created. And it is still a part of the divine law of compensation that in order to do much legitimately for himself a man must do immensely more for others. Exceptions to this rule only go to prove it. If wrongdoing never prospered, no one would ever be tempted to do wrong; if it always prospered, the most virtuous would be sorely tried.

Slowly but surely man is moving upward. Disease and pestilence are being driven from the earth. Before the rising sun of intelligence, ignorance and superstition are vanishing like the mists of the morning. Pain is being mitigated and poverty is being lessened. The average man to-day enjoys comforts and conveniences that a king could not command even a century ago. Perhaps the chief significance of this memorial is its value as evidence that the American people hereby show their recognition and approval of the fact that in the onward and upward march of humanity the many have always been led by the few, and that in the nature of the case this must always be true. This is the meaning of memorials.

Let us here and now as a Nation highly resolve that in the future, as in the past, America shall continue to be the land of opportunity. Let us make it more true rather than less true that in this country the man of one talent and the man of many talents shall each be free to achieve the most and the best of which he is capable, and enjoy the full reward that he has fairly earned. Let us keep wide open for everyone the golden gate of opportunity.

THE IMPORTANCE OF INSTITUTIONS.

One other truth this memorial speaks with voiceless eloquence. This Columbus whom we honor has passed from earth. Men, however great, must die. The good work they started would perish with them but for one thing. To insure the carrying on of their work after they have passed away men establish institutions. Before the fateful day on Calvary the Incarnation of Love and Wisdom gathered around Him a body of men to carry on His work. The institution then established has survived the centuries. It still remains blessing and to bless mankind.

One April day in 1865 our country was shocked to hear that the head of the Nation, its best beloved son, had been slain by an assassin. Indignation and anger were felt by every heart. In New York City the editor of a certain newspaper had been saying harsh things about the loved and lost. A crowd gathered and moved toward the building in which this paper was published. The crowd's righteous resentment was to be shown by the demolition of the offending plant. No one can tell what might have happened. But a man appeared on a balcony above the crowd and in a voice that was heard by all he cried, "God reigns, and the Government at Washington still lives." That speech was an inspiration, worthy of the man who a few years later reached the same high station and suffered the same sad fate. Garfield saw that day with the vision of a seer and spoke with the wisdom of a sage. The effect was instantaneous. His words fell like oil upon the troubled waters. The crowd, which was moved by a righteous indignation, but was about to express it in a wrong way, gradually dissolved and the Nation was saved another crime.

Garfield was right. Men die but institutions live. The men who framed our Government have all gone to their reward. But they gave us an institution and a Constitution which for a century and a quarter has served us marvelously well. Our national Constitution has commanded the enthusiastic commendation of the greatest and wisest statesmen of this and other lands. In the words of Gladstone, "The American Constitution is the greatest instrument ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man." It served well our national purposes when we were a little Nation of thirteen States and four millions of people living along the shores of the Atlantic. It has served us well as we have grown to be the mightiest Nation on the face of the earth, with a hundred millions of people, a Nation that has extended across the continent and covered the islands of the eastern seas. Through all these years it has remained largely unchanged—almost entirely unchanged in its vital principles. That it has been amended shows that it can be amended when the people in their sober judgment think that that is wise.

To the inexperienced all things are possible and most things are easy. Experience shows that there is often a vast difference between promises and performances. Some of the most highly praised mining claims fail to pan out. Whatever in the present agitation is true and wise will remain, the rest will be blown away like chaff in the severe winnowing of public discussion.

I have an abiding faith in the might of right and in the common sense of the common people. We are not always right in the method of carrying out our best impulses, but experience proves that the sober second thought of the American people can be safely trusted.

And now, Mr. President, to you as the Chief Magistrate of the Nation, I have the honor, as a member of the Columbus Memorial Commission, to turn over this memorial. We chose as its site this entrance to the Nation's Capital, this gateway to the District that bears his name. May the Nation preserve the memorial with loving care and may it throughout unnumbered years speak to our people its lessons of sublime faith and unfaltering courage.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that April 24 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 274. Joint resolution authorizing the commissioning in the Marine Corps of midshipmen under certain conditions.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3195. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept completion of Carey segregation No. 11, and to issue patent therefor; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 1087. An act for the relief of H. L. McFarlin; to the Committee on Claims.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 26, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FORDNEY: Committee on Ways and Means. H. J. Res. 270. A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia; without amendment (Rept. No. 924). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 6258. A bill to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C.; without amendment (Rept. No. 925). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McKENZIE: Special Committee on Adjustment of Pay, etc. H. R. 10972. A bill to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service; without amendment (Rept. No. 926). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FULLER: Committee on Invalid Pensions. H. R. 11427. A bill granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; without amendment (Rept. No. 923). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KEARNS: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 777. An act for the relief of John M. Green; without amendment (Rept. No. 928). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KEARNS: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 1880. An act providing for the appointment of Warrant Officer Herbert Warren Hardman as captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army; without amendment (Rept. No. 929). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KNUTSON: Committee on Pensions. S. 3300. An act granting a pension to Marie Doughty Gorgas; without amendment (Rept. No. 930). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11150) granting a pension to Emil Schmitt, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 11427) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 11428) to fix the salaries of the Civil Service Commissioners and of certain employees of the Civil Service Commission; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 11429) authorizing the United States Shipping Board to reimburse builders of wooden ships for losses sustained as the result of the cancellation of contracts and the abandonment of wooden-ship construction; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. PATTERSON of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 11430) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Haddonfield, N. J.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CURRY: A bill (H. R. 11431) authorizing and directing the Postmaster General to permit the use of special canceling stamps in the post office at Sacramento, Calif., bearing the words and figures "Come to the Days of '49 Celebration, Sacramento, Calif., May 23–29, 1922"; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 11449) to provide for the protection and development of the lower Colorado River Basin; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. RANKIN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 312) amending section 404 of the war risk insurance act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McKENZIE: Resolution (H. Res. 331) for the consideration of House bill 10972; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. TUCKER: Resolution (H. Res. 333) requesting the President of the United States to send the four-power treaty and other papers to the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURDICK: A bill (H. R. 11432) for the relief of John H. Barrett and wife; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FAUST: A bill (H. R. 11433) for the relief of Bruce Bros. Grain Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 11434) granting a pension to Calvin R. White; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11435) for the relief of W. F. Morgareidge; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: A bill (H. R. 11436) granting an increase of pension to Fredericka S. Albee; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HICKEY: A bill (H. R. 11437) granting a pension to Olive Bosworth; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOGAN: A bill (H. R. 11438) for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LEA of California: A bill (H. R. 11439) granting a pension to Olive W. Cox; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H. R. 11440) for the relief of Henrietta Greene, E. G. Green, J. B. Howell, Emily C. Vaughn, M. E. Howell, W. G. Howell, and Vivan Howell; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. REBER: A bill (H. R. 11441) for the relief of M. Spector & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TINCHER: A bill (H. R. 11442) granting a pension to Sophia Wilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H. R. 11443) granting a pension to George C. Peterson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEAVER: A bill (H. R. 11444) for the relief of the Powell Grocery Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WYANT: A bill (H. R. 11445) granting an increase of pension to Charlotte Wirsing; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11446) granting an increase of pension to Grace Olive Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11447) granting an increase of pension to James M. Laird; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11448) granting a pension to Margaret Anna Colligan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5271. By the SPEAKER (by request): Resolution of the Presbytery of Nebraska City, Nebr., of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, representing 7,466 members, in support of the constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations (H. J. Res. 159); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5272. Also (by request), resolution of the Presbytery of Wenatchee, Wash., of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, representing 1,516 members, in support of the constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations (H. J. Res. 159); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5273. Also (by request), resolution of the Presbytery of Lansing, Mich., of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, representing 3,814 members, in support of the constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations (H. J. Res. 159); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5274. Also (by request), resolution of the Presbytery of Washington, Pa., of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, representing 8,957 members, in support of the constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations (H. J. Res. 159); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5275. Also (by request), resolution of the Presbytery of Walla Walla, Wash., of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, representing 2,681 members, in support of the constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations (H. J. Res. 159); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5276. Also (by request), resolution of the Presbytery of Columbia, N. Y., of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, representing 1,676 members, in support of the constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations (H. J. Res. 159); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5277. Also (by request) resolution of the Presbytery of Shenango, Pa., of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, representing 7,940 members, in support of the constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations (H. J. Res. 159); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5278. Also (by request) resolution of the Wilmington Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, representing 48,522 members, in support of the constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations (H. J. Res. 159); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5279. By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Petition of the Appalachian Mountain Club, opposing transfer of administration of national forests from Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5280. Also, petition of the Massachusetts Society, Sons of American Revolution, opposing the proposed erection in Washington on public land of the so-called George Washington Memorial; to the Committee on the Library.

5281. By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of the Council of the City of Alameda, Calif., indorsing House bill 10212; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5282. By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Petition of citizens of Beloit, Wis., protesting against the passage of House bill 9753, or any other Sunday bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5283. By Mr. CURRY: Petition of the City Council of the City of Alameda, Calif., favoring the enactment of House bill 10212, amending the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5284. By Mr. DALLINGER: Resolution of the Appalachian Mountain Club, opposing the transfer of the national forests from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5285. By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Petition of the Keithsburg Woman's Club, of Keithsburg, Ill., and others, relative to House bill 5964; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5286. By Mr. HICKEY: Resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Logansport, at South Bend, Ind., April 18, 1922, indorsing House joint resolution 131, proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5287. Also, resolution passed at a meeting of the Presbytery of Logansport, at South Bend, Ind., April 18, 1922, indorsing Senate joint resolution 31, proposing a constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to enact uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5288. Also, resolution passed at a meeting of the Presbytery of Logansport, at South Bend, Ind., April 18, 1922, indorsing House bill 9753, to secure Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5289. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the Peoria County Farm Bureau, of Peoria, Ill., of April 8, 1922, also April 10, 1922, relative to the importation of "blackstrap molasses"; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5290. Also, petition of the Southern Tariff Association, of Washington, D. C., relative to tariff on vegetable oils; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5291. By Mr. MacGREGOR: Resolution adopted by Grange No. 906, relative to the election of six directors to the Federal land banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

5292. Also, resolution adopted by the corporation counsel of the city of Buffalo, relative to a bill to amend the Judicial Code relating to district and circuit courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5293. By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska: Petition of sundry citizens of York County, Nebr., urging revival of the United States Grain Corporation; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5294. By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of 300 residents of Marshall, Taylor, Richardton, and other places in North Dakota, urging the revival of the United States Grain Corporation and a stabilized price on wheat and other farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5295. By Mr. THOMPSON: Petition of the Presbytery of Toledo, Synod of Ohio, urging passage of Senate Joint Resolution 31, proposing a constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to enact uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5296. Also, petition of the Presbytery of Toledo, Synod of Ohio, urging passage of House Joint Resolution 131, proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5297. Also, petition of the Presbytery of Toledo, Synod of Ohio, urging passage of House bill 9753, to secure Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5298. By Mr. ZIHLMAN: Petition of citizens of Washington, D. C., protesting against the passage of any legislation looking to the enforcement of the observance of any religious institution, or of taking any step in the direction of a union of church and state, and particularly petitioning Congress not to pass House bill 9753 or any other Sunday bills such, for example, as House bill 4388 and Senate bill 1948; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 26, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gerry	McCumber	Pomerene
Borah	Glass	McKellar	Ransdell
Brandegee	Gooding	McKinley	Rawson
Broussard	Hale	McLean	Sheppard
Calder	Harreld	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Harris	Moses	Stanley
Caraway	Harrison	Myers	Sterling
Colt	Heflin	Nelson	Sutherland
Culberson	Johnson	Newberry	Townsend
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Kellogg	Norris	Warren
du Pont	Keyes	Oddie	Watson, Ga.
Edge	King	Overman	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	Ladd	Page	Willis
Fletcher	La Follette	Phipps
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Poindexter

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is absent on official business.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may continue through the day.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is detained on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INTERMENT OF SOLDIER DEAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Quartermaster General of the Army, inclosing a list of American soldier dead returned from overseas to be reinterred in the Arlington National Cemetery Thursday, April 27, 1922, at 2.30 p. m., which was ordered to lie on the table for the information of Senators.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, NAVY DEPARTMENT, 1923 (S. DOC. NO. 195).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Navy Department, fiscal year 1923, for additional employees, Hydrographic Office, $100,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 1059. An act for the relief of J. B. Waterman;

S. 2616. An act to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey certain land;

S. 3170. An act regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 7272. An act for the relief of Monroe B. Shealy.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions and telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Jewish Ministers' Association of Harlem, N. Y., Rabbi S. Hurwitz, secretary; of the Federation of Hungarian Jews, Samuel Buchler, president, New York City; of the Ladies' Mizrachi Zionists' Organization, of Boston, Mass.; and of the Hadadassh Chapter, the Charleston Hebrew School, the Charleston District Zionist Organization, the South Carolina Jewish Relief Committee, the Beth Israel Congregation, the Society Daughters of Israel, the B'rith Shalam Congregation, in the State of South Carolina, praying for the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 191, favoring the establishment in Palestine of the National Home for the Jewish people, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NICHOLSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fort Collins, Colo., praying for the enactment of legislation favoring the establishment in Palestine of the National Home for the Jewish people, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Topeka, at Topeka, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for uniform marriage and divorce laws, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Presbytery of Topeka, at Topeka, Kans., and the Kansas City Presbytery, at Amoret, Mo., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Presbytery of Topeka, at Topeka, Kans., and the Kansas City Presbytery, at Amoret, Mo., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NORRIS presented resolutions adopted by the Presbytery of Kearney, at Central City, and the Nebraska City Presbytery, at Fairbury, both in the State of Nebraska, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for uniform marriage and divorce laws, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Presbytery of Kearney, at Central City, and the Nebraska City Presbytery, at Fairbury, both in the State of Nebraska, favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Presbytery of Kearney, at Central City, and the Nebraska City Presbytery, at Fairbury, both in the State of Nebraska, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Lansing, at Hastings, Mich., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Lansing, at Hastings, Mich., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Presbytery of Lansing, at Hastings, Mich., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for uniform marriage and divorce laws, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of citizens of Ann Arbor, Mich., favoring the enactment of a more stringent immigration law, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ERNST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2610) in reference to writs of error, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 636) thereon.

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 7847) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 637); and

A bill (H. R. 8624) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 638).

MEMORIAL OF GEN. ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Concurrent Resolution 22, submitted yesterday by Mr. WADSWORTH, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to purchase a floral wreath to be placed upon the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant at the unveiling ceremonies on April 27, 1922, the expense of such wreath to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they presented to the President of the United States enrolled bills of the following titles:

On April 25, 1922:

S. 157. An act for the relief of the Rosen Reichardt Brokerage Co., of St. Louis, Mo.;

S. 518. An act to carry out the provisions of an act approved July 1, 1902, known as an act entitled "An act to accept, ratify, and confirm a proposed agreement submitted by the Kansas or Kaw Indians of Oklahoma, and for other purposes," and to provide for a settlement to Addie May Auld and Archie William Auld, who were enrolled as members of the said tribe after the lands and moneys of said tribe had been divided;

S. 667. An act for the relief of John B. H. Waring;

S. 1077. An act to authorize the payment of $5,000 to the Government of Japan for the benefit of the family of Torahachi Uratake, a Japanese subject, killed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, on November 25, 1915;

S. 1610. An act to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.;

S. 1733. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the president of the Milwaukee Press Club, of Milwaukee, Wis., the bell of the wrecked cruiser Milwaukee;

S. 1767. An act for the relief of the owner of the derrick Capitol;

S. 2147. An act to authorize patent to the Ed E. Richardson Co. (Inc.) of certain lands;

S. 2765. An act for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.; and

S. 3268. An act to authorize the Chicago, Detroit & Canada Grand Trunk Junction Railroad Co., or its successors or assigns, to lease certain of its properties in the State of Michigan.

On April 26, 1922:

S. 1059. An act for the relief of J. B. Waterman;

S. 2616. An act to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey certain land; and

S. 3170. An act regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKINLEY (by request):

A bill (S. 3513) to repeal section 1 of the act approved May 19, 1852, as to certain lands; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 3514) granting a pension to Frank Yandes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3515) for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 3516) to correct the military record of Lieut. Commander Charles O. Maas; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McKINLEY:

A bill (S. 3517) to appropriate $1,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and live stock to be supplied to farmers in overflowed areas of the United States; to the Committee on Appropriations.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. McKINLEY submitted two amendments and Mr. KING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on yesterday the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] had inserted in the RECORD some editorials from certain papers expressing their views about the McCumber tariff bill. I desire to ask unanimous consent that certain editorials from the Republican press touching the tariff bill be inserted in the RECORD, notably from the New York Herald, the New York Globe, the New York Tribune, and the Philadelphia Public Ledger, along with other papers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The editorials referred to are as follows:

REPUBLICAN PRESS CONDEMNS M'CUMBER-FORDNEY TARIFF BILL.

The Republican and independent press are beginning to make known their views of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill, and they are far from flattering to Mr. FORDNEY or reassuring to Senator MCCUMBER. Here are some brief extracts:

[From the New York Herald, Republican.]

It rears a tariff wall sky-high all along the line of industry and agriculture. This in itself is bad enough, as it makes for higher living costs in every home in America. But its worst feature is that it completely shuts America out of foreign markets except with our raw materials, notably cotton and copper.

[From the New York Globe, Republican.]

No member of the agriculture bloc in the Senate can be foolish enough to suppose that high duties (on agricultural products) will increase the prices on foodstuffs in a country which, instead of importing, exports them in great volume. * * * When we pass the McCumber tariff, we practically make Europe a present of the $11,000,000,000 she owes us. * * * Whatever reason for high tariff may have existed when we were a debtor Nation before the war no longer exists when, as the creditor Nation of to-day, we have amassed most of the world's wealth.

[From the New York Tribune, Republican.]

It is something of a shock to learn that the rates of the bill are on the whole higher than those of the Payne-Aldrich law, and particularly that the wool duties are higher than those of the House bill, and higher than those against which the late Senator Dolliver made his memorable attack. If the bill is as described, believers in tariff sanity and reasonableness have need to gird themselves for another battle.

[From the Brooklyn Eagle, Independent.]

When Republicanism fails to satisfy its leading newspaper apologists in the East, it is heading straight for the rocks. The proposed tariff measure is bad in almost every respect. * * * The Republican control of Congress is now steering the party straight for disaster.

[From the Philadelphia Public Ledger, Republican.]

Fifteen months ago the farmer wanted a tariff. Now he is not so sure that he wants it. He is discovering that a tariff on hides means a probable increase in shoe prices. He is afraid he may be swapping dollar bills for thin dimes. As a heavy user of potash, he will fight the proposed rates on it; but can he fight well if he is also the supposed beneficiary of other high rates?

[From the Chicago News, Independent.]

Too many of the changes are in the direction of the old Aldrich tariff of painful memory, and too few of the rates have been revised downward. With American exports steadily declining and a favorable trade balance vanishing, excessive protection is absurd.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on yesterday I offered a resolution (S. Res. 284) and asked for its immediate consideration, but at the request of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] it was laid over until this morning. I now ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be laid before the Senate and that the Senate proceed to its consideration. I do not suppose that there can be any opposition to the resolution, as it merely calls on the Tariff Commission to transmit to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, such facts and findings as it may have in its possession from a study and investigation of the operation and results of the rates carried in the emergency tariff act approved May 27, 1921, and as extended by the act approved November 16, 1921.

In support of the resolution may I say, Mr. President, that the emergency tariff act has been in operation now very nearly a year. Very high rates were carried on certain articles in the act. Practically the same rates are proposed in the pending tariff measure. Some of the rates in the pending measure are higher, others the same, and others slightly lower. So the Senate, I am sure, would welcome any facts from the Tariff Commission touching the operation of the so-called emergency tariff act and the results which flowed from its operation.

I need not remind the Senate, because it is fresh in the minds of Senators, that the emergency tariff law was put upon us and the country in the hope that it would cure the agricultural ills. So the information might be important at this time and aid us very much in passing upon the rates which are now proposed in the pending bill. I can not see that there can be any objection to it, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 284, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HARRISON, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, such facts and findings as it may have in its possession from a study and investigation of the operations and results of the rates carried in the emergency tariff act approved May 27, 1921, and as extended by the act approved November 16, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I serve notice that I shall object to the Senate taking a recess this afternoon, in the hope that there will be a morning hour to-morrow morning, at which time I may ask for the immediate consideration of this resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from Mississippi desires to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Finance for its consideration, I shall have no objection to its being taken up to-day for that purpose. The resolution was introduced only late on yesterday afternoon, and I have only had my attention called to it a few moments ago. I think, from a very cursory view of the matter, that the committee will undoubtedly wish to ask for some further and more definite information in relation to it; that it will suggest an amendment to the resolution, and then report it back with such suggested amendment. If the Senator from Mississippi will consent that the resolution may go to the committee, the committee will act on it in a very short time.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course, if I thought the resolution would be reported out from the Committee on Finance within a reasonable time, I should have no objection to it being referred to that committee, but we are to begin immediately the consideration of each paragraph of the pending tariff bill. The whip and spur are being applied to this side of the Chamber. We on this side of the aisle expect to facilitate the passage of the bill in every way we can. We know, however, what has happened in relation to certain other measures which have gone to the Finance Committee. The tariff bill rested in that committee peacefully for a long time, the soldiers' bonus bill is still resting there peacefully, and I suppose that decent burial would be the fate of this resolution if it should go to that committee. The resolution is simple; it is direct; it calls for information that should be given to us immediately and not after the tariff bill shall have been passed. So I shall try to have the resolution taken up for consideration to-morrow morning, if I can.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, observing the desire on the other side of the Chamber, as indicated in the last two days, of facilitating the discussion and passage of the tariff bill, I am willing to cooperate with the Senator from Mississippi in that laudable purpose; but let me say to the Senator, so that he may be reassured and will consent that the resolution may go to the Committee on Finance, that the resolution will be reported within a very reasonable time. I hope the Senator will allow the resolution to follow the usual course, which is, after lying over one day, to permit it to be referred to the appropriate committee, with the assurance that the resolution will be reported to Senate within a very reasonable time.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, will the Senator from North Dakota agree that the paragraphs of the pending tariff bill covering provisions which are similar to those embraced in the emergency tariff law may not be taken up and considered until the Senate has acted upon the resolution in the form in which it is proposed to amend it?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I do not desire to agree to delay any matter now pending before the Senate. I will simply agree to secure at the earliest practicable moment the information which the Senator from Mississippi seeks to obtain by his resolution, together with some added information which it will be necessary to provide for by an amendment of the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from North Dakota agree that within five calendar days the Finance Committee shall report the resolution back to the Senate?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the resolution will be reported back in less time than that.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, the Senator will certainly agree that the resolution shall be reported to the Senate within five days?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not wish to make any definite agreement as to what the Committee on Finance will do. I will simply say that I will do everything I can to have the resolution reported back to the Senate before five days shall have elapsed. I do not see the necessity of taking five days for its consideration; but I can not bind the committee in its action. I think the committee will want to make some amendments to the resolution and will want to consult with the Tariff Commission in order to ascertain whether or not they have certain information which we would like to secure. I think, however, that we can report the resolution back within three days.

Mr. HARRISON. With that assurance, Mr. President, I shall have no objection to the resolution being referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. Then, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on yesterday afternoon I called attention to Senate Resolution 270, which is lying upon the table. The resolution provides for an investigation by the Committee on the Judiciary into certain matters under the Bureau of Internal Revenue. I am inclined to think, however, that it would be more appropriate for the Committee on Finance to conduct the investigation, and I now ask that the resolution may be taken from the table and referred to that committee.

In view of the assurance of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the chairman of the Committee on Finance, of prompt action upon the resolution which has been submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I bespeak for the resolution which I now ask be referred to his committee the same prompt consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator inform me what is the nature of his resolution?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary read the latter part of the resolution, without reading the whereases.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to investigate the aforesaid matters, and to report to the Senate whether or not it be advisable to make a public record of tax exemption and tax-refund claims which have been decided or which are pending before the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and whether or not it be advisable to establish a court or public tribunal for the handling and allowance of claims for tax exemptions and refunds filed with the Bureau of Internal Revenue; and to recommend effective measures to relieve the Bureau of Internal Revenue from the influence of partisan politics. The committee is authorized to administer oaths, to send for persons and papers, and to employ such clerical and professional assistance as may be necessary, payment therefor to be made out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon the order of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KING. The resolution contains a preamble which recites, in my opinion, the necessity for the investigation proposed by the resolution. Mr. President, I wish to modify the resolution by striking out the words "the Judiciary" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Finance," so as to provide that the investigation may be made by "the Committee on Finance." With that modification, I ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to say that of course the resolution of the Senator from Utah covers a very broad field, in which there is much controversy, and the Senator fully understands the amount of work which is imposed upon the Finance Committee at the present time. All that I can say for the Committee on Finance is that it will act upon the Senator's resolution just as soon as it possibly can, considering the very many other matters that are at this time pressing upon its attention.

Mr. KING. I appreciate the situation of the committee and the tremendous amount of work resting upon the chairman of the committee, as well as upon the other members; but the resolution is very important and relates to an administrative matter which needs attention. Charges are made as to partisanship and that a very demoralized condition exists in the Internal Revenue Bureau; charges are also made that men are being withdrawn from the work of collecting taxes to the consideration of applications for refunds. They seem to be interested in returning money to those who claim to have overpaid, and not sufficiently interested in collecting Federal taxes. The matter is, I think, important, as the Senator suggests, and I hope it may receive as early consideration as possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution as modified will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

PENSIONS AND ADJUSTED COMPENSATION.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, while we are considering the bill to raise revenue I deem it not inappropriate to refer to calendar No. 509, being the bill (H. R. 4) granting relief to soldiers and sailors of the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign; to widows, former widows, and dependent parents of such soldiers and sailors; and to certain Army nurses.

I confess, Mr. President, that I am at a loss to understand how Members of Congress can continue to pile up expenditures upon the taxpayers of this country. When I contemplate the recklessness with which we seem to turn the Treasury over to all of those who try to bring themselves under pension legislation my mind is appalled at the extravagance with which the funds of the Treasury of the United States are dispensed. It seems to me that the time has come when we, the representatives of the people, should look at this subject in a sane way.

I can understand why it was that following the Civil War certain sections were very liberal so far as the Treasury was concerned and turned it over at the request of claimants, almost without considering what they were giving, when other sections of the country received none of the bounty; but, Mr. President, at this far distant period from the Civil War it seems to me, inasmuch as we are all one people and all pay taxes, that we should all look to the protection of the Treasury in the same manner.

I am not surprised that the soldiers who fought in the great World War are now knocking at the doors of Congress demanding a bonus, when they look back at the history of Congress in connection with legislation for the benefit of soldiers of previous wars. I have never been an alarmist; in fact, I am an optimist; but I must say that if we consider the acts which Congress has passed it is enough to shake the nerves of any man.

I know it is unpopular to talk about business or to say anything kind toward business, because that is out of fashion, and one indulging in a discussion of that kind might be considered to be out of tune with the times; but, Mr. President, unless somebody is left to work, unless some one is encouraged to create industries, there will shortly be nobody left to pay taxes or to give employment to people.

I myself know men in the section of the country where I live, even with the limited means which we have, who are anxious to get out of business, and will do so at the earliest possible opportunity. No one can blame the man who has a dollar for putting it into tax-exempt securities and relieving himself from the burdens of taxation. Of course it is wrong, and he ought not to be encouraged so to invest his money, but we are doing everything in our power to drive people out of business.

Mr. President, the first year I entered the Senate, as I recall, a bill was introduced to increase the pensions of Federal soldiers to the amount of $65,000,000 a year, notwithstanding the fact that we had just emerged from the greatest war the world had ever known, involving the greatest destruction ever recorded in history and resulting in the increase of the debt of the United States Government from about one billion dollars to some twenty-five billion dollars. It seemed to me, amateur as I was, that we, the representatives of the people, should have looked at the matter in a more businesslike and in a saner way; that we should have given greater consideration to the disorganized conditions in which the business of the United States found itself before taking action the chief result of which would be the piling up of taxes.

I do not personally manage much business, but it would be enough to engage the most serious thought of any sane individual in the world if his indebtedness should increase twenty or twenty-five times within 12 months or 2 or 3 years. He certainly would be facing the bankruptcy court, or the sheriff would be pretty close behind him, or he would be making preparations to retire from business if he did not economize. If he intended to meet his honest obligations, if he were a sane man, he would try to curtail expenditures and to see how he could meet his obligations, spend less, work harder, and economize more. That is the principle that I should like to see Congress follow. I believe in success and economy in private life, and I also believe in it in public life. I am not scolding my colleagues; but I can not understand how it is, when men are elected to Congress, that they so far forget the people back home—the taxpayers of this country.

Why, Mr. President, in every paper that we pick up we see column after column, page after page, of people's property advertised for the nonpayment of taxes; but here let a man claim that he was in the Army, that his name is in a roll, and it matters not whether he was within a thousand miles of a battle; it matters not what means he has; it matters not how long he served; we break our necks to give him a pension. We try to run all over one another, and I believe that one party is no better than the other along that line. I am out of tune with either party on the subject. And now, to cap the climax, we propose in this bill to give pensions to the widows and the after-widows, and the dependents of the soldiers of the so-called Boxer uprising.

Mr. President, I am not a soldier, but my recollection is that there was not much fighting in the Boxer uprising, and what excuse can Congress have for giving these designated people a pension? The bill refers to the Boxer uprising, and the war with Spain, and the Philippine insurrection. There were a few shots fired in the war with Spain—a matter of a little picnic.

What are soldiers for if they are not to fight? Why do they join the Army if they are not going to do their duty and protect the United States? Where is the magic, or where is the fear, or where is the reward, except for votes for Members of Congress, which leads them to tax the people for any such cause as this?

I have not looked up the Boxer uprising recently, but I do not think anybody got killed over there on our side. Certainly it was not much of an affair; but when the men who come under this designation get to be 62 years old Congress goes and dumps a pension on them and their dependents, the report says, irrespective of the means of the dependents, because they are needy. Mr. President, how many people in this country are not needy? If these Members would go home and mix with the people, they would certainly hear cries of poverty all over this country. Agriculture has been depressed. Merchandise and everything else has gone down tremendously. Take the principal product in my country. It went down 75 per cent in 12 months, a decline unheard of in history.

Now, let us go back and look at some of these figures. They are startling figures to me. We will go back to the Civil War. I am not fighting the Civil War over, and yet I will say that I have no apologies to make for our part in it. I always did believe we were right, and I continue to believe so. However, it has been a long time since the Civil War. The report of the commissioner here shows that in 1879 there were 242,755 pensioners, receiving a sum of $33,664,428.92. That number increased in 1902, when it reached the peak of 999,446 pensioners, and that year they received an amount of $137,504,267.99; and away on down in 1921 there were still on the roll 566,053 pensioners, receiving $258,715,842.54—a larger amount in money than had ever been paid out in any one year since the Civil War. If the number of pensioners is to decrease and if the amount of pensions is to be increased, how do we ever expect to get relief from taxation?

I desire to insert in the RECORD the figures of expenditures appearing on page 26 of the commissioner's report, referring to the War with Spain and the other wars, showing that at the present time we are paying out in pensions more money than we have ever paid since those wars.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Comparative table of the value of an average pension of the different wars for the last five fiscal years.

	1921	1920	1919	1918	1917
Civil War	$477.74	$358.77	$373.39	$287.95	$247.71
War with Spain	164.34	142.01	137.28	138.30	133.81
War of 1812	356.63	232.73	218.57	213.31	171.58
War with Mexico	373.37	240.29	256.48	263.60	221.24
Indian wars	203.71	203.49	285.84	221.78	179.44
Regular Establishment	183.49	180.55	192.62	190.30	180.69
World War	238.62	227.63	233.53	223.07	.....
Average for all wars	443.13	339.72	355.78	278.00	242.00

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said the other day that perhaps this last war would cost the people of the United States something like $75,000,000,000, perhaps a hundred billion dollars. It is well that we can not realize what those figures mean; otherwise I can not see how anyone would muster up courage enough to go along and try to produce and put himself in the position of a taxpayer. The contrast is great with the people in the country, the people at home, the people who work, the people who amount to something. If the Senate will excuse me for a personal reference, I will tell them about a little visit I had the other day in South Carolina, which was so marked with the different spirit that our people show compared to the spirit that we show here. In fact, the whole atmosphere of Washington is to grab something from the Government, to get something for nothing, to get yourself on the pay roll; and we seem to forget our obligations, and try to place everyone on the pay roll who can muster up any kind of an excuse for getting there.

As I was saying, I was in South Carolina the other day. One member of the legislature from my county is a blind man, the only blind member of that body. He has served my county well for the last two years. He announced the other day that he was a candidate again, and I was struck by his announcement. He said he wanted the people to vote for him on his merits and because he had served them to the best of his ability, and he said further in that announcement that he did not want a single vote through sympathy. That is the kind of people we need in this country. That is the kind of spirit that has made this country great.

I went on from the capital of the State to my home town. The next day a poor fellow came into my office. I have known him a long time. He is a hard-working, honest man. He hobbled in, not on one crutch but on two crutches, and yet he performs his daily duties, attends to his business, runs a little farm, and makes a living. He is a man of very limited means. He spoke to me about this legislation in Washington. His eye was clear, Mr. President, and he looked at me and said he thanked God every day of his life that he had never accepted charity from the people, notwithstanding his crippled condition.

We need more of that spirit in this country. After a while we will have practically a dependent population, people who have no more manhood than a sparrow, going around whining, asking for some public pap. We will destroy all of the initiative, we will destroy all of the ambition, we will destroy all of the incentive of the American people that has made this country great since we founded it; and it does seem to me that Senators, people who are big enough to be elected to the United States Senate, ought to stop and remember that there is somebody else in this country besides these people who are forever knocking at the door of the Treasury.

I do not believe it is so much those people who want this legislation as it is some Members of Congress who act in fear, and want to dole money out of the Public Treasury. I do not believe that 5 per cent of the honest people of the United States would approve of this kind of legislation, even in the States where they get a large proportion of it. I do not know how we are going to stop it. I confess that I am alarmed, Mr. President. I have thought that perhaps it would be necessary to amend the Constitution. I have not studied the matter from a legal standpoint, but I do not know now whether we are permitted under the Constitution to make many appropriations and donations that we do make. If we are not, the time has come when some man should rise up in the United States and go to court and get an injunction against it; but if we are allowed to donate to everything that comes along, and if we are not going to have the backbone and the manhood to say "No," then I do believe that the people of this country will rise up and pass a constitutional amendment whereby we will be prohibited from contributing the money of the public in this way, and I would say, "God speed the day."

I have never questioned the stability of the Government of the United States; that thought had never entered my mind until the last few years. When I see the laxity with which we administer our trust, I confess that I am getting a little nervous, and I feel that unless we stop, great disaster will disturb the prosperity of the country.

I have in my hand a most admirable address, delivered by Mr. William D. Melton, a prominent member of the Columbia bar, president of the South Carolina Bar Association, who has recently been elected president of the South Carolina College. I desire to insert as a part of my remarks a few statements from this address of Mr. Melton, found on pages 25 and 26 of this pamphlet. It goes into detail about the different governments of the world, how long they existed, and the reasons for their downfall, and he sounds a warning to the people of the United States. This may be unnecessary, Mr. President, but when I see the lavish expenditures being made by Congress, I feel that those words are timely. I ask that this be printed as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A few years ago Lord Bryce wrote that "the future of the United States during the next half century sometimes presents itself as a struggle between two forces, the one beneficial, the other malign; the one striving to speed the Nation to a port of safety before the time of trial arrives, the other to retard its progress, so that the tempest may be upon it before the port is reached." The writer of a recent magazine writing of the present times says "it is the kind of situation in which former civilizations have gone down." Lord Macauley predicted that the civilization of the United States would be destroyed by lawlessness engendered within her own institutions. Indeed, "the shadows hang heavy on the hills." How long will our country endure? It is for all of us "to take up arms against a sea of troubles and by opposing end them." Even then how long will our civilization last? Other civilizations, ancient and modern, have gone down. How long is left for us? The Chaldean Empire collapsed before Cyrus the Great, who established the Persian Empire. It had not lasted a century. The Persian Empire went down before Alexander the Great, who sighed for more worlds to conquer. It had lasted but two centuries. The empire of Alexander was barely established before his untimely death, whereupon it was divided among his generals. The Roman Empire held her sway for more than five centuries, and then joined the procession of the ages and fell and disintegrated. The empire founded by that interesting and picturesque figure of world history, Peter the Great, lasted less than two and a half centuries. The German Empire, apparently so strong and firm, lasted less than half a century, because it was founded and owed its existence to militarism and the principle that might makes right. The Emperors of Russia, Germany, Austria, and China are dead or in exile. Bourbons, Bonapartes, Romanoffs, Hapsburgs, and Hohenzollerns, former kings, potentates, and princes, bereft of their thrones, principalities, and powers, are wanderers on the face of the earth. Life in all its tragic incompleteness from the thatched roof of the peasant to the palace of the prince has been changed by the mighty cataclysm of war and social revolution, never again to recur to the conditions of former times. The curtain has fallen on a civilization from which it will nevermore be lifted. How long will the great Republic of the United States endure? Who knows? I can only say:

"And the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock."

Mr. DIAL. I also desire to sound a warning against civil pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 22) directing the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House to purchase a floral wreath to be placed on the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant at the unveiling ceremonies April 27, 1922.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon we were discussing the first item in the bill. Considerable attention was given to it, because it was stated by the chairman of the Finance Committee that the principle upon which the duty was placed on that article permeated the whole bill, that this item is typical; and I think it will be profitable for us to discuss the general subject, using this item merely as an illustration of what the bill means.

On yesterday I called attention to the fact that acetic acid had been taken off the free list and put upon the dutiable list. I thought it advisable that the Senators and the country should know why that thing was done. I therefore asked the chairman of the Finance Committee why it was done. It seemed to me that the taking of an article off the free list, putting it upon the dutiable list, and putting a tax upon it which would tend at least to increase its price to the consumers of the country ought to have some word of explanation. The distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] undertook to give that explanation, and I read now what he said:

The reason I can give for placing this particular item upon the dutiable list is the reason that permeates this bill throughout.

I desire to call particular attention to that language, that the reason is the same as that which permeates the bill throughout. He continued:

It is to equalize the difference between what is supposed to be, as nearly as we can arrive at it, the cost of production abroad, including the cost of shipment into this country, and the cost of manufacturing in this country.

That statement was evidently designed to reconcile the country to the terms of this bill. If that is the basis upon which the bill is founded I am sure there will be great support for it throughout the country. Much can be said in favor of regulating prices in this country by putting a tariff upon the articles which will bring about an equalization of the cost of production abroad, including transportation, and the cost of production at home.

After the distinguished Senator made that statement I asked him upon what evidence the committee had removed this item from the free list and put it upon the dutiable list. I asked him what the difference was between the cost of production at home and the cost in the foreign markets. The result of the colloquy was the discovery that there was not a scintilla of evidence in this record from beginning to end as to the cost of production either in this country or abroad.

After that had developed the statement was made by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota that they had considered the prices which prevail in this country and the prices which prevail abroad, and that those were the bases of their conclusion. I desire to get his statement as to that in the RECORD at this point. He said:

> The Senator asked me a question a while ago. I can not always turn immediately at a second's notice to give him the figures upon every one of these chemical items, but if he will turn to the report of the monthly summary of our importations and exportations he will find the cost of acetic acid, at least the latest that we have; that is, the foreign cost here. He will find that for the same kind of acetic acid, which comes in in all characters of strength—but that which is imported, of course, comes in practically 100 per cent pure in condensed form—there is about 2 cents difference between the price at which it is imported and the American manufacturers' price. The latest price given is about 8 cents for the 100 per cent pure, as against 9½ cents for the American article of 80 per cent pure. So I do not think we are very far off in the 2 cents difference.

Let us examine the testimony which we have upon that subject. Acetic acid has never been imported into this country except from Canada. The kind which the Senator says comes in is the pure acetic acid, and he says that the price is 8 cents per pound, as against the corresponding price of 9½ cents in this country, and that therefore a tariff of 2 cents a pound is about right.

I want to call attention not only to the immediate price, about which I shall have some comments to make, but about the great trend of prices during a series of years, and Senators will be very much interested in knowing that the price in Canada during all this time has been very much higher than the price in the United States.

The Tariff Commission has collected these prices, and they appear in the Tariff Commission's Survey A–2, on pages 30 and 31. We find that in this comparison of Canadian prices and the United States prices the figures include only the years 1918, 1919, and 1920, and the other prices are given in a later publication of the Tariff Commission for nine months of 1921.

These prices are given by months for each one of these years. In February, 1918, the 80 per cent acetic acid compound was selling in Canada at 29 cents, and in the United States at 19 cents.

The commercial crude, or 28 per cent pure, was selling in Canada at from 7.85 cents to 8.50 cents, and in this country at from 5.50 cents to 6.50 cents.

I will not read the statistics for all the months. In 1919 the 80 per cent pure was selling in Canada at 21.50 cents, and in the United States at 10 cents.

In 1920 the Canadian price was 18.50 cents, and the American price was 12.65 cents. During the year 1920 the Canadian price was always above the American price.

The Senator's statement was justified by one little item which appears in this abstract of the summary of the tariff information. Here the quantity imported is given, as well as the prices on the actual importations.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. There must be some mistake in the quotations the Senator is reading, or he does not read them as they are intended to be read. I can not imagine that vinegar of a certain strength will sell for 21 cents, made in Canada, and that the same vinegar sell for 10 cents if it is made in the United States. Surely, in presenting his figures, the Senator must be describing vinegar—which is acetic acid—of different strengths.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Not at all. They are put in parallel columns by the Tariff Commission, and before I get through I shall undertake to explain the cause of this difference.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me explain one error the Senator has made. I stated yesterday that we found about 2 cents difference between the foreign price and the American price. If the Senator would take the report of the Tariff Commission, from which he has read, he would find that for the first nine months of 1921 the invoice price of the importations of 100 per cent pure, or practically 99 per cent pure, was 8 cents. If he will take the last statistics upon this subject, he will find that on March 27 glacial acetic acid, which is 99 per cent pure, the same as that which comes in, was selling for 10 cents. So, according to the latest figures we have, the exact difference is 2 cents, and the range of difference in the tariff bill is from three-quarters of a cent up to 2 cents, which is the greatest amount. It is three-quarters of a cent on the lower grade, and runs as high as 2 cents difference on the 99 per cent pure, which practically represents the difference between the invoice price on the other side and the invoice price of the same article in the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have all of that information, and I expected to present it precisely as broadly as the Senator from North Dakota has done.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I be permitted to proceed just a little further? I would be glad to do so, if the Senator from Utah will permit me.

Mr. SMOOT. I was simply going to state that, as quoted by the Senator, the prices of acetic acid in Canada and in the United States during the year 1918 are correct. If the Senator wants to know why it was, I can tell him in a very few words.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am not now asking for information. I think I know why myself without being told.

Mr. SMOOT. The tariff has nothing whatever to do with the reason. While the Canadians were asking 29 to 33 cents in Canada for 80 per cent acetic acid in February, 1918, they were selling that same identical product in the United States at the same time for about 17 cents. They were dumping it into this country, and that is the reason why there was that difference. I want simply to say that the figures quoted by the Senator are absolutely correct, so far as the price of acetic acid is concerned in the United States and in Canada, but the reason for it I have already stated.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I shall discuss the reason for it.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. In addition to that, if the Senator will permit me, acetic acid coming into this country from Canada comes free. Acetic acid from this or from any country into Canada bears a tariff of 25 per cent on the low grades and 35 per cent on the high grades.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand that.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. So while Canada can make it and get into this country, we could not make it and get it into Canada, and therefore they are dumping it into this country. That is the reason for the disparity in prices of this particular product between the two countries.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I quite agree that that is true, and I hope to show before I conclude the effect which the tariff will have upon prices of this commodity in the United States if imposed under this bill.

But to proceed, what do we find? In the first place, I believe I will make some statement as to the production in the United States. The production of acetic acid in 1914 was 75,000,000 pounds—I am using the round numbers—and in 1919 it was 47,000,000. By the way, the price of the 47,000,000 pounds in 1919 was about twice the price of the 75,000,000 pounds in 1914. The glacial acetic acid, which is pure acetic acid, manufactured in this country was 5,000,000 pounds.

Now, let us look at the importations and the prices. We find that in 1918 there were imported, and imported from Canada, of course, 297,000 pounds at a price of 28 cents; in 1919 there were 1,850,000 pounds at a price of 12 cents; and in 1920 there were 2,862,000 pounds at a price of 13 cents per pound.

In 1921, for the first nine months of that year, there were imported 28,042 pounds of the value of $2,315, making a price of 8 cents. It is that which the chairman of the Finance Committee tells us has justified the placing of a tariff of 2 cents a pound upon acetic acid, in order to keep out 28,000 pounds of imported acetic acid, as compared with the ordinary production in this country of 75,000,000 pounds. For that purpose he would impose a tax of 2 cents a pound on the entire product.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I gladly yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Has the Senator given the reason for the sudden drop from an importation of 2,862,000 pounds in 1920 to only 28,000 pounds in the first nine months of 1921?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have not given the reason.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator understand the reason?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator wishes to give the reason, I shall be glad to have it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wanted to know whether the Senator understood the reason for that drop?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator wishes to present the reason for it, I shall be glad to listen to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will simply state that the effect of the emergency tariff law or the dye industry act, which is practically an embargo except through license on synthetic vinegars or acetic acid, has been such as to suddenly shut off all this amount. That is the only reason why it has dropped so suddenly. The Senator will observe that it was increasing from about 500,000 pounds in 1918 to nearly 3,000,000 pounds in 1920, and then it dropped down suddenly to 28,000 pounds, which, as I have explained, was due to the emergency tariff act. Of course, that law may be changed entirely by the pending bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will the Senator also point out the provision in the emergency tariff law which caused that to occur?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is section 501(a) of the emergency tariff law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will the Senator read it? I have not that paragraph before me.

Mr. McCUMBER. It reads as follows:

SEC. 501. (a) That on and after the day following the enactment of this act, for the period of three months, no sodium nitrite, no dyes or dyestuffs, including crudes and intermediates, no product or products derived directly or indirectly from coal tar (including crudes, intermediates, finished or partly finished products, and mixtures and compounds of such coal-tar products), and no synthetic organic drugs or synthetic organic chemicals, shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its possessions unless the Secretary determines that such article or a satisfactory substitute therefor is not obtainable in the United States or in any of its possessions in sufficient quantities and on reasonable terms as to quality, price, and delivery, and that such article in the quantity to be admitted is required for consumption by an actual consumer in the United States or in any of its possessions within six months after receipt of the merchandise.

That is the portion of the emergency tariff act which has twice been extended without any modification, and as vinegar is made through a synthetic process from carbide it has practically been eliminated except, I presume, certain kinds which have been allowed to come in.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have asked the Senator to give us that information at some length for the purpose of putting emphasis on the situation as it exists. I was going to call attention to it.

Vinegar is made from calcium carbide. I was going to refer to that, and why? Because the Finance Committee in fixing the rate in this schedule use the price of an importation of only 28,000 pounds which came in as a freak. Is not that a woeful spectacle? They do not ascertain the cost of producing the commodity in this country or abroad. They are driven from that position. Then they say that they fix this duty because of the difference in price, and what prices did they take? They took the price of a mere freak transaction which was prohibited by the embargo laws of the country. Under the law which the Senator from North Dakota has read it was an unlawful importation. It must have come in and been sold on the market under very peculiar circumstances. Yet when the Finance Committee undertook to use prices as the basis for putting a tariff upon this great commodity they used the price which is a freak, as I have said, based upon an importation which came in contrary to the embargo laws of the country. What a woeful spectacle we have!

Now, Mr. President, in order to show that this was a freak importation I want to give a few other prices.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the Senator passes from that I want to inquire if it is a fact that the same procedure was pursued in fixing the rates generally in the bill, namely, to put a tariff on which would bring the foreign price up to the price being asked in the American market without any reference whatever to what it cost to produce it in America?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It was absolutely demonstrated on yesterday that as to this entire schedule they had not attempted to obtain information as to the cost of the articles, either here or abroad.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Do I understand that that position was admitted by the chairman of the Finance Committee?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The chairman of the Finance Committee yesterday stated that it was based upon the difference between the cost of production here and abroad, but when he was asked for the evidence upon which the committee acted there was a failure to produce any.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquired about it because there is a widespread feeling in the country that there has been an enormous amount of profiteering, and that prevailing prices include not only the cost of production but an unconscionable profit. If the pending bill means that a tariff is to be imposed upon the importation of a foreign article so that the article will bear the same price in this market as the prevailing domestic price, it would be well to be informed about it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, let us see what the actual condition of the market is. I obtained this morning the prices of this commodity as of April, 1922, the present month. I find this to be the situation: For the 28 per cent of acetic acid the Canadian price is 4 cents per pound; the New York price is 2.37 cents per pound. The 80 per cent acetic acid in Canada has a price of 12 cents per pound; the price in New York of the same article, the commercial grade, is 6.8 cents per pound; but the pure grade of that percentage is 8 cents per pound, as against 12 cents per pound in Canada.

The glacial acetic acid, the pure acid, with which we must compete, as the Senator from North Dakota has said, has a price in Canada, f. o. b. Shawinigan Falls, the place where it is manufactured, of 20 cents a pound in barrels and 20½ cents in carboys, and the price in the New York market is 8½ cents a pound.

So, Mr. President, we have this wonderful performance: The majority of the great Finance Committee of the Senate undertakes to convince us that the price of this commodity where it is manufactured and whence it is exported is lower than it is in the United States, and therefore, in order to meet the difference in price, the Committee on Finance proposes to put a duty upon it of about 25 per cent, when the fact is that the price in the country whence this product comes is nearly double—in fact, it is more than double—the price in the United States.

We were told yesterday, with all assurance, and we are again told this morning, that the committee fixed the duty because of that freak importation of 28,000 pounds after the embargo law had been passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is the Senator from New Mexico certain that one penny's worth of the vinegar was imported after that law went into effect? As a matter of fact, is not the Senator mistaken in that statement? I think he will find that all of the commodity which was imported in the first nine months was imported before the emergency law went into effect.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does the Senator from North Dakota mean to say that the price of that 28,000 pounds, at the time it was imported, was the common, usual price of the imported article?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not speaking of that; I do not know just what the price of that article was when it was imported. I assume that the import figures show the price at which it was purchased. I assume that the invoice was honest.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is quite true.

Mr. McCUMBER. But this is the point to which I wanted to direct the Senator's attention. He has several times spoken of the importations after the law went into effect as "freak importations." The emergency law went into effect on the 27th day of May, 1921. The figures which are given are for the first nine months of 1921. I think the Senator will find, instead of their being "freak importations," that every one of them was an importation which came into the country prior to the 27th day of May, 1921; and although the figures cover nine months, I think the Senator will find that no importations took place after the law went into effect.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, let us look at this matter in a really calm and dispassionate way.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly, and let us know the facts as they are, without wrong impressions being created by fallacious arguments.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is right. I want the truth, and I hope the Senator will listen to me for just one moment.

The Senator from North Dakota himself called attention to the fact that the importations in 1920 were 2,862,068 pounds. It was the Senator's own conclusion that those importations fell off to 28,000 pounds by reason of the embargo law. If it was not by reason of the embargo law, then I will ask the Senator to state why, during the five months of 1921, when there was no embargo law, the importations fell from 2,862,068 pounds per year to 28,000 pounds, or 1 per cent in five months of the importations for the previous year? The Senator must find some other reason. If the embargo was not the reason, it doubtless was that the price in this country was so low that the Canadian producer could not afford to export it, because the price fell from 13 cents in 1920 to 8 cents in the nine months of 1921. So whichever horn of the dilemma the Senator wishes to take I will ask him if the Finance Committee was justified in accepting the price of what I still denominate a "freak importation" for the purpose of imposing a tariff upon the 75,000,000 pounds normally produced in this country?

Mr. President, I should like to call attention to the state of this industry, and I shall do so somewhat in detail, because the principle upon which the committee acted regarding this item, using the language of the Senator from North Dakota, permeates this whole bill. It is necessary for us to understand something about the production of this commodity. Acetic acid in the United States is a wood product, which is obtained by heating hardwood. The three products of that process are alcohol, acetate of lime, and charcoal. Alcohol is the most valuable of those products. Wood alcohol has more uses and there is a much more diversified demand for it than for acetic acid. Acetic acid itself, however, is a very valuable chemical in a number of industries.

Now, what happened? What was the situation? Before the war, of the entire production of acetate of lime 40 per cent was exported. Thus it is apparent that we competed with the world. Alcohol is also produced not only in competition with Canada but in competition with the world.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows, of course, that at that time there was no synthetic process known.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am coming to that a little later. The Senator is right about it; but the situation is as I have described. Some Canadians—and, by the way, about 40 per cent of the capital stock of the Canadian company is owned in the United States—discovered a synthetic process of making acetic acid from calcium carbide; but there is no evidence here as to how much it cost to produce the acetic acid by that process, and there is no evidence of how much it cost to produce the glacial acetic acid in this country. So, when Senators undertake to say that there has been developed a patented process for manufacturing synthetic acid and that that process is very much cheaper than production by wood distillation in this country, I say there is not a particle of evidence on which to found the statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, common sense tells anybody who knows anything about the production of acetic acid that the synthetic process is cheaper than the process of extracting it from wood. Not only that, but the dust of calcium carbide is used in the synthetic process of making acetic acid, and by that method 100 per cent acetic acid can be made. I know the Senator will agree with me that it can be made cheaper in that way than by extracting it from wood and employing three processes to get it into similar condition.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The statement of facts made by the Senator is true. As to his conclusion, however, I am not convinced and I will state why.

Mr. SMOOT. The synthetic process would not be employed if it were not cheaper.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In the first place, there is no evidence as to the cost of the calcium carbide. The Senator has stated that the product is made from the dust of calcium carbide, and I think he is right about that, but there is no evidence as to the quantity of that dust which is available, nor is there the slightest evidence as to the cost of production in this country.

As I stated a while ago, the products of the distillation of hardwood are alcohol, acetate of lime, and charcoal. I should like anybody to tell me how it can be said that the acetate of lime costs one amount, the alcohol costs another, and the charcoal another. They are relative terms; and if the price of acetate of lime goes down there is no reason in the world why the producer can not raise the price of his alcohol, and make his entire product profitable, and that is done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course I do not care about getting into a discussion; but the man who makes wood alcohol has to compete with the manufacturer of alcohol by some other process, and I will say to the Senator that there are ways in which alcohol can be made even cheaper than by its extraction from wood. I mean to say that pure alcohol can be made in many ways cheaper than wood alcohol can be made from wood, but, of course, the pure alcohol would have to be denatured or else pay the Government tax. Wood alcohol does not pay the Government tax; and the Senator knows that we thought a few years ago that we were going to run all the automobiles and all the engines in this country by alcohol made from the waste fruits of the country, but we found that it was not really a success.

As to the price of wood alcohol, it can not be raised any higher than the price at which it can be imported into this country. They have better wood facilities and a greater quantity of wood in Canada than we have in this country, so the price can not be raised above the market price. I will say to the Senator also that each process in the extraction of alcohol from wood is a process by itself, and the cost of producing each of the three products named by the Senator can be ascertained just the same as the cost of manufacturing any other article produced in the United States. That has always been the case, and the price at which each article is sold depends entirely upon the cost of the item.

I will state to the Senator that in some cases, where the market will justify it, the principle that he cited could be taken advantage of; but when business is normal and when there is a steady demand for all of the three articles, then it could not be put into operation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, that raises the old question about which the Senator from Utah must be an expert. I should like to have anybody tell me what the cost of raising wool is and what the cost of raising the meat of the sheep is. You have the two products coming along together, and no man living can tell what the cost of one is or what the cost of the other is. You can tell the cost of the combined product, but you can not tell the cost of either one in particular; and the price of each one is fixed in accordance with the law of supply and demand.

The Senator says that acetic acid can be produced so much cheaper under this process. I will ask him why it is that the price to-day at the works in Canada is 20 cents a pound and the price in New York is 8½ cents a pound?

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I told the Senator that, but I will tell him again. This is a patented process, and acetic acid is made by this process. The Canadian manufacturers are making the Canadian people pay every dollar that they can. The Canadian manufacturers have a duty of 25 per cent upon every pound of acetic acid that comes into Canada from any other country. Therefore they have that protected market, and they take advantage of it in every way possible; but when they come into the American market, in the past they have come in free, and in order to sell the product in this country they are going to sell it at a lower price than they do at home. The very figures that the Senator submitted to the Senate prove beyond a question of a doubt that that is what they have done in the past, and that is what they are going to do in the future; and the only reason why we ask for protection on acetic acid is from the very fact that we do not propose that Canada shall impose a duty upon acetic acid and then have this market as a dumping ground. That is what she has had, and that is what she would have with free acetic acid. If we do not have this duty, the Canadian plants will run continuously. Canada will control this market. She can sell her product under what it actually costs her to make it, even with the new process, and then make it up on the price she charges for the balance of the product to other parties. Those are the absolute facts of the case, and that is the condition, and that is the only reason why there ought to be a duty upon this item.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Utah for stating so clearly the next point which I wish to discuss. I know that the statement, coming from the distinguished Senator from Utah, will be accepted as the actual situation, and the inferences which he draws about the tariff in Canada and about the dumping of the commodity in this country will be accepted. So, then, we have this problem to deal with: It is not a question of the actual cost of the commodity in Canada as compared with the cost in this country; it is not a question of prices in Canada as compared with prices in this country; but it is a question of the Canadian producer dumping his product on the American market, and I think the Senator is right.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the question; and not only that, but that is why I prepared as best I could an antidumping provision in this bill, which I designated the other day as one with teeth in it; and I think myself that if this antidumping provision becomes a law and is enforced it will stop a great many of the evils that have existed in the past, not only with acetic acid coming from Canada but with other articles coming from foreign countries as well.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, there was a very advising witness who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, a Mr. Stilling, of the Wood Products Co., of Buffalo, N. Y. I will state that the Wood Products Co. produces alcohol, acetate of lime, and charcoal, just the same as all other producers of these wood distillates; and here is what he had to say and the reason he gave for wanting a tariff upon these items. He was talking particularly of alcohol at the time:

> Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I represent the Wood Products Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., the largest refiners of wood alcohol in the United States. We are not particularly interested in protection in the common acceptation of this word, because we believe this country is big enough in natural resources and has the technical skill and ability to enable us to compete with any other country having the same labor costs. We are, however, very much interested in any set of laws which will permit Canada, for instance, to maintain high prices in her domestic market and sell her surplus of wood chemicals in this country at prices below those charged at home. I feel that no argument is needed on this point to convince you of the unfairness of such a condition.

Then, after further testimony, he makes this statement:

While it was shipped in September—

He spoke of a shipment of 250,000 gallons of alcohol into New York in the latter part of 1920; and, by the way, I may state that the whole amount shipped in was purchased by Mr. Stilling's company for the purpose of preventing it from being put upon the general market in competition with American-produced alcohol. He was big enough to buy the whole importation of a quarter of a million gallons in order to protect the industry in this country, which demonstrates that the American market is controlled by a few people, and in my judgment this one concern fixes the price in the American market. So sure were they of being able to fix the price that when an importation of a quarter of a million gallons came into the country, this one concern bought it all in order to control the American market.

Mr. Stilling says, speaking of this alcohol:

While it was shipped in September, it did not arrive in Buffalo until the 1st of October. While we have taken this quarter of a million gallons, at the present time they are only running about 40 per cent capacity, and consequently the domestic consumption is able to take care of the output, but when they start up and begin running 100 per cent capacity they will have a surplus of from sixty-five to eighty thousand gallons a month which undoubtedly would have to come over to this side.

That is the alcohol; but even that amount which could come if they were running at capacity would be a small item compared with the American production.

Mr. Green says:

Now, if we propose a countervailing duty—that is, made a general provision similar to what we did with reference to wheat at one time that in case any other country imposes a duty on alcohol exported to that country that same duty should be applied to alcohol imported into this country—would that help any, or would they just take off their duty?

Now comes what they want:

Mr. STILLING. Well, that, of course, is impossible to state. They probably would reduce it because it is higher than they need for their protection, but we are asking just exactly the same duty coming this way that they have on shipments going the other way.

What does that mean? It means, Mr. President, that this tariff which Canada has imposed upon these products enables the Canadian producer to manufacture his product and receive at home such a price as he sees fit to put upon it, and, if he has any surplus, to dump it upon some other country at any price he can get; and that is precisely what these people want when they are asking for this tariff on acetic acid and many others of the items mentioned in this bill.

While they can compete with the world in production, while they do export 40 per cent of acetate of lime, yet they want this tariff, and they want it at the same rate which Canada has put upon it. Canadians use it for the purpose of making their home people pay a high price for the product, and if they have a surplus to enable them to dump it on the rest of the world at a lower price. That is just one of the conditions which will be produced by this bill, and which I condemn.

I do not want to bring about that situation in this country. I do not want, by means of a tariff, to enable a combine to control prices in this country, to make the American consumer pay an exorbitant profit, and enable the trust simply to dump its surplus on the rest of the world. That, avowedly, is the purpose for which these people have applied for the tariff in this bill, with glacial acetic acid selling at 20 cents in Canada at the factory and at 8½ cents in New York. Imagine that! There is none being imported now, but 8½ cents a pound is the price the American producer is willing to take for it. That is the New York price. This other concern is charging 20 cents for the same article at the factory in Canada, and now they avowedly want to bring about such a condition in this country as will enable the producers of this commodity to raise the price to the American consumer in the same way that that profiteering concern is doing with the people of Canada. There is not a line of testimony here to show the cost of production in this country or in Canada.

Mr. President, I think I have discussed this item sufficiently, and, as I have said, I have done this because the chairman of the Finance Committee refers to this item as involving the principles which permeate this bill; and that is so. The bill is framed not upon the cost of production; it is framed not upon the difference in prices; it is framed in response to the requests of the interested parties who want to exploit the American people, and the majority of the Finance Committee has acceded to the requests. That, in my humble judgment and in my firm conviction, is the purpose which actuated the framing of this bill.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harreld	McKinley	Sheppard
Brandegee	Harris	McNary	Simmons
Broussard	Harrison	Moses	Smoot
Calder	Heflin	Nelson	Stanley
Capper	Johnson	Newberry	Sterling
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Townsend
Curtis	Kellogg	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Kendrick	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Keyes	Overman	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	King	Pepper	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	Ladd	Phipps	Williams
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Pittman	Willis
Glass	Lenroot	Poindexter
Gooding	McCumber	Ransdell
Hale	McKellar	Rawson

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is absent on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to lay down some general propositions with reference to this bill before I start upon a discussion of its provisions.

1. A careful study of this bill in connection with existing conditions here and abroad make it perfectly clear that it was framed with a view to maintaining present prices and to enable the industries which it protects to further advance these excessively high prices without incurring the risk of foreign competition.

2. It will inevitably lead to higher prices, higher cost of living, and the further monopolization of American industries.

3. In many instances the rates are absolutely prohibitive. Especially is this true with reference to the highly specialized products, and these constitute the bulk of our dutiable imports. It is not difficult to see that the American producers of dutiable commodities protected against foreign competition need only—by recourse to certain well-known devices and expedients—bring about concert of action with respect to production and selling price to enable them to fix and maintain prices as high as the traffic will bear.

4. A comparison of the rates imposed in the bill with those of the Payne-Aldrich bill will show that upon the basis of the prices of products during the two periods, the only basis of a fair comparison of equivalent ad valorems, the proposed rates applied to present import prices average—expressed in terms of equivalent ad valorem are from 40 to 50 per cent higher than the average Payne-Aldrich rates for any year during the life of that act.

5. Whatever may be said—and that proposition will be discussed later—with reference to the volume of our importations during the war period and the aftermath war period, the official statements of imports for the years 1921 and 1922, and especially for the last nine months ending February, 1922, show that they have now reached almost a normal basis and are not excessive, and that, compared with our exports during the same period, they are relatively low.

6. If the reductions thus shown have taken place under the much lower rates of the present law, it must be obvious that the drastic increases of the pending bill will result in reducing to a point where it will be utterly impossible for us, in present international economic conditions, to sell our large exportable surplus of manufactured and agricultural products in foreign markets because of the well-known fact that our foreign customers are now, and for an indefinite period will continue to be, unable to purchase our products except through the process of exchange of merchandise.

7. The two greatest economic problems which confront the American people to-day are (1) the question of foreign markets for our surplus products of the field, factory, and mine, and (2) closely related to the first is the question of unemployment, which already presses hard upon us and which, unless the first problem is wisely solved, will rapidly grow to alarming proportions.

Manifestly the farmer, the manufacturer, and the mine operator can give employment to labor only to the extent to which they can find a market for their products, and therefore unmarketed and undisposed of surplus means unemployment and curtailment of production.

8. The duties imposed upon agricultural products will be mostly inoperative or ineffective either because of (1) practically no importations or (2) such meager importations as could not possibly affect the domestic price or (3) where, on account of our large exportable surplus, the domestic price of the particular article is based upon and fixed by the world selling price.

9. The effective duties upon certain agricultural products, such as wool and sugar, will undoubtedly tend to advance the price of such commodities in the domestic market, just as the effective duties upon manufactured products will undoubtedly tend to advance the domestic price of these products. But the aggregate benefits to the farmer through increases in price will be small, indeed almost inconsequential, as compared with the additional burdens he will have to bear by reason of the increases in the prices, made possible by these higher duties, of the things he must buy and consume in the operation of his business and in supplying his domestic demands.

10. The rule manifestly adopted and followed by the committee in ascertaining the measure of protection which should be accorded a given product or industry in order to effect the measure of protection the bill intends violates every theory or principle of protection heretofore advocated or proclaimed by the champions of protection, including the Republican Party, in this country, and with the superadded rate-making powers conferred upon the President makes tariff-rate fixing almost as much a matter of political and personal patronage as the distribution of the Federal offices.

11. The rates of the bill are based upon the export price of imports as compared with the American selling price, an unstable and constantly fluctuating factor, and to a large extent the prices of imports as found in the report of the Reynolds Investigating Commission are adopted as the basis for this comparison; the American price for making the comparison is predicated upon no definite basis and is largely a game of catch as catch can with all the advantages of the game in favor of the tariff seeker.

12. The Reynolds report is based on prices of foreign merchandise as of August, 1921, mainly the prices of products imported into this country from Germany, the prices of which country seems to have been accepted as the standard. Since August, 1921, eight months ago, the export prices of foreign products have generally increased. In the case of Germany this increase has been very large, indeed in some instances almost phenomenal, so that the increases in prices since the Reynolds report has already thrown the rates ascertained and fixed in the bill as amended out of balance with the principle upon which they were fixed, and, of course, as the processes of international stabilization and adjustment go on they will be still further thrown out of balance.

13. The uprising in 1909 against the excessive rates of the Payne-Aldrich bill, levied upon practically no principle except to satisfy the demands of the beneficiaries of protection, not only forced the Republican Party to adopt and proclaim a fixed rule for measuring the protection to be accorded but brought about the overthrow of that party in 1912. The bill ignores and utterly repudiates this rule of protection measurement.

14. Adoption of this bill with its prohibitive rates based on an uncertain and dangerous principle of measuring differences in competitive conditions here and abroad will mean, in addition to higher prices, higher cost of living and the further monopolization of American industries, also radical reductions in production, unemployment of labor, and the general demoralization and undermining of our past and present economic standards and conditions.

I do not wish to venture into the field of prophecy, but I entertain the firm conviction that if this bill is adopted before another general election the demonstrated effects of these rates will arouse an indignation of more portentous proportions than that which overthrew the Republican Party in 1912, in which election its candidate carried but two States, the little States of Connecticut and Utah.

Mr. President, I have laid down these general propositions as the basis of the discussion to which I propose to proceed as soon as I shall have directed a few general remarks to the opening speech of the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], who is the chairman of the Finance Committee, the majority members of which framed the pending bill.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], who reported this bill for the committee, in his opening speech in support of it, makes bold to warn the country that it should not expect the bill to bring the full measure of prosperity they were probably anticipating. That was indeed a very frank and a very timely warning. In view of the fact that the bill, if adopted, is likely to go into effect only a short time before the election, it was also a wise precaution on the part of the chairman of the committee to warn the country against vain expectations. But the warning of the Senator is in striking contrast with the reiterated assurances of those who have asked these high rates and obtained them. They have confidently predicted and loudly proclaimed that if they were given what they asked and were thus protected against foreign competition, an overwhelming tide of prosperity would at once set in and business would hum as never before. However, in making these predictions of the great prosperity to follow the enactment of the bill, these bounty seekers probably intended no reference to the consumers, but only to the favored few to whom the bill gives what they asked.

If the Senator was addressing to the consumers his warning against entertaining unwarranted expectations, it was most timely and altogether justified, but if he intended his warning for those who, while the bill was in the making, from day to day swarmed about the sacred precincts of the room in which the secret executive sessions of the majority were held, they will doubtless regard his warning as a choice bit of humor, and accept it as a hint or a wink not to be too noisy and not to indulge in too much hilarity over the good things awaiting them, especially not until after the bill has passed the gauntlet of the Congress.

The Senator also offers advice to the fortunate ones upon whom his bill bestows its benefits with wanton prodigality. He advises them to be moderate and content themselves with small profits. Good advice, indeed! But, in view of the fact that the Senator's bill is an invitation to them to take the higher profits which it offers them for the taking, it may be confidently predicted that the very discriminating gentleman to whom this advice and invitation are given and extended will incontinently reject his advice and accept the invitation of his bill.

Taken in connection with the invitation of the bill, the Senator's advice may be construed as a shrewd suggestion to those who are to receive the benefactions provided in it that while they should be thankful to the Republican Party for the blessings they are about to receive, it were wise and prudent to be meek and altogether self-denying until after the bill is passed and the election is over.

Mr. President, I now come to the consideration of the bill proper. The bill is based primarily on three erroneous assumptions of fact:

1. Upon the assumption that present importations are excessive and a menace to the business of the country;

2. The assumption that the home selling price and the export selling price of foreign merchandise are so much lower than the selling price of like or comparable domestic products that greatly higher rates of duty than those of the present law are needed to bring about fair and competitive conditions; and

3. The assumption that the export prices of foreign merchandise as disclosed in the investigations and report of the Reynolds Commission based upon such selling prices in August, 1921, have not changed since that time and are the same to-day as then.

Those are the three bases of this bill, and each one of them is predicated upon a false assumption of the existing facts, as I shall show.

Let me discuss these several propositions in the order mentioned. The first relates to the import situation of to-day and raises the question whether from the protective standpoint present imports are so unduly large as to call for the proposed increases in duties in order to further and sufficiently restrain them.

Undoubtedly importations to this country during the war and the war aftermath period were very great, but our exportations also were not only great but relatively greater, and of course both were much greater than in pre-war times.

But the conditions of 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 no longer exist. During the years just mentioned we, together with our allies and adversaries in the world conflict, were seeking markets wherever they could be found throughout the world for our accumulated surpluses and unused war materials, and were selling these surplus goods for whatever price they might bring. This naturally resulted in more or less disturbance in price and economic conditions everywhere. But these accumulations have been practically disposed of; many of them were disposed of a year or eighteen months ago, at which time conditions began to drift back toward normal and have continued to drift in that direction to the present time.

As a result there was a notable falling off in our imports during the year 1921, which recession has continued to a greater or less degree to the present period.

Let me present the facts with respect to our international trade situation during 1921 as compared with 1920—the last year of what may be designated the war aftermath period, the year when, prices having reached their peak, imports having reached their peak, and exports having reached their peak, recession set in.

In the calendar year 1920 our imports amounted to $5,278,000,000 as against $2,509,000,000 in 1921, showing a falling off in the latter year compared with the former of $2,769,000,000, a reduction of more than one-half. There was also a notable falling off in our exports.

The advocates of further restriction of imports upon the ground that our markets are being flooded with foreign products have laid particular stress upon imports from Europe, especially from Germany, and from Asia, especially China and Japan, and also from North and South America and from Africa.

I have before me the Summary of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the United States, issued by the Department of Commerce. This official document shows that our imports from all Europe, including Germany, of course, during the year 1921 were only $764,000,000, stated in round numbers, which was $26,000,000 less than our total imports from all Europe in 1910, the first year of the Payne-Aldrich bill; $6,000,000 less than in 1911, the second year of the Payne-Aldrich bill; $136,000,000 less than in 1912, the third year of the Payne-Aldrich bill; and a round $100,000,000 less than in 1913, the last year of the Payne-Aldrich bill; and $24,000,000 less than in 1914, the first year of the Underwood tariff, and $463,000,000 less than in 1920, the last year of what I have described as the war aftermath period.

If the difference in prices during this period measured in dollars be considered the relative drop will be seen to be even greater.

It also shows that our imports from North America, which, of course, includes Canada, were $908,000,000 less in 1921 than in 1920. From South America, $465,000,000 less in 1921 than in 1920.

The advocates of this bill have laid great stress upon the immense volume of imports of cheap goods from China and Japan and have endeavored to create the impression that our markets were being swamped with cheap Asiatic products. This document shows, however, that imports from Asia, including Oceania, in 1920 were $1,476,000,000 and in 1921 only $653,000,000, a falling off during the last 18 months of readjustment of $823,000,000.

It shows that imports from Africa fell from $150,000,000 in 1920 to $40,000,000 in 1921.

These figures taken in connection with our exports tend strongly to confirm the contention that, taking the world at large during the calendar year 1921, our imports reached a practically normal basis, and that our imports from Europe, our best customer, fell in that year below the normal of any year between 1910 and 1914, inclusive.

It may be contended that these enormous drops in our imports in 1921 were due largely to the fall in prices. While that may in a measure account for the slump in 1921 as compared with 1920, the reverse conclusion must be drawn from the fact that our imports from Europe, tested by present prices, are below our imports from that Continent tested by pre-war prices.

As powerfully as these facts confute the contention that our markets are at present being swamped with foreign merchandise, especially from Europe (including Germany) and Asia (including China and Japan), and confirm the statement I have made that imports in 1921 were practically normal and upon a healthy commercial basis, the imports for the eight months ending February, 1922, as compared with the eight months ending February, 1921, furnish even stronger confutation and bring the comparison nearly up to the present time.

The official figures, which I have before me, show that for the eight months ending February, 1921, our imports amounted to $2,757,000,000, and for the eight months ending February, 1922, to $1,629,000,000, or a falling off in eight months of $1,137,000,000, or at the rate of more than a billion and a half a year.

No argument could more conclusively demonstrate the fact than do these figures that the basis upon which the increases in rates in this bill are predicated, namely, a present and dangerous inundation of our markets by a flood of foreign goods, is utterly without foundation.

The official figures I have given would seem to support and establish the contention that under the existing rates present importations are not excessive, but even if it should be conceded, as contended by the advocates of this bill, that present rates are not sufficient to meet all the exigencies of the situation from the protective standpoint, the question arises, Are the unusually and exceptionally high rates of this bill necessary to accomplish that purpose?

In connection with the discussion of this query, it is pertinent to consider to what extent this bill increases present rates. There has been some controversy as to the extent of these increases. It has been stated that they are no higher than the Payne-Aldrich rates, although radically higher than the rates of the present law.

It is estimated that the average equivalent ad valorem of the dutiable articles under the bill is at least somewhere around 45 per cent.

I am advised, I will say in passing, by the Actuary of the Treasury, who has been trying to make this computation, that he has not yet reached a point where he can state with certainty what the increases will be, but from the information I have received from him I am certain that the average ad valorem equivalent rates under this bill are between 45 and 50 per cent—more likely 50 than 45. Forty per cent, I believe, is the rate generally assumed as the one which obtained on an average under the Payne-Aldrich bill, so the present rates are probably 45 to 50 per cent in comparison with 40 per cent—40 per cent under the Payne-Aldrich bill, if you take the estimated ad valorem of the two periods in which these rates are levied.

But in a comparison of averages where duties are partly ad valorem and partly specific ad valorems have but little significance unless they be taken in connection with the prices prevailing at the time of the application of the two rates, because an average ad valorem equivalent for the purpose of comparison at a given time depends upon the relative selling prices of the merchandise to which the respective rates are applied. For this reason the average ad valorem equivalent of the Payne-Aldrich bill varied from year to year according as prices went up or down, being lower when the prices went up and higher when the prices went down. The same is true with respect to all tariffs, and it is because the controlling factor in the calculation is the specific rates. Therefore, in comparing the rates of this bill with the Payne-Aldrich rates the prices of commodities during the two periods must be taken into consideration.

I think it will not be denied that prices of dutiable commodities are to-day something like 50 per cent higher than they were during the period of the life of the Payne-Aldrich bill. If this estimate be true, the average equivalent ad valorem of the present bill applied to Payne-Aldrich prices of dutiable products would be 50 per cent higher than the average when applied to present-day prices, making the potential rates of the present bill as compared with those of the Payne-Aldrich bill between 60 and 65 per cent as against 40 per cent, if taken only in connection with the rates of the present bill. That is to say, the higher prices which obtain to-day than those which obtained during the Payne-Aldrich tariff of themselves constitute a factor which in the calculation of the ad valorem equivalent, by way of comparison, will amount to an increase of 50 per cent over the Payne-Aldrich rates. I think there can be no doubt that the potential rates of this bill are almost, if not quite, double those of the present law.

A mere statement of the increases proposed in this bill makes it clear that applied to present-day imports they would be practically prohibitive as to dutiable products. That would largely confine our imports to nondutiable products and to a few products, fancy designs and novelties, not made in this country at all or in sufficient quantities to supply the domestic demand.

If these rates should prove prohibitive, and if they are 50 per cent higher than the Payne-Aldrich rates—and they are if prices to-day are 50 per cent higher than they were in the Payne-Aldrich period—I say, if these rates should prove prohibitive, as I have predicted, and to the extent indicated, two things must follow:

(1) The further monopolization of our industries, attended with an enormous increase in prices and the cost of living.

(2) A disastrous reduction in our exports; and just as undue curtailment of imports will tend to industrial monopolization and increased prices and higher living costs so will undue reduction of our exports inevitably tend to a reduction of production and curtailment of employment.

There can be no doubt, I think, about the proposition that an undue or unhealthy restriction of imports, not to say a prohibition of imports, will at this time more than at any time during our history prove most disastrous in its effect upon our export trade. Such a policy might not have seriously affected the sale of our surplus products in foreign markets under conditions that obtained before the war, especially our export trade with our allies in the war. These latter nations are the best customers we have for our exportable surplus.

In pre-war times, when we were a debtor Nation to these countries and when they were abundantly able to buy from us what they needed and pay for it in gold, or gold equivalent, and their currency was at par, such rates as those proposed in this bill would even under those conditions have been a serious matter in their effect upon our trade with them; but in the condition of these countries to-day, with $11,000,000,000 indebtedness to us, with no gold with which to pay us for what they buy unless we freely buy from them, they will of necessity be forced, if we cut off their imports of dutiable products, to limit their purchases of our goods to the amount of our purchases from them of products not produced in this country or of products upon which the bill levies no duty.

It might be that our trusts and monopolies would still flourish and have their inflated profits by restricting their production to the demands of the American market. However that may be, and whatever policy might be adopted by the great captains of industry with respect to this matter, it is certain that if our imports are reduced to a minimum our exports must likewise be reduced to a minimum, and that we will be compelled to reduce our production of all the products which we now largely export or face the ruinous consequences of a glutted market.

Nothing could be more absurd from the standpoint of national welfare than to deliberately and drastically reduce imports from Europe to satisfy the clamor of a few sellers of toys and knives, when our imports from Europe now amount to only $764,000,000, just a little more than the annual interest upon the debt which Europe owes us. So that all that Europe would receive from us in payment of her imports would practically be absorbed by our interest charges against her, leaving her in her present financial condition, with little or nothing with which to liquidate her purchases from us.

In face of the fact that under the present tariff law these imports have, as I have shown, been reduced to such a low level, upon what theory of sanity can we justify doubling present rates and authorizing the President to add 50 per cent to that?

I now proceed to the consideration of the second proposition, namely, the contention made in support of these rates, that the assumed differences between the selling prices here and abroad of dutiable products make these exorbitant increases in duties necessary to protect American business.

Undoubtedly, as a result of the war and war conditions, there were radical changes and fluctuations in the selling prices in all industrial and commercial countries. The changes were invariably upward and were greatly pronounced in 1918, 1919, and 1920. During that period these increases were great and general, but, beginning with 1920, readjustment and stabilization completely changed these conditions and during the year 1921, especially during the last eight months ending February, 1922, export selling prices of imports of foreign merchandise, like imports, reached, approximately at least, pre-war levels.

Mr. President, as a comparison with selling prices of domestic products in this market I wish to have inserted as an appendix to my remarks a table showing the 1921 selling prices of German products compared with those of 1914. It relates to Germany, and it is better that it should be so for the purpose of this argument, because most of the duties in this bill have been based upon the prices of German products, and it has been claimed that German prices were notably below the prices of other European countries. [See Appendix A.]

Let us take hosiery, for instance. In 1914 the German price f. o. b., measured in dollars, was $1.81 per unit for the pre-war period. In 1921 the German price, measured in dollars, was $1.89.

On laces, in 1914, the German price was 35 cents per unit, and in 1921 it was 64 cents, almost double.

On cotton gloves, in 1914, the price was $2.14 in Germany, and in 1921 it was $8. The table is very, very illuminating, and establishes conclusively the contention that the export prices of merchandise imported from Germany and Europe generally, which is the basis taken in this bill as a starting point, have in recent months, and especially in the last 18 months, enormously increased. It would seem to be axiomatic that tariff duties should be levied on the basis of conditions which exist at the time the law is framed and passed, and not the conditions which existed at another time in the past and which have changed.

Surely there is no foundation for this contention with respect to labor costs. We have heard here that we could not compete with Japan and China and Germany because of the excessively low wages paid in those countries. I wish every Senator could have heard the testimony before the committee upon that subject. He would then have fully appreciated the argument I have made. It was stated that German wages were from a fourth to a third of what they were in this country; that the wages in Japan were from a tenth to a sixth of what they were in this country. The fact is that the difference in the price of labor here and abroad is much less to-day than it was before the war, much less than it was when the Aldrich bill was passed, and much less than it was when the Underwood bill was passed.

The facts of the situation show that as labor here has been able, by processes familiar to us all, to protect itself against unreasonable decline in prices, so has labor abroad. In fact, the war brought to labor throughout the world a better understanding of its strength. Under this awakening and inspiration labor has, as never before, been more assertive of its rights of participation in the profits of industry, and the resistance which it has demonstrated abroad to what it regards as undue reductions has resulted in maintaining the approximate equality established during the war. Labor strikes in England, Italy, and many other industrial countries, like labor strikes in our own country, have evidenced this resistance and have demonstrated labor's ability in those countries to protect and maintain the relative international standards which were established during the war, with the result that labor costs in this country and in competing countries, if not quite equal, are much more nearly equal to-day than at any time during the pre-war period.

It is doubtless true that the acutely abnormal conditions for a period after the war were more pronounced in respect to German prices of labor and commodities than as to those of other European countries, and that the disturbing effect was greater and of longer duration. This difference was due to the fact that the German situation was temporarily exceptional. That country had as a result of long and intensive concentration of effort, under the control and direction of the Government, developed a perfect and efficient military and economic organization, working in harmony and concert with each other and directed to two great objectives—one the military and the other the commercial conquest of the world. It was a national dream and obsession. They confidently expected the war to result in the accomplishment of the former objective, and they lent their energies, even during hostilities, to preparation for the latter objective. Working to the same end, they ruthlessly dismantled and destroyed, when possible, the industrial plants and cargo carriers of the Allies, their natural competitors in world trade. In the operation of these various industrial plants, in addition to producing the necessary war material, they sought to accumulate large surplus stocks and provide ample ocean transportation with a view, by quick and expeditious action, to getting possession of the foreign market ahead of their competitors when the war ended.

They failed in their dream of military conquest, but they did not despair of quickly getting on their feet and expeditiously achieving commercial supremacy.

As a result, when the war closed Germany occupied a position of both industrial and commercial advantage over its former competitors except in ocean tonnage. The German people had accumulated a much larger exportable surplus, but their splendid merchant fleet had been scrapped or confiscated by the Allies, and they lacked necessary shipping facilities. In these conditions they did a wonderful thing. After buying, leasing, and chartering tonnage wherever they could get it, by quickly putting their shipyards in operation at full capacity and speed, day and night, they built and assembled in an incredibly short time a reasonably adequate merchant fleet and established regular lines to the main ports of practically all the important countries of the world. At home they inaugurated an effective propaganda cunningly directed to the attainment of their scheme of quick preemption of the world market by temporarily underselling their competitors by drastically reducing their costs of production. Under the impulse of patriotic sentiments there was a ready response to this propaganda. By general concert labor for a time was induced to accept low and inadequate wages and manufacturers to content themselves with small profits, to the end that prices might be reduced to such a minimum as would make possible the wholesale underselling in the world market of which we have heard so much.

But for the stern and effective action of the Allies rendering impotent—except for a brief period—their efforts in this direction, they might have gone far in the accomplishment of this national scheme of commercial conquest and aggrandizement. As it was, they were for a time in a position and they took advantage of it to undersell their competitors, and thus temporarily their exportations grew rapidly and their selling prices at home and abroad were abnormally low, resulting in more or less disturbance of price standards and arousing undue alarm in many competing countries as to the permanency of the situation thus created.

The national conditions and sentiment under which this situation was created in Germany no longer exist. Stocks accumulated during the war and war surpluses have been disposed of. The compelling impulsion of patriotism has abated or subsided. The German laborer is no longer content with underpay nor the manufacturer with low profits—they demand, respectively, full pay and full profits measured by new world standards; and as a consequence German prices of labor and products have during the past year advanced approximately to world levels and still continue to advance, while the prices of their competitors show recessions. In February of this year German commodity prices advanced 20 per cent, as compared with 23 per cent in March, as shown by the statement of the Federal Reserve Board, issued this month and based on Berlin index numbers, and there is now but little if any appreciable underselling of German products in our markets, and their prices are about the same as those from other foreign industrial countries.

If there existed during the acutely abnormal period of 1918, 1919, and 1920 temporary need for higher duties than those imposed in the present law to further restrict the low-price German importations of those periods from the standpoint of the protectionist, the hard facts of the present international trade situation show that no such need exists to-day, and surely, as I have already said, it will be admitted by all that the levying of tariff duties should be directed not to conditions that have existed and have passed away, but to conditions actually obtaining at the time of their imposition or which were then in reasonable anticipation. To adopt any other rule would be infamous in its effect upon those who have to pay the taxes.

Mr. President, I shall offer as a part of my remarks, without reading, to be printed as an appendix to my speech, the report of the Federal Reserve Board with reference to the radical increases of German prices in recent months.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix B.)

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in further consideration of the second proposition I laid down a few moments ago, namely, that the effect of these excessively high and prohibitive duties by unduly restricting imports would inevitably result in the destruction of our foreign market for our exportable surplus, I think it must be evident that this of all times is an inopportune time for any action on our part which could possibly precipitate such a result. I think we will all agree that the effect of the exclusion or undue restriction of imports of foreign products at this time, especially the products of our allies during the war, who have always been and are yet the best customers for our goods, would now, of all times, be the most inopportune. Such a restriction in pre-war times would not have seriously affected our export business with Europe. Europe was then our creditor. Our annual interest payments to her were large. We were dependent upon her for our ocean transportation, and our payments to her on this account were also large. Her treasuries were full of gold, her currencies at par, and she was able to pay for what she might buy from us.

That situation has completely changed as a result of the war. We paid off our European indebtedness during the war; we now owe her nothing. The former situation is completely reversed, and to-day they owe us more than $11,000,000,000. She will soon begin to pay us annually between five and six hundred million dollars in interest charges. We now have a merchant fleet adequate to our requirements, and we need no longer employ European ships to transport our products to foreign markets. As a result of the war the gold of the world has been drawn to this country. Millions upon millions of it lies idle in American vaults. Europe has not a dollar of gold she can spare. The little she has is not sufficient to maintain her currency parity. In these conditions—and in a large measure they reflect conditions not only in Europe but in the outside world—if by tariff rates we cut off importations from abroad or materially reduce importations below the low and approximately normal levels which I have shown now exist, it is clear it will be impossible for foreign countries, especially our allies in Europe, to continue to buy our products, because largely the only means they now have of paying for them is that of exchange of merchandise.

The argument has been made by many who favor the high protective tariff rates in this bill that Europe can not pay the interest upon the money she now owes us unless we freely buy her goods. Nobody doubts the soundness of this statement so far as I have heard. If it be true that Europe is only able to pay us interest upon her debt through the processes of exchange of merchandise, it is logically and necessarily equally true that Europe can only pay for her purchases of merchandise from us by way of exchange of commodities. It ought to require no elaboration of argument to show that in present conditions if we cease to buy from the outside world, especially Europe, there will be left to them no way to pay for what they buy from us unless we extend them credit or lend them money with which to buy, and to do that in the face of present conditions, especially of our debtors in Europe, would bring disaster in the end both to us as lender and to them as borrower. Now, the corollary of this situation is that if we can not sell our surplus products abroad we must inevitably reduce production, which would mean increased unemployment. Let us briefly analyze that situation. We now produce an enormous exportable surplus. Heretofore we have sold this surplus abroad, and it has been the foundation of our great national prosperity and the marvelous expansion of our industries of factory and field during the last quarter of a century. If we can not sell this surplus abroad we can not sell it at all and it will become worse than worthless. It will cease to be an asset and become a dangerous liability.

In these circumstances—and they undeniably are actualities in the present situation—the excessively high rate of duties now proposed is insanity pure and simple, the insanity of overmastering selfishness and greed; it is a shortsightedness which can only be accounted for by the blinding influence of avarice upon the human mind. If we lose our foreign markets for our exportable surplus, or to the extent to which we lose these markets by the imposition of these drastic tariff restrictions, unemployment of labor must follow, reduction in production, and a stoppage of further expansion in all of our industrial pursuits. This would be inevitable. Obviously, our farmers, our manufacturers, our mine owners, can give employment to labor only to the extent that they can find markets for labor products. Therefore undisposed-of surplus means not only reduced production but reduced employment of labor to that extent. Our vaunted American markets are indeed fine. Our people are great consumers and buyers—in fact, the greatest—but if the American market is to be the only market for American products we must limit domestic production to domestic consumption; otherwise our boasted standards of prices and living will be superseded by the standards of such countries as have in the past followed the policy of commercial isolation, which the high rates of this bill will tend to inaugurate and ultimately establish in this country. China, the home of the oldest civilization in the world, with vast natural resources and a rich soil, with an industrious and intelligent population, has for centuries followed this policy, and poverty and national impotency are and have been the penalty of her folly.

Mr. President, this bill is the outcome of the frenzied outcries of a lot of tariff beneficiaries and bounty seekers who have been thrown into a panic by a purely temporary situation and who in the panic have greatly magnified and exaggerated the facts. If the conditions out of which this clamor grew had been of a permanent character, and if they existed to-day to the extent that they did during the war aftermath period, there might be some justification for higher rates than those of the present law; but there would be none for the rates proposed in the pending bill; nor could any imaginable conditions growing out of the importation and sale of foreign products in our markets warrant the delegation to the President of the extraordinary powers conferred upon him by the Senate committee amendments over imports, rate classification, and rate bases. If, however, the majority are determined to delegate these plenary powers, unconstitutional, dangerous, and revolutionary as such a grant of power undoubtedly would be, and shall actually do so, the rates of duties of the present law would be sufficient to meet all exceptional conditions existing or apprehended without further increase in rates. In other words, if such an extraordinary power over rates is granted to the President, there would be no necessity for increasing the present rates. On the other hand, if the rates in this bill, in themselves practically prohibitive, are adopted, there could be no justification or excuse for granting these powers to the President.

I now come to one of the most serious aspects of the bill as amended by the Senate committee. The recognition of the principle, specifically written into the bill, as to the basis of ascertaining the measure of tariff protection which should be accorded, is fraught with more danger and possesses greater potentialities of oppression through the exercise of the taxing power than any scheme of legislation ever proposed in this or any other country. The proposition of American valuation is bad both in principle and from the standpoint of public policy, but I fear that more serious consequences will flow from the application of the new principle proposed for determining and fixing the measure of protection which should be accorded. What is that principle?

Everybody knows that the ill-fated Payne-Aldrich law was based upon no fixed rule for measuring the rate of protection to be accorded; indeed, it was framed upon no principle except that of giving what was asked by those to whom the Republican Party was committed by obligations almost as binding as the lien of a mortgage. Rates arrived at in such a way were necessarily unsatisfactory and in many instances oppressive and ruinous. The public sentiment of the country demanded that all tariff rates should be based upon some fixed principle which should take into consideration the interests of the consumer as well as the producer and furnish reasonable safeguards against the imposition of unnecessary and excessive taxes. Under the superb leadership of that master of invective and compelling eloquence, Jonathan Dolliver, an aroused and indignant public sentiment drove the old guard leadership of that day to acquiesce in a definition of the measure of protection which should thereafter be applied in arriving at the tariff duties to be imposed. That definition was deliberately written into the Republican platform of 1912, and from that time up to the advent to power of the present administration it has been proclaimed and lauded by the Republican Party as the true basis of the ascertainment of duties levied upon the protective principle. The rule as thus adopted provided that the rate of duty imposed should be based upon the difference in cost of production here and abroad. If the principle of protection is to obtain, I do not think it can be successfully gainsaid that this formula furnishes the true rule for determining all rates of duty applicable to competitive articles. This bill, as I think I shall be able conclusively to show, not only violates but absolutely ignores and scraps, so to speak, this oft-proclaimed Republican theory of the measure of tariff protection.

In the Senate hearings preliminary to the framing of the bill and which it was supposed were intended to elicit information to enable the majority of the committee in the formulation of the bill properly to apply this Republican formula in the ascertainment of rates the question of the cost of production was tabooed. When the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] ventured to make some inquiries with respect to their production costs and profits of certain witnesses representing protected industries, his inquiries were evidently received with more or less surprise, and the answers, almost without exception, disclosed the fact that the witnesses had not prepared themselves with respect to those matters because they did not expect to be called upon to testify upon those points. In many instances promises were made to send in the information later, but I am advised that practically no attention was ever paid to those promises. In short, there was absolutely no effort on the part of the committee to ascertain the cost of production here and abroad, and I do not presume there will be any contention that the duties finally arrived at were intended to measure that difference.

The majority members of the Senate Finance Committee have caused to be printed and circulated among Senators to aid them in the consideration of this bill a book entitled "A Summary of Tariff Information, 1921, relating to House bill 7456." This compilation sets forth the different paragraphs in the House bill in juxtaposition with paragraphs of the acts of 1909 and 1913 dealing with the same subjects, followed by brief statements containing data supposed to be essential in connection with the determination of rates. The summary contains much valuable information with reference to production, exports, imports, and so forth, but as to the cost of production here and abroad that document, prepared to enlighten the Senate, is as silent as the grave. In the report filed by the majority committee and in the meager discussions by majority members of that committee this subject is practically ignored.

Fully aware as I was when I began to study the bill that this principle, which had been so long proclaimed by the Republican Party as the controlling principle in the framing of tariffs, had been ignored, in the beginning of my investigations and study of it I addressed myself diligently to an effort to find out upon what principle the astonishing rates proposed were based. I could not believe they were predicated upon mere guess or upon the demands, however insistent, made by the protected interests for higher rates, but my search was in vain until I reached section 315 (a), which clothes the President with legislative powers such as were never heretofore conferred upon any administrative officer in this country or any other Anglo-Saxon country, and which, if conferred by the Parliament of England upon the King and his ministers, would, under their summary method, result in the instant overthrow of the Government. I do not care to read all of the section, but I will read just enough to illustrate the point I am making:

SEC. 315. (a) That in order to regulate the foreign commerce of the United States and to put into force and effect the policy of the Congress by this act intended, whenever the President, upon investigation of the differences in conditions of competition in trade in the markets of the United States of articles wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States and of like or similar articles wholly or in part the growth or product of competing foreign countries, shall find it thereby shown that the duties fixed in this act do not equalize the said differences in conditions of competition in trade—

Mark the words, Senators, "in trade"—

he shall, by such investigation, ascertain said differences and determine and proclaim the changes in classifications or forms of duty or increases or decreases in any rate of duty provided in this act shown by said ascertained differences in conditions of competition in trade necessary to equalize the same in the markets of the United States; that 30 days after the date of such proclamation or proclamations such changes in classification or in form of duty shall take effect and such increased or decreased duties shall be levied, collected, and paid on such merchandise when imported directly or otherwise from the country of origin into the United States: Provided, That until further provided by law the total increase or decrease of such rates of duty shall not exceed 50 per cent of the rates specified in this act, or in any amendatory act.

That is declared to put into force and effect the policy of the "Congress by this act intended," and then follows a clear definition of what that policy is, and the President is directed to pursue it in case he shall impose these additional duties.

This section of the bill undoubtedly gives the definition of the principle upon which rates are made, and it is the difference in condition of competition "in trade"—not to equalize differences based on cost of production here and abroad, not to equalize differences based on cost, plus a reasonable profit equally accorded to the domestic producer and the foreign producer, not to equalize differences in intrinsic value at all, but to measure the differences in competition "in trade"; that is, to fix a rate which will bring up the foreigner's price to the price at which the American producer sells his product in the American market, without any reference to what part of the domestic selling price represents production cost and how much of it represents profits, what part of it represents value and what part of it represents water, what part of it is a just return and what part of it is robbery. The President is authorized to bring the foreign price up to that standard.

Mr. STANLEY. Is not that a plenary power to create an embargo?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

The theory of the tariff bill is that however high the selling price of the American article is, however extortionate the profit covered up in that price may be, the price of the foreign article is to be raised so as to make the two articles competitive.

The costs of production are reasonably stable. The prices at which commodities are sold are unstable. They depend much, especially under trust and monopolistic conditions, upon the profit the producer is able to exact and extort.

As a matter of fact, the rates fixed in the bill, in many instances—indeed, in most instances—are far in excess of what is necessary to raise the foreign price up to the domestic selling price and so equalize differences in competition in trade. Under these rates the American producer, especially where domestic competition has been eliminated, as is true of most of the industries, may at once upon the passage of this bill increase his profits by increasing his price without any danger of foreign competition.

As is said, in many instances the rates are too high; but if they are not high enough in a particular case to protect the American manufacturer, the President can raise them high enough to protect him in his present high profits, and if he wants to increase them, the President can come to his relief by increasing his tariff protection against outside competition.

Of course, under such a bill present excessively high prices under which the people are groaning will be maintained and inevitably greatly advanced, so that the people instead of getting a lower cost of living as a result of this legislation will get a higher cost of living, and they will have to continue to pay the present high and unreasonable profits and, in many instances, still higher profits.

Mr. President, undoubtedly informed of these rates, and feeling confident that this bill will be enacted into law, many of the industries of the country are getting ready already to raise their prices, and some of them have already done so.

I want to read a letter which came to me a few days ago, written from the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, April 16, 1922, signed by Mr. Edgar B. Walters, giving his address as Garden City, Long Island, N. Y. He says:

Hon. F. M. SIMMONS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Pardon me for taking the liberty of addressing you regarding the revised Fordney tariff bill.

I was interested to read your recent statement on this subject, and I wish to relate just a few things that have already happened since your statement, and directly because of the proposed tariff on woolens and clothing.

The American Woolen Co. last Thursday sent notices to the wholesale clothing trade raising their prices from 10 cents to 45 cents per yard. (The Fordney bill proposes to increase the duty from 35 per cent ad valorem plus 45 cents a pound to 55 per cent ad valorem plus 49 cents per pound.) This American Woolen Co. is the one who doubled their capital stock out of war profits (see increase in 1920 from $20,000,000 to $40,000,000 stock dividend), and in 1921, under the Underwood tariff, earned 8¼ per cent on this inflated capital. I am informed that the president of this company, Mr. Wood, wrote the woolen-goods schedule for the Finance Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a ridiculous statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, I do not know; perhaps the Senator from Utah wrote it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to say that I had a hand in it; and William M. Wood is not in this country, and that is about as much truth as there is in that letter.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, Mr. President, the question of who wrote the schedule is merely incidental. I will not go further into that; but does the Senator deny that this company raised its prices from 10 to 45 cents a yard on the Thursday before April 16?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know as to that. All I say is that, as far as the duties upon wool are concerned, they are even higher to-day than we have them in the pending bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not want to discuss that subject now. I will do so later.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not intend to discuss it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say to the Senator that I care nothing in the world about the statement as to Mr. Wood. I am not reading the letter for that purpose, but I am reading it to get the statement as to the increases in price by the American Woolen Co.

Mr. SMOOT. I never intended to interrupt the Senator. He asked me a question, and I simply answered it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well; let it go at that.

Mr. SMOOT. And the letter is not true; that is all.

Mr. SIMMONS. As to Mr. Wood; but does the Senator say it is not true as to raising prices?

Mr. SMOOT. No; but, Mr. President, it is not true about the bill increasing the duty upon wool. I can say that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want this letter to speak for itself. I shall put the rest of it in the RECORD without reading. It discusses the matter in a very illuminating manner. I wish I had time to read it all, but I have not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WILLIAM PENN HOTEL,
Pittsburgh, April 16, 1922.

Hon. F. M. SIMMONS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Pardon me for taking the liberty of addressing you regarding the revised Fordney tariff bill.

I was interested to read your recent statement on this subject, and I wish to relate just a few things that have already happened since your statement, and directly because of the proposed tariff on woolens and clothing.

The American Woolen Co. last Thursday sent notices to the wholesale clothing trade raising their prices from 10 cents to 45 cents per yard. (The Fordney bill proposes to increase the duty from 35 per cent ad valorem, plus 45 cents per pound, to 55 per cent ad valorem and 49 cents per pound?)

This American Woolen Co. is the one who doubled their capital stock out of war profits (see increase in 1920 from twenty to forty millions stock dividend), and in 1921, under the Underwood tariff, earned 8¼ per cent on this inflated capital. I am informed that the president of this company, Mr. Wood, wrote the woolen goods schedule for the Finance Committee.

Further, clothing manufacturers were just preparing to open their lines for the fall 1922 season when this bill was reported out of committee, and upon seeing that the duty was increased from 35 to 55 per cent on ready-made clothing the prices then were raised from $1.50 to $4 per suit from the lists then being made up.

The wholesale clothiers had not at that time published their fall prices, and hence this news did not get in the daily press, as was the case with the woolens, so that the retail clothier who is now beginning to place his orders with the clothing manufacturers is forced to pay from $1.50 to $4 per suit more than he would have paid if this enormous increase in duty had not been proposed.

Clothing should have shown a decline of from $4 to $8.50 per suit from prices obtained a year ago, because the wages of workpeople have been reduced all along the line from the spinning, weaving, etc., down to the clothing cutters and operators. I have been a clothing salesman for 20 years and can vouch for the accuracy of the foregoing.

It does seem to me that the public is entitled to some relief. Surely the American Woolen Co., which was indicted for charging 100 per cent profit during 1919 (but thrown out on a technicality) does not need 55 per cent protection when they show by their published statement that they made huge profits on inflated capital under a lower tariff, and that during one of the worst years of depression in the history of the woolen industry—1921. See their public statement. The public will rise up against such iniquity, as the price of clothing is now so high they can barely buy what is necessary for their comfort.

Yours faithfully,

EDGAR B. WALTERS,
Garden City, Long Island, N. Y.

THE REYNOLDS REPORT.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, Mr. President, let me discuss for a few minutes the Reynolds report. Mr. President, it is evident that in levying duties under the principle defined and carried in the bill, it is necessary to base them upon the export price of the foreign product and the selling price of the American product with which it competes, either directly or indirectly. The bill has been written in recognition of that fact. If the foreign and domestic article are not comparable, they have extended the principle so as to protect the American article against possible displacement by a noncomparable article.

In levying duties upon this basis it would seem to go without saying that the export selling price of the product at the time of the enactment of the law should furnish the basis, and not the export price some time in the past when price conditions were possibly entirely different, or in the future upon the theory that trade conditions and prices will change. Any other course would seem to be absurd, not to say monstrous.

What are the facts with reference to this important matter? I am advised by experts who assisted the committee in ascertaining the basis for this principle that the Reynolds report finding the export prices of foreign products was in the main accepted by the committee as fixing the price upon which the duties should be ascertained and levied.

The Reynolds report is based upon export selling price of foreign merchandise in August, 1921—eight months ago—and presumably upon the selling price of domestic products at that time; but since that time there have been marked changes in price levels in both foreign and domestic prices. Domestic prices during that period have gone downward; export prices during that period, especially German export prices—and this bill is based largely upon German prices—have been upward. The advance in the case of Germany has been almost sensational, based largely upon the elimination of Government control, regulation and subsidies, together with the fact that German labor is no longer content to work for reduced wages and is demanding wages commensurate with those of other manufacturing countries, while the German manufacturer is no longer content with anything but a fair measure of profit upon the same basis. Whatever the reason for the advance in German export prices, the important question in this connection is, What has been the extent of that advance?

Experts of the committee advise me that a comparison of foreign export prices shows the most decided gain, and that the advance in the German export price has been during that period very, very great.

I have here two statements of the Federal Reserve Board—one issued April 1, 1922, and the other April 7, 1922. The one of April 1 shows that wholesale American prices declined during the month of January 3.7 per cent, and that a further decline of 2.5 per cent occurred in February. On the other hand, the statement of April 7 shows that during the month of February, according to the index table which I attach and which I wish to have attached as an appendix to my remarks, there has been an increase of 20 per cent in the general level of wholesale prices in Germany, and during the month of March an increase of 23.6 per cent.

That I may not misrepresent the board, I will use their language. They say:

According to this index, there has been an increase of 20.7 per cent in the general level of wholesale prices in Germany during the month of March, as compared with an increase of 23.6 during February.

Then they attach the index table, which I shall ask to have printed as an appendix to my remarks. (See Appendix C.)

In further confirmation of these statements I have here a table furnished me by one of the experts of the committee showing that to-day many foreign products, chiefly imports from Europe, are selling in the American market at higher prices than the domestic products. I ask permission to insert this table as an appendix to my remarks. (See Appendix C.)

So that we have in juxtaposition the statement of the Federal Reserve Board showing that during the three months while domestic prices have been declining export prices of German products have been increasing and increasing at phenomenal rates.

This report shows that in August, 1921, when the Reynolds report was made and upon which rates were based, the index number as to German food prices was 214, and that in April of this year the index number had risen to 654, and as to all countries it shows that the index number in August was 160, as compared with 525 for the month of April, 1922.

I am giving these facts showing these changes in domestic prices and foreign export prices since last August—the date when the Reynolds report was made—to show (1) that these rates, and any rates based upon the principle of the bill, are grounded upon an unstable and fluctuating basis; and (2) to show that the changes that have taken place in these prices since the Reynolds report have thrown the rates proposed in the Senate amendments utterly out of balance, and that if justified upon the findings of the Reynolds report as to prices they are not justified and can not be justified upon present prices, and that we have a bill based upon a situation which once existed, but which exists no longer.

This bill is to operate in the future and it should be framed with reference to the present situation so far as that situation in any way affects the rates which will be applied under the principle upon which it is framed.

AGRICULTURE.

Mr. President, I shall now briefly discuss agriculture and the agricultural duties of the bill.

I wish to address myself to the question of the effect of the duties imposed in this bill upon agricultural products and upon the farmer as a consumer of between 40 and 50 per cent of the total American consumption of all products, and particularly of those upon which duties are levied under this bill.

I will endeavor to show that American prosperity for many years has been largely dependent upon our finding markets for our exportable surplus, and as we have expanded our production of agricultural and manufactured products. This dependence has grown greater and greater. Owing to the great expansion brought about by war conditions it is difficult to measure the present degree of dependence of American prosperity upon foreign markets for our surplus.

No part of our population is more dependent upon foreign markets for the sale of their surplus products than the American farmer. It is true we produce a number of farm products which are not exported because the amount is unequal to the American demand, but the production of many of the staple agricultural products in this country is enormously in excess of the domestic demand.

Our exports of cotton heads the list. We produce in normal conditions more than twice as much cotton as we need or can use in this country. If we can not sell abroad that part of our cotton production, that portion of the annual production will become valueless, and the congestion which will follow in the American market will so reduce the price of the half consumed in this country as to make it impossible to continue its production, thus making it absolutely necessary for the farmer to reduce his production one-half or face bankruptcy and ruin.

The same is true in the case of tobacco, while not to as great an extent as in the case of cotton, and, speaking generally, it is true with reference to nearly all our staple food products.

We must export our enormous surplus of food products or curtail the production, else the surplus will swamp the American market and reduce the domestic price below the point of profit.

It is therefore evident that the prosperity of the farmer is dependent upon our export trade, and it is too self-evident to require statement or elaboration that the volume of our exports are directly dependent upon and largely measured by the volume of our imports. It is a truism which nobody disputes, and a truism which even the President of the United States has emphasized—that no nation can expect to sell abroad, even under normal conditions, unless they are willing to buy abroad. This is the basis upon which international trade rests.

If this is true in normal conditions it is doubly true in present conditions.

Before the war we were a debtor Nation. Our chief competitors in trade, Great Britain, France, and Germany, were creditor nations. We then depended upon Europe for ocean transportation, which made us further debtors to them. So that without selling us any great amount our annual indebtedness would in part go toward the payment of their annual purchases of us. Besides, the treasuries of Europe were full of gold and any balance of trade against them could be readily liquidated without embarrassment.

That situation has now completely changed. We paid off our European indebtedness during the war. The pre-war situation is reversed, and they owe us around $11,000,000,000. I am repeating this argument because it applies with more force to agriculture than to any other class of producers. These are conditions existing not only in Europe, but in the outside world, and if in these conditions we cut off, by tariff rates, importations from abroad, or materially reduce importations from the present relatively low level, it will be impossible for these foreign countries to continue to buy our products, because largely the only means they have now of paying for our products is that of exchange of goods.

It is therefore apparent that not only the farmer but every other producer in this country is profoundly interested in doing whatever is necessary to support and safeguard our foreign export trade, and that drastic reduction in imports such as would follow the enactment of this bill would undermine and soon utterly destroy our export trade by depriving our foreign customers of the only remaining means of liquidating their purchases.

But there is another reason why what is proposed in this bill is not in the interest of the American farmer. I grant you that some of the duties imposed in this bill, like those imposed upon sugar and wool, will increase the price of domestic sugar and wool. I grant you that increasing the duty on sugar will increase the price of American-grown sugar—cane or beet—and there are undoubtedly other agricultural products that would likewise be enhanced in selling price by the imposition of these duties, but the great bulk of agricultural products upon which these duties are based would not be affected at all, and for the reasons I have heretofore given. This may be illustrated with the duty of 15 cents per bushel on corn. No duty upon corn can affect the American price of corn because practically none is imported into the country, and we produce more than we need for our own consumption. The amount of corn imported compared to the domestic production would be as one ear to a barrel, and probably not much more than a cupful to a bushel. No duty upon these trifling importations would affect the price of corn.

It is estimated by experts, after thorough investigation and careful calculation, that for every dollar increase the farmer will get as a result of such of these increases as are effective, he will have to pay by reason of the higher duties on other products at least $5—$1 in, $5 out. If that is not swapping dollars for dimes, it is swapping dollars for quarters.

Again, most of the effective duties in this bill when applied to products of universal consumption and use when operative at all are produced by but a relatively small number of farmers, or are only produced by farmers in certain sections and in certain groups. Take sugar and wool, for instance. Sugar and wool are consumed by all the people. Sugar is produced in Louisiana and a few Western States. While wool is produced in a good many States, it is mainly produced in certain sections of the country. The number of farmers producing sugar and wool compared with the total number is small, and yet as the farmers of this country purchase from 40 to 50 per cent of all the products consumed in this country they will have to pay one-half of the additional duty paid on these products plus one-half of the increase in the prices of woolens and refined sugar as a result of the additional and compensatory duties allowed the manufacturers of wool and refiners of sugar in this bill.

It is estimated by experts that the producers of wool stand to gain something like $45,000,000 for their wool, but as a result in the increase in the rates of manufactures of wool the additional amount which all the farmers of the country will have to pay for their clothing and other woolen purchases will be from three to four times as much as the woolgrowers gain, and thus it will be taxing the whole body of American farmers $4 that the relatively few farmers engaged in the production of wool may get $1.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will the Senator permit me to call his attention to the fact that the bill reduces the duty on raw wool from 45 cents per scoured pound to 33 cents, and that the growers of wool in this country are not being additionally benefited by the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. Let me repeat that it is estimated by experts that the producers of wool stand to gain something like $45,000,000 for their wool, but as a result of the increase in the rates of manufactures of wool the additional amount which all the farmers of the country will have to pay for their clothing and other woolen purchases will be from three to four times as much as the woolgrowers gain. Thus it will be taxing the whole body of the American farmers $4 in order that the relatively few farmers engaged in the production of wool may get an additional dollar, but the woolgrowers who get the additional dollar will also have to pay their part of the resulting increase in the prices of woolens and clothing, and when one calculates that, as I have had experts do—and I am going to give some figures about it without reading them—even the woolgrower, who gets the benefit of the higher rates of duty, which are operative in his case to the full extent of the duty, because we produce only about one-half the amount of wool that we consume in the country, will find that with the additional price which he will have to pay—and I am not now speaking of the general farmer—will have to pay out in his purchases on account of the higher rates given on manufactures of wool and clothing more, and much more, than he will receive.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The point I intended to make——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I would like very much to continue without interruption.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But the Senator misinterpreted what I said a moment ago, and said he did not agree with me. I simply want to put myself right. The point I wanted to suggest was that under the bill all of the commodities which the woolgrower must buy are largely increased, and that the duty upon his product, wool, is decreased by the bill from the present law, and so the woolgrower is being hurt by the bill rather than helped. The argument which the Senator has made, it seems to me, was inaccurate in that respect. The existing law, commonly known as the emergency tariff law, will remain in force if not supplanted by this bill, and that law imposes a duty at the rate of 45 cents per pound on scoured wool, while this bill proposes a duty at the rate of 33 cents per scoured pound.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator could establish his first proposition, I think it might result in our getting some votes from the other side of the aisle, because I think there are Senators on the other side, belonging to that group which we call the agricultural bloc, who are inclined to vote for the bill upon the theory that the rates upon raw wool have been enormously increased and that the increase will result in advancing the prices received by the grower of raw wool in the United States. I think, however, that I now see what the Senator means to say. He means that the present bill, only to a partial extent, carries forward and continues the admittedly excessive increases in the duty on raw wool in the so-called Emergency Tariff act. I at first thought he was speaking with reference to increases in the pending bill as compared with the Underwood Tariff Act. It is the making permanent in this bill of the emergency rates, even though slightly reduced, that I complain of.

Mr. President, the farmers buy from 40 to 50 per cent of all the sugar consumed in this country. The cane and beet sugar growers of Louisiana and a few Western States will get more for their raw sugar if this bill passes, but for every additional dollar they get the great masses of farmers will have to pay from $4 to $5 additional for the sugar they consume.

In passing it might be said that undoubtedly the full rates of duty imposed upon imported sugar is added to the price of the domestic product. The same would be true as to wool. That is because we produce only about half of the amount of sugar and wool that we consume in the United States and import the balance. Where that condition exists the full duty may be, and always is, added to the domestic price, so that the great mass of the farmers will not only pay half of the duty collected by the Government on imports of these two products but they will pay half of the increase in the price of the domestic product because of the duty for the benefit of the relatively few farmers who produce these two raw products.

Mr. President, I ask to incorporate as an appendix to my remarks, without reading, a brief statement showing the amount which would be gained by the farmers from a number of staple products of the farm upon which these duties will be operative and the additional amount the farmer will have to pay on his purchases of products which he does not produce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix C.)

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have tried to consider this bill with fairness and conservatism. I think no Senator on the other side will accuse me of treating it as a partisan or political question. I do not wish to speak harshly of the bill; I have tried not to do so; and yet when I consider the danger to the happiness, the peace, and the prosperity of the people of this country which, I think, lurks in it, I can not withhold a frank expression of my condemnation and of my fears.

I do greatly fear the effect of this bill if it shall be passed. I think if it shall be passed as it is now written we shall never again, certainly not after it shall have had time to demonstrate itself, hear anything more about Republican tariff-made prosperity. It is my deliberate judgment that this bill is fraught with more danger to the American people and to the institutions under which we live than any bill that ever crossed the threshold of this Chamber.

Its first effect will be oppressive to the masses; it will lead to wholesale monopolization of all the products of protected industry; it will lead to those extortions which always follow unhampered monopoly, and we shall in the not distant future, if this legislative policy is adopted and be long continued, have conditions similar to those which existed under the feudalism of the Middle Ages. That will be inevitable. It will eventuate in a fourfold greater concentration and consolidation of the business and the industries of the American Nation.

Mr. President, I hope I love my country; I hope my heart beats sympathetically for my fellow man; and because I love my country, because I sympathize with my fellow man, I am ready now, until this debate is ended, to dedicate every ounce of my strength and my energy to thwart, by fair and open means and fair and honest discussion, the impending calamity.

I have studied this bill thoroughly, and the dangers which lie in it, some on the surface and some hidden, as I have pursued my investigation and study of it, have, I do not exaggerate when I say, appalled and shocked me, as they have shocked the great majority of the American people, who have come to understand what it really means and what it will do if enacted into law. Editors and responsible heads of many of our great national publications, Republican as well as Democratic, testify to and declare its dangers and iniquities.

Mr. President, in this connection I ask leave to incorporate in my remarks at this point a few excerpts from leading metropolitan newspapers, some Republican and independent and some Democratic, expressing their condemnation of the policy and the rates written in this bill, and denouncing it as fraught with untold evils to the American people and to American business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM NEWSPAPER EDITORIALS.

[From the Chicago Daily Tribune, Republican.]

We can guarantee one thing for the new tariff bill just reported by the Senate Finance Committee. Somewhere in its maze of barbed-wire entanglements each intelligent business man, producer, and consumer who attempts to negotiate it will meet a shock. It is one of the longest, most detailed, and most complex tariff bills ever presented to Congress.

On the whole, it is a very high protective tariff. It bears every evidence of having been built according to the ancient methods of allowing or soliciting every special interest in the country to appear before the committee, argue for a high rate of duty to protect its own special commodity, and obtain such a rate regardless of its effect upon the economic organization of the country as a whole.

[From the St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat, Republican.]

Its protective sufficiency is not to be doubted, but examination of the schedules fails to reveal any assurance that it will permit "fair competition from other countries." We are in sympathy with the principle of protection where protection is needed, but this bill seems to have applied the principle to everything without regard to specific needs, without regard to present world conditions, and without regard to our altered position in relation to the world's trade.

[From the New York Herald, Republican.]

It will give the American consumer a heavy jolt to see how the Senate tariff makers propose to tax his food, as if it were not already costly enough to eat in this country, compared with pre-war prices.

But its worst feature is that it completely shuts America out of foreign markets except in our raw materials, notably cotton and copper.

[From the New York Tribune, Republican.]

"It is something of a shock to learn, if the analysis of the Associated Press is accurate, that the rates of the bill are, on the whole, higher than those of the Payne-Aldrich law," remarks this staunchly Republican paper.

[From the Ohio State Journal, of Columbus, Republican.]

Our agricultural and manufacturing interests need as never before a wide, free foreign market.

[From the Business Farmer of Michigan.]

Of what benefit to the farmer is a 25 per cent duty on a world grain like wheat, of which we produce a large surplus, when he must turn right around and pay a 40 to 80 per cent duty on the majority of things he buys? The duty on sugar is an affront to every American consumer. Michigan is an important sugar beet growing State, but only 10,000 of her 200,000 farmers grow beets. But three and a half million Michigan people are asked to add several million dollars to their sugar bill for the direct benefit of a few hundred sugar-mill stockholders and the very small indirect benefit of the handful of beet growers.

[From the Southland Farmer, of Houston, Tex.]

Written into law this tariff will bring the farming regions of the West and South under still greater bondage to the industrial sections of the East and North. The emergency tariff showed the fallacy of any tariff-helping prices for farm products to any extent worth considering. This tariff will add nothing worth while to returns for the farmer, but will add hundreds of millions to the cost of what he must buy.

The bill is one written by special interests for such interests, with little regard to the plain people of the country, and it takes no prophet to foretell what its enactment will cost the Republican Party responsible for it.

[From the St. Paul Dispatch, independent.]

Ridiculing the idea that it can "work the miracle of protecting industry and agriculture alike—a patent impossibility unless the fundamental laws of economics are repealed at the same time." "What of the great unregarded masses of consumers?"

[From the New York Herald, Republican.]

This bill completely shuts America out of foreign markets, except in our raw materials, notably cotton and copper.

[From the New York Evening Post, independent.]

It will make trouble for the consumer.

[From the New York Globe, independent.]

If we pass the McCumber tariff, or even the Fordney version of it, "we practically make Europe a present of the $11,000,000,000 she owes us." For "she can't pay in gold, and we wouldn't let her if she could, for it would be ruinous to us to receive it. She can only pay in goods, and against those goods we now propose to erect impossible tariff barriers."

—

[From the Kansas City Star.]

This bill is a serious economic mistake, the immediate effect of which will be to increase the cost of living. The farmer will find that the protection offered his products "is an illusion" while "the protection on what he has to buy will be real."

—

[From the Springfield Republican.]

The measure is open to severe attack by those who believe that the price of commodities should not be raised.

—

[From the Chicago Daily News.]

The Senate should modify it with a liberal hand in obedience to the logic of the world situation and of the just claims of the American consuming public.

—

[From the Indianapolis News.]

The bill represents an outrageous abuse of the taxing power.

—

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Republican.]

The bill as it stands fixes very high rates on all articles that are customarily dutiable and makes dutiable many that have heretofore been admitted free. There is in the schedules little evidence of any discriminating consideration of trade conditions as they relate to the national welfare. The Finance Committee of the Senate, like the Ways and Means Committee of the House, seems to have adopted the easy way of acceding to all class or trade demands and increased everything on the "horizontal" principle.

—

[From the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, independent.]

The public should be fully informed of the true character of the schemes that are hatching for the effective looting of its pocketbook.

—

[From the St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat, Republican.]

It will appear that the Senate committee has practically ignored the changed conditions and has legislated upon the basis of the conditions of 20 years ago.

—

[From the New York Evening Post, April 12, 1922, page 8.]

A TROUBLE-MAKING TARIFF.

"If the bill is as described, believers in tariff sanity and reasonableness have need to gird themselves for another battle." "It will give the American consumer a heavy jolt to see how the Senate tariff makers propose to tax his food." * * *

—

[From the New York World, April 15, 1922, page 10.]

NOT PARTISAN BUT LUNATIC.

* * * * * * *

This is not a partisan tariff but a lunatic tariff, put together by men who have little understanding of their job or of the world in which they live. Nobody could conceive of William McKinley's doing such a thing. Neither would Nelson Dingley or Nelson W. Aldrich have done it. They were extreme protectionists but they knew that there were limits to the application of the protective principle, and all of them had had experience with popular reactions against tariff extortion.

The leaderless Republicans of the Sixty-seventh Congress do not rise even to the dignity of protection Bourbonism; for while they have learned nothing, they have forgotten everything.

—

[From the New York World, April 10, 1922, page 10.]

VOTING OUT A TARIFF SUPERMONSTROSITY.

* * * * * * *

Tariff-protectionism even in pre-war days never dared offer so brazen and impudent a measure as this for sweating the American consumer. Coming at a time when world trade conditions prove the American market to be less in need of protection than ever, the monstrosity of it all is the more unspeakable. The reason why committee Senators throw out the plan is that they are thinking of this consumer and his vote.

—

[From the Baltimore Sun, April 13, 1922, page 10.]

* * * * * * *

This tariff bill represents postwar party madness. It is little more than a decade since the Payne-Aldrich law sent the Republican Party out into the political wilderness. If in a period of peace and normality such a measure aroused popular indignation and blasting resentment, how much more deeply will its resurrection stir the American people in a time of unrest and business depression like the present? Its stupidity as a trade proposition, as a prohibition of commerce, is only equaled by its gross injustice to the average American householder. We strike at our own commerce with one hand and we pick the pocket of the American consumer with the other. What but madness could dictate this suicidal policy on the top of all the troubles the war left behind it?

* * * * * * *

—

[From the Baltimore Sun, April 12, 1922.]

* * * * * * *

When exposed to the pitiless light of critical analysis, the composite Fordney-McCumber tariff measure is likely to prove even more of a "tariff of abominations" than was the Payne-Aldrich bill. It is an echo of past Republican glories. Bankers, economists, exporters, importers, all who envisage the United States as a world commercial power, frankly regard the measure as grotesque and impossible. Even its supporters let the economic argument go by default. * * *

[From the New York World, April 13, 1922, page 12.]

A TARIFF THAT SPELLS CALAMITY.

The Senate Finance Committee's new tariff comes into the world with few friends except among the beneficiaries of legalized extortion.

* * * * * * *

—

STATEMENT SUBMITTED BY H. E. MILES, CHAIRMAN FAIR TARIFF LEAGUE, A PROTECTIONIST ORGANIZATION.

COTTON GOODS.

Of the 16,000,000,000 yards made in the United States, two-thirds are produced as cheaply as in any other country. Notwithstanding this, the Senate rate on cotton cloths averages 45 per cent, in addition to which a new provision, paragraph 905–a, adds 15 per cent to about 80 per cent of all cotton-cloth imports.

The Senate tariff rates permits cotton manufacturers to add about $748,000,000 to their prices, although they are shipping great quantities abroad now at international prices, showing no need of protection whatever on ordinary qualities.

SILKS.

Proposed duties average from 56 per cent up on woven fabrics, many of which are made as cheaply here as anywhere, to 60 per cent on manufactures of silk and 90 per cent on laces and embroideries. There is only 12 to 14 per cent of labor in many silks, crêpes, and almost never more than 30 per cent. The difference in cost between the United States and Europe is 15 per cent. The Orient makes no silks of the kind made in the United States. Chinese or Shantung silk is taxed up to 220 per cent, which will double the price to the American consumer.

The present tariff, averaging 42.6 per cent, allows the manufacturers to add $214,000,000 above foreign prices, while the new tariff, averaging 62 per cent, allows them to add $274,000,000, which would be double at retail to the consumer.

RAW WOOL.

This is a protection of about $78,000,000 on a $65,000,000 wool clip, and will cost the consumers of clothing, blankets, etc., about $200,000,000. As the farmers consume one-half of all of our manufactures, this means that the farmers will pay about $100,000,000 more for their woolen goods in order that the sheep growers may get $78,000,000 protection.

WOOLEN GOODS.

The tariff on these runs from 42 per cent on woven fabrics to 90 per cent on laces, and adds $298,000,000 to the manufacturers' prices and twice this to the consumers at retail. It is very much more than can be justified by the principle of "the difference in the cost of production here and abroad."

KNIT GOODS AND HOSIERY.

We make hosiery of all sorts cheaper than anywhere else in the world and ship large quantities abroad. The Senate bill permits these people to charge domestic retailers $240,000,000 more than they would charge for the same goods for export. This would add nearly $500,000,000 to retail prices of hosiery and knit goods.

MEN'S COLLARS AND CUFFS.

The United States has specialized on this production until domestic costs are minimum, and the profits of the industry are great in good times. The Senate gives an average rate of 35 per cent, or $12,000,000, to the industry.

FILES.

These are made by a trust that charges domestic consumers to-day 25 per cent more than their prices on great quantities which they export. Undoubtedly the cost is as low here as anywhere, and yet Congress gives them 44 per cent, and on some sizes 80 per cent, a straight-out gift to the industry of $6,000,000, costing consumers nearly twice this.

An analysis of 29 industries under the proposed Senate rate shows that Congress allows them to add $3,077,000,000 above foreign prices. This is an addition of $1,000,000,000 to the present duties in these 29 industries and at least twice that on the whole tariff.

This will add two or three billion dollars to the cost of living when times get good, and the manufacturers add the tariff to their prices.

THE FARMER.

As farmers buy one-half of our manufactured output, they stand to lose some $2,000,000,000 from excessive prices on their purchases. Against this they have been given the highest rates they cared to ask for on agricultural products. There is, however, no possibility of their getting much advantage from most of their duties, which apply on such commodities as wheat, corn, oats, cotton, etc., of which we export a great surplus at international prices. Only on wool, sugar, citrus fruits, nuts, and a few small crops, upon which imports are considerable, will the farmer be able to add the tariff and increase the cost of living, as the manufacturers will. The farmers will lose $5 under this tariff for every dollar that they gain on their own rates.

Wage earners would be hurt by these rates in two ways. Their wages are being reduced in all industries and these rates would further reduce the purchasing power of their wages at least 15 per cent.

General buying will be decreased, which will lessen employment, to the hurt of the wage earner. Also our exports exceed our imports annually by more than $2,000,000,000, and we will lose the wages that this $2,000,000,000 carried to foreign countries in so far as other nations can stop buying from us and give their trade to other countries.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I assume that this bill will be passed, probably pretty much as it has been reported by the majority members of the Committee on Finance. I understand there will be concert of action on the other side of the Chamber, and, of course, that means that Senators on that side can put these rates through if they wish to put them through, and I think they do; but the bill will be passed, Mr. President, not because it meets the judgment of a majority of this body; it will be passed not because the majority of the Senators subscribe to the excessively high rates imposed on products in general use, or to the delegation of the extraordinary powers which are to be given to the Chief Executive; but it will be passed by the majority, nevertheless, because a considerable part of the majority are willing to forego their opposition to what they regard and what in their hearts they know to be unjust impositions and oppression upon the masses of the people in order to get concessions—concessions which I believe are worthless in many instances—for those in whom they are especially interested.

Mr. President, may I ask in conclusion, why should I, because I may want something in which the people of my State are deeply interested, be willing to impose upon the people not only of my State but of the whole Nation unjust burdens and oppressive and iniquitous taxation? If there is one Senator here who ought to be the friend of agriculture, it is myself, for I have nothing of this world's goods other than the home in which I live, except farms which I try to operate; but why should the friends of agriculture, whose participation in the benefits and gratuities and subsidies of this bill is inconsequential—as to many things only a "gold brick"—why should the friends of agriculture swap away the birthright of the farmers of this country for a mess of pottage?

Mr. President, if the passage of the bill is accomplished it will be the result of what I am loath to call a swap in the parceling out of the manifold subsidies and gratuities carried in this bill; and thus the log-rolling process by which it is claimed the river and harbor bills are passed will be applied in levying taxes upon the people amounting to billions of dollars for the benefit of the special interests, while of all the vast contributions of the people to the protected interests, running into the billions, only the relatively small and pitiable sum of $350,000,000, it is estimated, will find its way into the Public Treasury.

If the bill shall pass, the only hope lies in an appeal from the action of this body to the judgment, conscience, and patriotism of the American people; and that their decision will in that event overrule and set aside the action of the Congress, I have no doubt.

Mr. President, as I believe in an overruling Providence, I confidently believe that, if this bill is passed and becomes a law, so soon as the people have an opportunity to do so they will express their condemnation; and the Republican Party, which in 1912 because of its oppressive tariff taxation was thrown out of power, will for the same reason meet in the ides of November a more disastrous defeat even than that of a decade ago.

I wish to say in conclusion that we want and that there must be full and free discussion of this bill. The people are entitled to demand that of us. They are entitled to know what this bill means and they have the right to demand that their representatives shall understand what the bill means to the American people before they vote upon it. The interest of the people in this bill is of such a character, it is so far-reaching, and so vital that each of us owes it to our constituents to do what he can to make clear what, if it should pass, will be its effects upon the business and the happiness and the general welfare of the American people as a whole, and to this end we must discuss it to the full measure of what is necessary to make its purpose and probable effects clear to the mind, not only of the American people but of their representatives in the two Houses of Congress in the hope that in view of the light that discussion may throw upon it, the menace of its adoption may be averted and this cup of bitterness pass from the lips of the people of this Republic.

Mr. President, I am sure that on this side of the Chamber there will be no resort to dilatory methods or discussion. There is sufficient in the bill that needs exposure without injecting any extraneous matters, but, if it is to be passed, let us see that it is only passed with full understanding of what it implies and means. If it must be passed after we shall have thrown upon it in our discussions all the light that we can to the end that it may be understood by the people and by their representatives who are to act for them in this Chamber, the more quickly it is passed, if, as I said, it must be passed, the better; for the more quickly, in that event, will begin to gather the righteous wrath of an outraged people that will sweep from power in this Government the party responsible for an act of such consummate injustice and folly.

Now, Mr. President, I have tried to consider this bill with fairness and with conservatism. I do not wish to speak harshly of it, and yet when I consider the danger to the happiness, the peace, and the prosperity of the people of this country which lurks in it, I can not withhold a frank expression of my condemnation and of my fears.

It is my deliberate judgment that when you couple the extortionate rates with the proposition to delegate congressional control of the purse strings of the country, this bill is fraught with more danger to the people of the country and the institutions under which we live than any bill which ever crossed the threshhold of this Chamber. Its first effect will be oppressive to the masses. It will lead to the wholesale monopolization of all the protected products of industry. It will lead to the extortions which always follow unhampered monopoly. We shall in the not distant future see here, if this legislative policy is adopted and long continued, conditions similar to those of feudalism in the middle ages. Our great tariff barons and trust magnates will be as strongly entrenched here as were the feudal lords in those days, followed by the general commercial enslavement of the masses.

I hope I love my country; I hope my heart beats sympathetically with my fellow man; and because I love my country and sympathize with my fellows I am ready to dedicate every ounce of strength and energy I have to thwart by fair and open means this impending calamity.

I suppose the bill will be passed—passed not because it meets the judgment of this body; passed not because a majority of Senators subscribe to the excessive rates imposed on certain products of general use, or in the delegation of the extraordinary powers to the Executive, but passed by a majority because a considerable part of that majority are willing to forego their opposition to what they regard as unjust impositions upon the masses in order to get concessions for those in whom they are specially interested.

I also wish to incorporate as an appendix to my remarks certain data with reference to the effect of these duties upon the price of a considerable number of manufactured products.

APPENDIX A.

Imported articles showing relative costs in marks and dollars in 1914 and 1921.

No.	Items.	F. o. b. Germany.				Value of mark, 1914.	Value of mark, 1921.
		1914		1921
		Marks.	Dollars.	Marks.	Dollars.
B/499	Carmalt's artery forceps 6¼-inch, each	1.40	$0.33	52.70	$0.85	$0.24	$0.016
B/624	Straight scissors, 5-inch, each	.55	.13	15.50	.25	.24	.016
C/1425	Graef's cataract knife, each	.85	.20	27.90	.45	.24	.016
B/4547	Langenbeck's metacarpel saw, each	1.70	.40	46.50	.75	.24	.016
C/15904	Tooth forceps, each	1.90	.45	65.72	1.06	.24	.016
1500	Harmonicas, gross	17.40	4.17	403.20	6.45	.24	.016
	Jointed dolls, 60 centimeters, dozen	20.50	4.92	579.00	9.26	.24	.016
2/0	Toy horses, dozen	6.30	1.51	150.00	2.40	.24	.016
6543	Door locks, dozen	9.80	2.33	375.00	6.00	.238	.016
1195	Pliers, dozen	3.00	.71	108.50	1.74	.238	.016
118	Scissors, 4-inch, dozen	4.80	1.14	131.50	2.10	.238	.016
16	Razors, ⅝-inch, dozen	19.45	4.63	429.50	6.87	.238	.016
290	Chiffon velvet, meter	4.70	1.12	106.83	1.71	.238	.016
	Cotton gloves, dozen	9.00	2.14	500.00	8.00	.238	.016
397	Laces, meter	1.47	.35	40.00	.64	.238	.016
860	Hosiery, dozen	7.25	1.81	118.00	1.89	.238	.016

APPENDIX B.

(Federal Reserve Board statement for the press. For release in morning papers, Saturday, April 8, 1922.)

The New York office (50 Broad Street) of the Federal Reserve Board has received a wireless from the American commissioner in Germany, giving the wholesale price index of the Frankfurter Zeitung for April 3, 1922. According to this index there has been an increase of 20.7 per cent in the general level of wholesale prices in Germany during the month of March, as compared with an increase of 23.6 per cent during February. The all-commodities index stands at 5,899 as compared with 100 in the middle of 1914

Wholesale prices index number for Germany.

[Compiled by the Frankfurter Zeitung.]

(Prices January, 1920=100.)

	Foods, etc.	Textiles and leather.	Minerals.	Sundries.	All commodities.
Middle of 1914	11.46	3.75	6.46	12.2	8.9
1921.[1]
April	136	79	115	180	130
May	133	78	112	194	132
June	127	70	109	196	128
July	145	79	115	191	135
August	214	84	117	186	160
September	211	96	125	193	164
October	227	120	151	208	184
November	317	173	210	251	249
December	362	241	364	295	298
1922.
January	384	241	260	364	317
February	407	256	292	414	352
March	540	270	365	490	435
April	654	334	418	606	525

[1] Not always the first day of the month.

Wholesale prices index number for Germany—Continued.
(Recomputed with middle of 1914 prices=100.)

	Foods, etc.	Textiles and leather.	Minerals.	Sundries.	All commodities.
Middle of 1914	100	100	100	100	100
1921.[1]
April	1,187	2,107	1,780	1,475	1,461
May	1,161	2,080	1,734	1,590	1,483
June	1,108	1,867	1,687	1,607	1,438
July	1,265	2,107	1,780	1,566	1,517
August	1,867	2,240	1,811	1,525	1,798
September	1,841	2,560	1,935	1,582	1,843
October	1,981	3,200	2,337	1,705	2,067
November	2,766	4,613	3,251	2,057	2,798
December	3,159	6,427	5,635	3,418	3,348
1922.
January	3,351	6,427	4,025	2,984	3,562
February	3,551	6,827	4,520	3,393	3,955
March	4,712	7,200	5,650	4,016	4,888
April	5,707	8,907	6,471	4,967	5,899

[1] Not always the first day of the month.

The Frankfurter Zeitung index is unweighted, and is based upon the prices of 77 commodities. The latest figures are subject to revision. Figures have recently been entirely revised.

(Federal Reserve Board statement for the press. For release in morning papers, Tuesday, March 14, 1922.)

The New York office (50 Broad Street) of the Federal Reserve Board has received a cable message from the General Statistical Bureau of France giving the wholesale and retail price indexes for France for the month of February. Wholesale prices, which declined 3.7 per cent during the month of January, showed a further decrease of 2.5 per cent in February. Retail prices also declined 3.8 per cent during February, as compared with a decrease of 1.2 per cent in January, according to these compilations.

Wholesale price index for France.

[Compiled by General Statistical Bureau of France.]
(Prices 1901–1910=100.)

Month.	Animal foods.	Vegetable foods.	Sugar, coffee, and cocoa.	Foods (20).	Minerals.	Textiles.	Sundries.	Raw materials (25).	All.
1921.
February	533.9	380.8	358.6	437.6	360.5	465.6	463.7	435.3	436.3
March	478.9	386.8	388.8	424.0	346.8	438.6	431.7	409.6	416.0
April	467.6	417.8	380.2	430.2	336.6	367.7	407.9	378.3	401.3
May	447.1	414.6	335.5	411.8	319.6	330.3	390.3	356.1	380.8
June	412.4	441.5	357.8	413.1	313.4	325.8	374.7	345.8	375.7
July	416.2	436.4	416.6	424.4	304.1	338.9	377.1	347.5	381.6
August	437.5	464.7	373.5	411.6	293.8	375.7	391.2	360.2	383.0
September	439.8	373.6	412.1	407.8	303.9	454.2	407.5	389.7	397.7
October	406.6	366.3	323.6	374.0	314.1	456.9	401.0	390.1	383.0
November	390.8	366.8	343.4	371.7	332.6	453.6	398.0	393.0	383.6
December	382.7	363.0	318.1	361.9	323.2	438.5	400.9	388.2	376.5
1922.
January	364.1	346.8	324.8	349.3	309.2	424.3	385.3	373.3	362.7
February	358.1	345.4	337.1	348.8	290.0	404.2	375.6	358.5	354.2

(Recomputed with prices in 1913=100.)

Months.	Animal foods.	Vegetable foods.	Sugar, coffee, and cocoa.	Foods (20).	Minerals.	Textiles.	Sundries.	Raw materials (25).	All.
1921.
February	452	317	338	378	300	398	422	378	377
March	406	322	367	366	289	375	392	355	360
April	396	348	359	372	281	314	371	328	347
May	379	346	317	356	266	282	355	309	329
June	349	368	338	357	261	278	341	300	325
July	353	364	393	366	253	290	343	301	330
August	371	337	352	355	245	321	356	312	331
September	373	311	389	352	253	388	370	338	344
October	345	305	305	323	262	391	365	338	331
November	331	306	324	321	277	388	362	341	332
December	324	303	300	313	269	375	364	337	326
1922.
January	309	289	306	302	258	363	350	324	314
February	303	288	318	301	242	345	341	311	306

Retail prices in Paris.
(Prices July, 1914=100.)

1921:
February	382
March	358
April	328
May	317
June	312
July	306
August	317
September	329
October	331
November	326
December	323
1922:
January	319
February	307

The wholesale price index is unweighted and based upon 45 price quotations; the retail on 13 quotations, weighted according to family consumption. The latest figures are subject to revision.

APPENDIX C.

Description.	Selling price foreign article.	Payne-Aldrich.	Underwood.	Senate bill.
Pocketknives	13 per cent above price of domestic.	Specific rates equivalent to 80 per cent.	55 per cent	Compound rates equivalent to 160 per cent.
Surgical instruments.	4 per cent above price of domestic.	45 per cent	20 per cent	Compound rates equivalent to 74 per cent.
Common linen toweling 19 inches wide.	12 per cent under price of domestic.	50 per cent	30 per cent	60 per cent.

Ten per cent advance over the Payne-Aldrich rates brings the selling price of the imported article slightly above the price of the domestic article.

The following imported articles are selling in the United States at a higher price than the comparable domestic articles, noting that the rates of duty in the Senate bill have been materially increased:

Description.	Payne-Aldrich.	Underwood.	Senate bill.
China	60 per cent	55 per cent	70 per cent.
Decorated earthenware	do	40 per cent	50 per cent.
Antifriction balls for use in ball bearings.	45 per cent	20 per cent	10 cents pound and 35 per cent (equals 47 per cent).
Card clothing	45 and 55 cents square foot equals about 28 per cent.	35 per cent	45 per cent.
Fishhooks and fishing tackles	45 per cent	20 per cent	Do.
Metal snap fasteners	50 per cent	15 per cent	55 to 60 per cent.
Willow clothes basket	35 per cent	23 per cent	45 to 60 per cent.
Furniture of wood	do	do	35 per cent.
Cheese	6 cents pound equals 10 per cent to 15 per cent.	23 per cent	Over 30 cents pound 25 per cent.
Ladies' cotton embroidered handkerchiefs.	60 per cent	60 per cent	70 per cent.
Embroidery cotton	20 per cent	20 per cent	25 to 45 per cent.
Scotch gingham	Specific rates	do	Specific rates; minimum about 43 per cent.
English cloth suiting, etc., over 4 ounces.	44 cents pound, 50 per cent.	35 per cent	49 cents pound, 55 per cent.

The selling prices of the above imported articles in the United States range from 10 to 60 per cent higher than the domestic merchandise.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PHIPPS. I submit a first conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Assistant Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10101) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 5, 8, 9, 10, 15, 16, 17, 20, 23, 25, 26, 27, 30, 33, 39, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 58, 65 68, 70, 71, 73, 75, 77, 80, 82, 83, 84, 85, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 93, 94, 95, 99, 100, 102, 103, 105, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 118, 120, 122, 123, 124, 126, 127, 129, 132, 133, 135, 136, 138, 140, 143, 145, 146, 147, 148, 151, 153, 159, 160, 166, 177, 180, 181, 184, and 188.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 6, 11, 13, 14, 19, 21, 22, 28, 29, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 41, 42, 50, 52, 53, 54, 57, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 66, 72, 92, 96, 98, 104, 113, 125, 128, 130, 131, 134, 139, 141, 144, 156, 157, 158, 161, 165, 167, 170, 171, 173, 174, 176, 178, 179, 182, 183, 185, and 189, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "one $2,000, two at $1,500 each"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$130,070"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$58,120"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "laborer and janitor, $480;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$182,210"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Southeast Branch Library: For salaries in operating the Southeast Branch Library, $3,500: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,200 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: " : Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be expended in conducting library stations not now in existence, but this limitation shall not apply to public-school buildings and the Southeast Branch Library"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"PROPERTY YARD.

"For alterations and improvements to the old Mott School for use as a property yard, to be immediately available, $2,500: Provided, That a wire fence shall be built around the property."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$250,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$233,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$460,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$375,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "apartment houses, and large"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 81: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,250"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$242,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the erection of an eight-room addition to the Lovejoy School, $125,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "forty-two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 119: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,694,786.36"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Additional amount required for the completion of a station house on the site already acquired at Seventeenth Street and Rhode Island Avenue NE., $20,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$18,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 149: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For repairs to buildings, including the completion of alterations of the old psychopathic hospital building to provide quarters for female nurses and female employees, $10,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 152: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 152, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "supervisor and placing officer, $1,740; investigator and placing officer, $1,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 154: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$28,140"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 162: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 162, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$5,040"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 168: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 168, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed, insert "fifty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 169: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 169, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$81,560"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 172: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 172, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment, insert the following: "including not to exceed $500 for repairs to the superintendent's residence"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on Senate amendments numbered 1, 78, 79, 86, 101, 114, 115, 116, 142, 155, 163, 164, 175, 186, and 187.

L. C. PHIPPS,
W. L. JONES,
CARTER GLASS,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

C. R. DAVIS,
ROBERT E. EVANS,
BEN JOHNSON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, just a word of explanation. The points of disagreement between the conferees are really reduced to two or three items. The greater number of those reported in disagreement must be submitted back to the House under its rule, so that we should have a further conference. I therefore move the adoption of the report, and that the Senate request a further conference on the amendments still in disagreement, and that the Chair appoint the conferees to represent the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator. An amendment was put on the bill in the Senate, consisting of a bill that had passed the Senate in relation to taxation, and the exemption from taxation of a certain part of the value of real estate that was improved. Is that one of the amendments still in disagreement?

Mr. PHIPPS. That is an amendment still in disagreement; that is to say, it has to go back to the House.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, there was a provision in the bill for the purchase of three parks. What has been done with that?

Mr. PHIPPS. That is the other item which is in disagreement. The expression of the Senate was that those park properties should be acquired. The conferees on the part of the Senate are holding out against a recession. We insist that the House conferees shall recede.

Mr. NELSON. One was to buy 80 acres of land out here at $77,000 an acre, was it not?

Mr. PHIPPS. Oh, no; the amount is lower than that, but it is some eighty-odd acres, at a pretty good round price. The House, however, has refused to assent to the desire of the Senate, as expressed in the appropriation bill and by a separate bill which passed the Senate, taking in those park properties. That item is in disagreement.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator for a statement of the important items that have been agreed upon as reported by the conferees.

Mr. PHIPPS. The ones that were in disagreement that are important are the schools, the streets, the new water plant, and the home for the feeble-minded. I think that about covers the important items that were in disagreement.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, the appropriation for the feeble-minded went through as the bill passed the Senate?

Mr. PHIPPS. Not exactly in terms as it passed the Senate, but the House conferees are recommending that appropriation to the House with an amendment.

Mr. KING. Does the amendment cut down the appropriation?

Mr. PHIPPS. It does reduce the amount of the appropriation by utilizing property already owned by the Government, and reduces the total amount of the authorization by approximately $40,000—I believe $50,000 in total.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado moves that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments in disagreements, and ask for a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. GLASS conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not think I have made the usual request for unanimous consent that the committee amendments be first considered by the Senate, and I make that request at this time.

Mr. KING. I do not want to object to that, and perhaps it is the better way, but may I suggest to the Senator that many of the items as to which amendments have been reported by the Senate committee are so closely connected with items preceding and following, and the discussion of the amendments will relate so closely to other items, it would seem that if amendments are to be tendered to items as to which no amendments have been offered by the committee it might facilitate action upon the bill if we would take up for emendation items as to which no amendment has been offered by the Senate committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think amendments will be in order to amendments of the committee, and I think it will facilitate the consideration of the bill if we will follow the usual course of considering the Senate committee amendments first.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to my colleague that in every case where a rate depends upon an item in which the rate is changed those changes have been made all through the bill. There is no change made in an item which affects another product cared for in another part of the bill where the committee has not made those changes to compensate for whatever increase or reduction there may be. I think the request made by the Senator from North Dakota is the proper way to proceed, and that has always been done in the case of tariff bills.

Mr. KING. I appreciate that that is the usual procedure, and I shall not interpose any objection, although let me say that some of the items are so closely related to other items which have not been mentioned by the Senate committee that one could scarcely discuss the Senate committee amendments without crossing the line and discussing some other items in the same paragraph, dealing with some other acid or drug or compound analogous to the one as to which an amendment has been offered by the Senate committee. However, I have no objection to the course suggested by the Senator from North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from North Dakota desire to go on with the bill this evening?

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought that we ought to continue at least until from 5 to half past 5 o'clock in the early stages of the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. I am at the service of the Chairman.

Mr. McCUMBER. When the Senator suspends for the day I shall ask for an executive session.

Mr. KING. When I yielded the floor yesterday I had not concluded my general observations upon the Fordney-McCumber bill, which we are now considering. I was about to call attention to a provision in the bill dealing with the embargo on dyes.

Mr. President, the Senate Finance Committee, it would seem, surrendered to the dye monopoly when preparing the provisions of this bill dealing with embargoes, and the provisions are such as were desired by the dye monopoly; its demands were impudent, partisan, and un-American. The committee have brought in an amendment to the House bill which is so extraordinary as to call for consideration. It can not be called a "joker," as that word is so frequently employed in legislation, because its effects are so palpable. The provision referred to is attached to paragraph 26 and provides that it shall be unlawful to import dyes or coal-tar products in any package, case, or container which bears a trade-mark or brand registered by any person domiciled in the United States, and further provides that any such article or package imported into the United States shall be seized and confiscated by process of libel for condemnation according to the practice in admiralty, and the court may require the destruction of such merchandise or the obliteration of the trade-mark or brand it bears. This amendment is added to the bill in the interest of the so-called Chemical Foundation, of which corporation practically all the dye manufacturers of the country are members. The Chemical Foundation pretends to hold and to own all the process patents covering the making of dyes and coal-tar chemicals which were seized by the Alien Property Custodian. Even though the Chemical Foundation be the legal owner of these patents and their related trade-marks and brands, there is certainly no adequate reason to accord the foundation any different legal statuts or remedies than are provided by law for the holder of any patent or the registrant of any trade-mark or brand.

A transaction most extraordinary occurred which involves the dye monopoly and is pertinent to a discussion of the bill which is now before us. I desire to briefly refer to it at this point, but shall elaborate the subject at length when we discuss the provisions of the bill dealing with dyes and the dye embargo and other provisions found in the bill drawn for the purpose of perpetuating the monopoly and destroying competition in the American market.

Senators will recall that under the provisions of the trading with the enemy act the Alien Property Custodian was authorized to sequester the property of German and Austrian nationals found within the United States. I make no comment upon the wisdom or propriety of that legislation, nor shall I at this time refer to the contention made by many that such procedure was in violation of the treaty of 1828, entered into between the United States and Prussia, and which later on was adopted by the German Government and was in existence when the war between this Republic and Germany was entered upon. The Alien Property Custodian seized the property of the value of hundreds of millions of dollars which belonged to German and Austrian nationals; property which had been invested in the United States in good faith under treaty provisions and in the belief that it was safe and secure.

The Alien Property Custodian seized 4,500 patents owned by German nationals, and many of which cover products and commodities manufactured in the United States as well as commodities imported from Germany. I am now making no complaint as to the act of sequestration or the objects which the United States had in view when the law referred to was enacted. I should add in passing that it was the intention of Congress at the time the law was enacted to return the property seized at the conclusion of the war to the owners of the same. After the seizure of these patents, some of which cover dyes, a corporation was formed known as the Chemical Foundation. This corporation was organized by Government officials connected with the Alien Property Custodian's office, and I think the evidence will show that the Du Pont Corporation and other corporations engaged in the manufacture of dyestuffs were parties openly or secretly to the formation of this corporation. The new corporation was officered by officials of the Government who were connected with the Alien Property Custodian's office, and after they had formed the Chemical Foundation Co. they transferred these 4,500 patents to the new corporation, pretending that the transfer was a bona fide and valid sale. In other words, officials of the Government, after having seized the property, formed a company, put themselves and their friends in control of it, and pretended to sell property worth millions to their creatures for a sum much less than the property was worth. Some of these same officials are still officers of the Chemical Foundation.

When they severed their connection with the Alien Property Custodian's Office they continued to hold their positions in the Chemical Foundation Co., and they now insist that that company is the owner of these patents. Their position is that the German owners of the patents have been deprived of the same and all their interests and property therein by this high-handed and what I regard as illegal proceeding.

As stated, these patents had been recognized by the laws of the United States, as Germany had permitted Americans to take out patents in that country. Indeed, as I am advised, many American patents have been registered, or as we say in common parlance, "taken out" in other countries. Treaty regulations, as well as a spirit of comity and a proper application of broader principles of international law, permit the nationals of various countries to acquire and own property in countries other than the ones to which they owe allegiance, and to take out patents in countries other than their own and to protect them in the use and enjoyment of the same. These mutual and reciprocal treaties and regulations deal with these questions in a broad and proper way. Our Government has always contended for the immunity of private property, and has insisted that Americans should be permitted to own and enjoy property in other lands as we have permitted nationals of other countries to own and enjoy the benefits of their property within our country.

Under these patents industries were built up in the United States—some of them owned by Germans, others by Americans, or by Americans and Germans. As stated, these patents, after being seized by the Alien Property Custodian, were confiscated and transferred for a wholly inadequate consideration to the Chemical Foundation. The value of these patents is variously estimated from ten millions to fifty millions of dollars. I regard the transfer of these patents as violative of the treaty to which I referred and as in contravention of the principles of international law. I think it was a shameful procedure. The price paid was so wholly inadequate as to shock the conscience of any person familiar with the facts. No chancellor, in my judgment, would approve the transaction and would promptly set aside the sale. It is the duty, as I view the case, of the Attorney General to promptly bring suit against the Chemical Foundation to set aside the alleged sale as fraudulent. The transaction can not be defended in morals or find support on any theory that should govern the relations between civilized nations. When the sale is set aside and the property retransferred to the Alien Property Custodian, Congress can make such disposition of it as it sees fit. We are not pirates or brigands, although this transaction would seem to indicate a lack of appreciation of the principles of honor which should exist between nations.

When we come to a discussion of the dye embargo and cognate questions, there will be more said about this transaction.

The patent laws give the owners of patents a monopoly for the manufacture and sale of articles under the patents in this country, and also give registrants of trade-marks and brands the exclusive use of such marks and brands in this country. The courts of equity will protect the exclusive use of such patents, trade-marks, and brands by injunction against the sale of any articles manufactured under such patents or bearing such marks or brands, and courts of law will award adequate compensatory damages in cases where sales of such articles have been made. It is a proposition without precedent that the confiscatory process shall be applied to articles of commerce which are in themselves perfectly sound and wholesome, and the passing of which in commerce may merely violate some private contract or right for which private legal remedies are available and adequate. This amendment would invest the customs officers with judicial powers to pass upon questions of the ownership of patents, trade-marks, and trade brands, and would also compel the Government of the United States to assume burdens for the vindication of mere private claims and rights. This amendment is utterly vicious in principle. It is without warrant or justification and should be excised from the bill, and should not receive the approval of even the most reactionary Senator who sits in this Chamber.

The majority of the committee in the report on the chemicals, oils, and paints schedule has weighed the monopolistic demands and animus of a few favored manufacturers who now have an effectual control of the American market against the interests of the public and the welfare of the industries of the country. It is not a public view, it is not even a proper partisan view, it is a private special and selfish view of fiscal legislation which has dictated and determined the rates reported in this schedule.

Mr. President, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], during the course of the discussion yesterday, suggested that there should be put into the RECORD a list of the items transferred from the dutiable list of the Underwood law to the nondutiable or free list in the pending bill.

Mr. President, I have prepared such a statement, dealing with the items in schedule 1 of this bill, showing the rates fixed in the Underwood-Simmons law, in the Payne-Aldrich act, and in the House bill as well as in the Senate bill now before us. With reference to the matter suggested by my colleague, I will say that I prepared a table which I have here and shall ask to have inserted as an appendix at the close of my remarks. The headings are as follows: "Name of commodity," "Free under Payne-Aldrich," "Free under Underwood," "Same as Underwood," "Same as Payne-Aldrich," "Higher than Underwood," "Higher than Payne-Aldrich"; in other words, the table shows the items which were free of duty in the Underwood law and in the Payne-Aldrich act, the items in which there is no change from the Payne-Aldrich law, and the items which have been transferred to the free list which were formerly dutiable, as well as the increases in the pending bill above the Payne-Aldrich act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request will be granted and the table printed as requested.

Mr. KING. Of course, there are several thousand chemicals, medicines, and drugs covered by this schedule, not specifically named therein, but which are included in what are called basket clauses or provisions, so that when I mention only a few hundred items I want it understood that those mentioned or grouped do not include, by name at least, the thousands covered by Schedule 1 of this bill.

Mr. President, I have examined with some care the nondutiable list appearing in the Senate bill, and compared the same with the free list found in the Underwood law. There are 23 commodities dutiable under the Underwood law that have been placed on the free list in the Senate bill. The senior Senator from Utah or the chairman of the committee will correct me if I have made any error in my computations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator went into detail and found that there are many items mentioned in Schedule 1 of this bill that have never been mentioned before in a tariff bill.

Mr. KING. Not many. I have them checked here. For instance, stearic acid, chloracetic acid. I am speaking of chemical Schedule 1. I am dealing with that now.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I speak of. In dealing with the chemical schedule I have in mind the intermediates are found in paragraph 25. If the Senator will take each of the items found in paragraph 25, all of which are intermediate dyes, he will find that in the administration of the tariff laws in the past many of them have been classed not as intermediates but as dyes themselves, some of them on the free list and some of them dutiable.

It was stated here the other day that it was not known whether anyone could read paragraph 25. I will admit that it is difficult to read unless one is well acquainted with chemicals, but every item mentioned in paragraph 25 is specifically designated and the wording of it is such that one can tell just what state of the finished dye has been reached.

I will say to my colleague that it is pretty difficult to state just how many of those items were treated under the administration feature of the tariff laws, whether under the free list or under the dutiable list. I think the figure the Senator gives on dyes themselves, the finished products, more than likely is correct; in fact, I know that it is nearly so.

Mr. KING. To prepare this table was a task onerous and somewhat difficult. I have tried to be accurate, and if any error is discovered, I shall be glad to be advised. The reports at the disposal of the majority members of the committee are correct, even if my findings are inaccurate.

Mr. SMOOT. It is near enough as to the finished product to need no correction.

Mr. KING. Let me repeat, there are 23 commodities that are dutiable under the Underwood law which have been placed on the free list in the pending tariff bill. I am speaking, of course, of the chemical schedule. The list covers 21 essential oils, not produced in this country to any extent, and which are imported and used primarily for the manufacture of perfumes and cosmetics.

I have not consulted with the distinguished leader in charge of the matter upon this side of the aisle [Mr. SIMMONS], or with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who was so prominent in the preparation of the Underwood law; but I make bold to say that one of the reasons why these oils were even placed upon the dutiable list in the Underwood Act was because they were regarded not as essential but as luxuries. They were used in cosmetics and in articles which, because of their high cost, could be purchased only by the rich.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator would be more accurate in stating that they were put there for revenue purposes.

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly the revenue feature was before the minds of the drafters of the Underwood law. It is known that the act was founded upon the theory of obtaining revenue, but it recognized the industrial situation and laid duties upon many commodities so high as to constitute what Republicans are pleased to denominate "protection." The thought was also in the minds of the drafters of the bill that luxuries should be heavily taxed, and that the commodities so important to the lives and welfare of the people should be free or taxed as lightly as the situation and industrial and economic conditions warranted.

No one could call the bill a free-trade measure. I recall that after the law had been enacted a comparison was instituted between the rates of the Payne-Aldrich law and the rates of the Underwood Act and in the general average of all the rates, and surprise was expressed that the difference between the rates of the two laws was so much less than had generally been supposed. I repeat, the Underwood law sought to raise revenue and lighten the burdens of taxation upon the masses of the people and to secure as much revenue as could be justly and properly obtained from luxuries and from those commodities which, because of their great value, would be purchased by people of wealth only. It seems to me, however, that the pending bill is one to tax the poor, to place burdens upon them, and to lighten the burdens that would rest upon the rich because of their large consumption of luxuries.

It will be observed from the table which I have asked to be inserted in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks that of the 340 articles there provided for by name, or in the general basket clause of Schedule 1, I was able to make but 311 tariff rate comparisons, because a number of those articles, as was suggested by my colleague, were not upon former schedules.

Of the 311 articles so compared, 139 are provided for in the pending bill at rates of duty higher than the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, 33 are dutiable that were free under the Payne-Aldrich law, and 68 have the same rates of duties as under that law.

It will also be further noted that of the 311 commodities, 225 have been accorded rates of duty higher than in the Underwood law, 39 have been made dutiable that were free under the Underwood law, and 44 have the same rates of duty as under the Underwood law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, again I think the Senator ought to give the Senate the information that the reason for the increased rates is because all intermediate dyes have now been placed upon the dutiable list. In the Payne-Aldrich law all of them were on the free list. Now, we are transferring them to the dutiable list, with rather a high rate of duty, I will say to my colleague, and, of course, these items have to be increased to compensate for the duty that was placed upon the intermediates.

If my colleague will allow me just a moment, so the Senate may understand what was the attitude in 1909 of the Finance Committee of the Senate, I would like to make a brief statement.

Mr. KING. I yield to my colleague for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. In 1909 the Senate Committee on Finance made up its mind to have established in the United States a dye industry. That was the first time that action was ever taken by the Senate placing intermediates upon the free list. The House passed the bill with all intermediates on the free list, as had been the case in every tariff bill passed in the history of the country. The Finance Committee of the Senate, as I said, decided to establish the dye industry in the United States, and the only way that it could be done was to place a duty upon the intermediates. The Senate did that. The bill went to conference and the House would not yield to the action of the Senate and so the intermediates went back on the free list.

I want to say now to all the dye manufacturers of the United States that that is when the mistake was made. We only had a few industries in the United States at that time called dye manufactories, and all they did was to import intermediates and make the dyes in this country. The Finance Committee in 1909 decided to change that policy, but the House would not yield, and we had to give it up. If the policy of the Senate in 1909 had been followed, the United States never would have been found in the condition that we were upon the outbreak of the World War; we could have had an established industry. But no. All that those who were interested in it wanted to do was to mix intermediates and make the dyestuffs from intermediates made in Germany, so we had to yield. That is, in brief, the history of the case.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one observation in reply to the suggestion of my colleague as to what should be stated with respect to intermediates. What I have submitted to-day was in response to a suggestion made by him yesterday, and is a very comprehensive statement; but before we get through with the debate I shall go into the matter in further detail.

Mr. SMOOT. I knew that my colleague did not want to have the impression go out that the Finance Committee had increased the rate on the number of dyes mentioned by him without some reason for doing so. The reason is as I stated it. I know that my colleague, if he has given attention to the schedule, as of course he has, found the answer in one sentence, and that is that the intermediates have been now placed upon the dutiable list which were originally on the free list.

Mr. KING. In the tables which I have presented I classed paragraphs 25 and 26 as two items, though they compose more than 112, which is giving to this bill a credit to which it is not entitled; but I shall call attention to that later. Of course, it is obvious that when intermediates, employed as the basis of finished products, are transferred from the free to the dutiable list, there must, under the theory upon which this bill was framed, be corresponding modifications in the schedules containing the finished commodities. But I do not admit that the rates of raw materials and intermediates and finished products, as they are found in this bill, bear any just or rational or logical relationship. Generally speaking, I concede that if, after rates have been fixed in a bill, for finished products, upon the theory of free raw materials or intermediates, and later such intermediates and raw materials are transferred to the dutiable list, there is some reason for increasing the rates upon the finished commodities, providing such rates were reasonable when first accepted and were founded absolutely upon the basis of free raw materials and free intermediates.

My colleague has referred to the dye industry. As I understood my colleague there was an implied criticism of the dye industry, because those engaged in the same apparently did not attempt to produce intermediates here, but imported them from abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. It was intended as a criticism.

Mr. KING. I think probably they are subject to criticism; however, it is known that prior to 1909, and since then until quite recently, not much attention was given to the by-products of coke ovens. But as these by-products have been developed—and they are the foundation not only of the intermediates but also of the dyes themselves—the necessity for the importation of such intermediates has diminished in most cases.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true as to certain intermediates.

Mr. KING. Yes; it is true as to certain intermediates. So in the early stages of the dye industry, when we had not developed the coke-oven products to the high degree of proficiency and efficiency that we have recently done, there was a little more excuse for importing intermediates than exists at the present time.

APPENDIX.

Table showing comparisons of rates of duty on commodities provided for in Schedule 1 of Senate bill with Underwood-Simmons law and Payne-Aldrich law.

(Cross (X) opposite the name of commodity is placed under the various headings to indicate whether free under Payne-Aldrich law or free under Underwood law, or having same rate of duty in Senate bill as in Underwood law, or having same rate of duty in Senate bill as in Payne-Aldrich law, or having higher rate of duty in Senate bill than in Underwood law, or having higher rate of duty in Senate bill than in Payne-Aldrich law.)

Paragraph.	Commodity.	Free under Payne-Aldrich.	Free under Underwood.	Same as Underwood.	Same as Payne-Aldrich.	Higher than Underwood.	Higher than Payne-Aldrich.
1	Acetic acid		X		X
1	Acetic anhydride					X	X
	Boric acid					X
	Chloro-acetic acid
	Citric acid					X	X
	Lactic acid					X	X
	Tannic acid					X
	Tartaric acid					X	X
	Arsenic acid	X	X
	Arsenious acid	X	X
	Formic acid					X	X
	Gallic acid				X	X
	Oleic acid		(1)
	Oxalic acid					X	X
	Phosphoric acid	X	X
	Pyro-gallic acid			X
	Stearic acid
2	Acetaldehyde, etc
3	Acetone				X	X
	Acetone oil				X	X
	Ethyl methyl ketone				X	X
4	Amyl alcohol					X	X
	Butyl alcohol					X	X
	Propyl alcohol
	Fusel oil					X	X
	Wood alcohol	X					X
	Ethyl alcohol
5	Chemical salts and compounds, etc				X	X
6	Aluminum hydroxide					X	X
	Potash alum					X	X
	Ammonia alum					X	X
	Aluminum sulphate					X	X
7	Ammonium carbonate				X	X
	Ammonium bicarbonate
	Ammonium chloride					X	X
	Ammonium perchlorate
7	Ammonium phosphate					X
	Ammonium sulphate					X
	Liquid ammonia			X	X
8	Antimony oxide				X	X
	Tartar ametic
	Antimony sulphide					X	X
	Antimony salts					X	X
9	Argols					X	X
	Rochelle salts				X	X
	Calcium tartrate (crude)			X
	Cream of tartar				X	X
10	Copaiba balsam			X
	Canada balsam			X
	Peru balsam			X
	Tolu balsam			X
	Styrax			X
	Other balsams			X
10A	Gum amber			X
	Amberoid			X
	Gum arabic (or senegal)			X
11	Barium carbonate					X	X
	Barium chloride					X	X
	Barium dioxide				X	X
	Barium hydroxide
	Barium nitrate					X	X
12	Blackings, etc., for cleaning and polishing				X	X
13	Bleaching powder					X
14	Caffeine					X	X
	Tea waste			X
	Compounds of caffeine			X	X
15	Calcium carbide				X	X
16	Calomel					X	X
	Corrosive sublimate					X	X
16	Other mercurial preparations					X	X
17	Carbon tetrachloride				X	X
	Chloroform					X

[1] No provision.

Table showing comparisons of rates of duty on commodities provided for in Schedule 1 of Senate bill, etc.—Continued.

Paragraph.	Commodity.	Free under Payne-Aldrich.	Free under Underwood.	Same as Underwood.	Same as Payne-Aldrich.	Higher than Underwood.	Higher than Payne-Aldrich.
	Tetrachloroethane					X	X
	Trichloroethylene					X	X
18	Chalk					X	X
	Putty				X	X
	Billiard and tailors' chalk					X	X
19	Salts and compounds of gold, platinum, rhodium, and silver				X	X
20	Salts and compounds of bismuth					X	X
21	Chemicals, drugs, etc., put up in tablets, pills, etc			X	X
	Crude chicle			X
	Refined chicle			X
24	Chloral hydrate					X	X
	Terpin hydrate					X	X
	Thymol					X	X
	Urea					X	X
	Glycero-phosphoric acid					X	X
	Salts and compounds of glycero-phosphoric acid					X	X
25	Coal tar (intermediate)					X	X
26	Coal-tar dyes, medicinals and other finished coal-tar products					X	X
27	Cobalt oxide					X
	Cobalt sulphate					X	X
	Cobalt linoleate					X
	Cobalt salt and compounds					X	X
28	Collodion					X
	Cellulose esters					X
	Solutions of pyroxylin					X
29	Compounds of pyroxylin (unfinished)					X
	Compounds of pyroxylin (finished) (celluloid)					X
29a	Compounds of cellulose known as vulcanized or hard fiber
30	Compounds of casein
31	Crude drugs advanced in value by grinding, crushing, etc
32	Aconite	X	X
	Aloes
	Asafetida	X	X
	Cocculus indicus	X	X
	Ipecac	X	X
	Jalap	X	X
	Manna	X	X
	Marshmallow root, leaves, and flowers	X
	Mate
	Pyrethrum flowers
33	Buchu leaves	X		X
	Cocoa leaves			X			X
	Gentian	X		X
	Licorice root	X				X
	Sarsaparilla root	X		X
	Belladonna	X	X
	Digitalis	X	X
	Henbane	X	X
	Stramonium	X	X
33A	Potassium cyanide		X
	Sodium cyanide
	Compounds containing cyanide
34	Ergot	X		X
35	Di-ethyl sulphate					X	X
	Di-methyl sulphate					X	X
	Ethyl acetate
	Ethyl chloride
	Ethyl ether			X
	All other esters and ethers					X
36	Extracts for dyeing and tanning:
	Chestnut		X			X	X
	Cutch					X	X
	Chlorophyll					X	X
	Divi-divi					X	X
	Fustic					X	X
	Hemlock		X				X
	Persian berry					X	X
	Logwood					X	X
	Mangrove		X				X
	Myrobalan					X	X
	Oak		X				X
	Quebracho		X				X
	Sumac					X	X
	Saffron					X	X
	Safflower					X	X
	Saffron cake					X	X
	Valonia					X	X
	Wattle					X	X
	All other extracts					X	X
37	Flavoring extracts				X	X
	Fruit esters, oils, and essences					X	X
38	Formaldehyde					X
	Paraformaldehyde					X
	Hexamethylenetetramine			X
39	Edible gelatine					X
	Glue					X	X
	Fish glue					X	X
	Glue size					X	X
	Caseine glue			X
	Agar-agar					X
	Isinglass			X
	Fish sounds			X
	Ossein

Table showing comparisons of rates of duty on commodities provided for in Schedule 1 of Senate bill, etc.—Continued.

Paragraph.	Commodity.	Free under Payne-Aldrich.	Free under Underwood.	Same as Underwood.	Same as Payne-Aldrich.	Higher than Underwood.	Higher than Payne-Aldrich.
40	Glycerine (crude)			X	X
	Glycerine (refined)					X	X
41	Ink and ink powders					X	X
43	Bromine		X
	Bromine compounds
44	Lead acetate (white)					X
	Lead acetate (brown)				X	X
	Lead nitrate					X	X
	Lead arsenate
	Lead resinate
45	Licorice extract					X
	Citrate lime	X				X
47	Magnesium carbonate					X
	Magnesium chloride					X	X
	Epsom salts					X	X
	Calcined magnesia (medicinal)				X	X
	Calcined magnesia (not medicinal)	X	X
47A	Manganese borate				X	X
	Manganese resinate				X	X
	Manganese sulphate				X	X
	Other manganese compounds				X	X
48	Menthol			X
	Crude camphor	X		X
	Synthetic camphor				X	X
49	Cod oil					X
	Seal oil					X
	Herring					X
	Menhaden					X
	Whale oil					X
	Sperm oil					X	X
	Other fish oils					X
	Crude wool grease					X	X
	Adeps lanae			X			X
50	Castor oil					X
	Linseed oil					X	X
	Hempseed oil					X	X
	Olive oil				X	X
	Poppy-seed oil					X	X
	Rape-seed oil			X
50A	Coconut oil (crude)	X	X
	Coconut oil (refined)					X	X
	Cottonseed oil	X	X
	Peanut oil					X	X
	Soya-bean oil	X	X
51	Alizarin assistant, etc					X
52	Hydrogenated fats and oils
53	Combinations of oils (except essential)				X	X
54	Lemon oil	X				X	X
	Orange oil					X	X
	Clove oil				X	X
	Eucalyptus				X	X
	Peppermint					X	X
	Patchouli				X	X
	Sandalwood				X	X
55	Opium			X
	Cocaine, and salts of					X	X
	Ecogine, and salts of					X	X
	Laudanum			X			X
56	Ambergris	X		X
	Castorum					X
	Civet	X				X
	Musk					X
	Anethol					X	X
	Citral					X	X
	Geraniol					X	X
	Heliotropin					X	X
	Ionole					X	X
56	Rhodinol					X	X
	Safrol					X	X
	Terpineol					X	X
	Vanillin					X	X
57	Perfumery, cosmetics, and toilet preparations					X
58	Floral waters (nonalcoholic)			X	X
	Bay rum					X	X
59	Paris green		X
	London purple		X
60	Phosphorus		X
61	Plasters				X	X
62	Artist's paints and colors					X	X
63	Paints					X	X
64	Barytes (crude ore)					X	X
	Barytes ore (ground)					X	X
	Barium sulphate (blanc fixe)					X	X
	Blue pigments				X	X
	Ultramarine					X	X
	Bone black, blood char, etc		X
67	Chrome yellow					X	X
	Chrome green					X	X
	Chrome colors					X	X
68	Gas black					X	X
	Lamp black					X	X
	Other black pigments					X	X
69	Litharge				X	X
	Orange mineral
	Red lead					X	X
	White lead				X	X
	Other lead pigments					X	X
70	Ochers				X	X

Table showing comparisons of rates of duty on commodities provided for in Schedule 1 of Senate bill, etc.—Continued.

Paragraph.	Commodity.	Free under Payne-Aldrich.	Free under Underwood.	Same as Underwood.	Same as Payne-Aldrich.	Higher than Underwood.	Higher than Payne-Aldrich.
	Sienna				X	X
	Umbers				X	X
70	Ochers, siennas, and umbers, washed or ground				X	X
	Other iron oxide pigments					X
71	Precipitated sulphate				X
72	Spirit varnishes					X	X
	All other varnishes				X	X
73	Vermilion reds containing quicksilver					X	X
74	Zinc oxide (dry)					X	X
	Zinc oxide (ground in oil)					X	X
	Lithopone					X	X
75	Potassium chromate				X	X
	Potassium bichromate				X	X
	Potassium chlorate					X
	Potassium perchlorate
	Red prussiate of potash					X
	Yellow prussiate of potash				X	X
	Potassium iodide				X	X
	Potassium bromide
	Potassium bicarbonate					X
	Potassium carbonate	X	X
	Caustic potash	X	X
	Potassium nitrate (refined)				X	X
	Potassium permanganate					X	X
76	Santonin		X				X
77	Castile soap					X	X
	Perfumed toilet soap				X	X
	Unperfumed toilet soap					X
	Medicinal soap			X
	All other soaps			X
78	Sodium arsenate		X		X
	Sodium bicarbonate			X
	Sodium borate (refined)			X
	Sodium bromide
	Soda ash		X		X
	Sal soda					X	X
	Sodium chlorate				X	X
	Sodium chloride (common table salt)		X				X
	Sodium formate
	Yellow prussiate soda				X	X
	Caustic soda				X	X
	Sodium nitrite					X	X
	Sodium sesquicarbonate				X	X
	Glaubers salts			X	X
	Anhydrous sulphate (soda)
	Sodium sulphide				X	X
	Sodium silicate		X		X
	Sodium sulphite				X	X
	Sodium bisulphite
	Sodium metabisulphite
	Sodium thiosulphite				X	X
79	Sodium hydrosulphite, and compounds of					X	X
80	Potato starch				X	X
	All other starches				X	X
81	Dextrine from potato flour					X	X
	British gum					X
	Strontium carbonate					X	X
	Strontium nitrate					X	X
	Strontium oxide	X	X
84	Sodium oxide					X	X
	Thorium nitrate					X	X
	Other salts of thorium					X	X
	Cerium nitrate					X	X
	Cerium fluoride					X	X
	Other salts of serium					X	X
	Gas-mantle scrap					X	X
85	Tin bichloride				X	X
	Tin tetrachloride				X	X
	Other compounds of tin				X	X
86	Titanium potassium oxalate					X	X
	All other compounds of titanium					X	X
87	Vanilla beans	X		X
	Tonka bean	X		X
88	Zinc chloride					X	X
	Zinc sulphate					X
	Zinc sulphide					X	X
	Total (340 articles)	33	36	44	67	223	135

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to take about three minutes, and then, before the Senate goes into executive session, I will yield to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and also to the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who, I understand, desires to present some matter to the Senate.

Mr. President, during the greater part of yesterday there was much discussion in reference to the character of testimony which was adduced before the Finance Committee and upon which that committee formulated the tariff rates of the pending bill. If one were to give entire credence to the arguments which are presented on the other side of the Chamber, it would appear as though the committee had heard no one except a lot of vicious manufacturers, who were intent on getting everything they possibly could, and that the poor importer had been given no consideration. It may be that in number more witnesses testified before the committee who represented manufacturers, because there are far more manufacturers who are engaged exclusively in the manufacturing business than there are importers who are engaged exclusively in the importing business. Therefore, it would naturally be expected that there would be more witnesses on behalf of those who desired a tariff on specific articles than there would be of those who were opposed to such a tariff. However, every importing interest was given full consideration. We did not cease taking testimony until those interested on both sides of every subject had been given a full hearing.

Now, just a word to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], who have been discussing the pending matter for the past two days. I shall only consider the general sentiment that seemed to be disclosed in all their expressions, and that is that the American manufacturer is generally most dishonest and desires to rob the American people, while the foreign importer is generally a very honest individual, who desires to protect the American people from the exactions of the American manufacturer. Mr. President, I may be mistaken, although I do not think I am, when I say that I believe it will be found that the average American business man and the average American manufacturer are just as patriotic, just as honest, and just as conscientious as is the foreign importer of merchandise into the United States. I think the American manufacturer is just as much interested in the business welfare of the American people as is the foreign producer. I am not claiming anything more for him, but I really think that he has not subjected himself to the general condemnation which has been visited upon him during the past two days.

I will admit that men are all selfish; that the American manufacturer would like to get as high a protection as he possibly can. I will also admit that in the selfishness of his desires the foreign importer would like to import everything into this country as cheaply as he can. We have had those two opposing forces together, and in many instances we have fixed the rates of the bill in conformity to what each of them thought he could still do business under; and in those cases I think we have got the tariff rates very nearly right.

I remember looking through volumes of the Baedecker Guide to American tourists who desired to travel abroad. I was never able to travel abroad, but I have read some of those volumes. In doing so I noted the warnings which were given; and I noted particularly the advice that when one got over the line into certain countries he should always count his change, if he bought anything, in order to see whether or not it was correct. I noticed, however, that the Baedecker Guidebooks never gave that advice to tourists who came to this country in their dealing with the average American business man. We know our own American citizens, and we know that if we purchase an article which costs 63 cents, nine cases out of ten when we hand to the seller a dollar in payment we do not stop to see whether or not he returns to us the even change of 37 cents. We are confident we are going to be dealt with honestly; but I can refer to a number of countries as to which the Baedecker Guidebook advises that we must be careful in our dealings there because their citizens will take advantage of Americans if they can.

Mr. President, I think the American manufacturer has just as high a degree of honesty in his make-up as has the foreign importer who desires to take advantage of our market. I am not claiming any more than that for the American manufacturer; but I do wish Senators would get over the habit of considering every man who comes before the Finance Committee and asks for a tariff rate or protection is dishonest, and that every man who asks for free trade, that his imports may come in without the payment of any duty whatever, should be regarded as a saint.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield first to the Senator from New Mexico, who has been on his feet for some time desiring recognition.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I merely want to make a brief observation. I have never impugned the veracity or the integrity of a single witness who appeared before the Finance Committee of the Senate or before the Ways and Means Committee of the House. What I have been trying to develop is this: First, that the pending bill is not framed on the basis of the difference in the cost of production here and in the foreign country. That, I think, was conceded on yesterday. To-day, I think, it was conceded that the bill was not framed upon the difference in prices in this country and in foreign countries. Now, we are told that the bill is framed upon the opinion evidence of interested parties. The opinion, of course, may be thoroughly honest, but the Senator from North Dakota now very adroitly seeks another basis for this bill. He puts it upon the opinion evidence of those interested parties.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I did not yield for a speech. If the Senator from New Mexico thinks that that is an honest response to my statement, I am compelled to differ from him.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, may I ask the Senator why he referred to the statements of those witnesses?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from New Mexico has stated that the Senator from North Dakota now admits that this whole bill was based upon a settlement between the importer and the manufacturer, and the Senator from New Mexico knows the Senator from North Dakota has made no such statement. I have stated again and again—the Senator may conscientiously differ from me in that respect—that we have tried to make the tariff rates measure the difference between what we regarded as the cost of production at home and the cost of production elsewhere, where it was possible to obtain that cost of production. In very few instances, however, can we obtain the actual cost of production in a foreign country. Therefore we must assume that the goods are sold in the foreign country for a price which represents the cost of production, plus a reasonable return for the manufacturer. That is the basis on which we have always levied our duties in the past, because it is the only substantial basis which we can get. It is also, I think, equally true—and I believe we can establish the fact in most cases—that the wholesale selling price in the United States represents the cost of production, plus a reasonable return upon the investment and upon the cost of manufacture. We could not in all cases obtain the actual cost of production in the United States, but in many instances we had figures showing exactly what it cost to produce a given article by different manufacturers, and from that evidence and from the information obtained as to conditions abroad we made up our schedules.

Mr. President, there was discussion yesterday in regard to the enormous increases proposed by the pending tariff bill over the rates in the Underwood tariff law. Let us see as to that. Suppose that the Underwood law levies a duty of 1 cent a pound on epsom salts, and that in this bill we should levy a duty of 5 cents a pound. It is true that would be increasing the tariff 400 per cent; but, after all, it is a difference of 4 cents for a whole pound of epsom salts. I remember that the Underwood tariff law carries a duty on rochelle salts of 2½ cents a pound. We increase it, say, to 5 cents a pound. It is true that is an increase of 100 per cent, just doubling the old rate, and yet it is not a heavy duty when we come to consider it. It is merely an increase of 2½ cents a pound on the rate provided under the old tariff law. On some other chemicals the Underwood law may have provided a quarter of a cent a pound, while the pending bill may provide a whole penny a pound. In that case we have raised the duty, of course, 300 per cent; but, after all, the actual duty is only three-quarters of a cent a pound. After all, if we want to get down to what one of these specific duties means, we should take the ad valorem duty; we should see what a pound is sold for, and then ascertain what relation this 1 cent or half a cent or 3 cents or 5 cents bears to the price of the commodity. We will then get something that the average American citizen will understand as affecting the price of that commodity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have heard very many arguments upon the floor of the House and the floor of the Senate in favor of American production and American industries and American operations of one description or another, and as a rule I have been able to answer them by saying that it was to the interest of the consumer to consume the thing referred to. The Senator, however, has just referred to epsom salts, and has confessed that this bill contains an increase of 400 per cent on them. I wish to suggest to the Senate and to him that no consumer, however contemptible a consumer may be—and he is, under a Republican régime, the most contemptible human being who can exist; he really ought not to exist at all, because when he tries to buy things cheaply he is disloyal to the Republican Party and to the American Union, according to the doctrine of the Republican Party—I submit to the Senator from North Dakota that no consumer ever takes epsom salts willingly or anxiously or affectionately.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say to the Senator that I understood that all of the objection on the other side of the Chamber came from the fact that we had increased the cost of epsom salts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand; but bringing this discussion back to the particular concrete illustration of epsom salts, and leaving the general abstract position of the advantages of free trade and free commercial relations between men in a republic as citizens, and citizens of various governments over the world as God's people everywhere, it does seem to me that the consumer of epsom salts, who does not want epsom salts, as a rule, and would rather not take it, ought not to be punished in this tariff bill. If the Senator wants to punish me for eating candy, that is all right.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let the consumer buy something else then. I think we can supply Senators on the other side with other articles that will be just as effective and possibly just as cheap.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 194).

Mr. McNARY. I present the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill and ask that it be printed and go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10730) "making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 9, 12, 17, 19, 27, 28, 29, 43, 44, 46, 47, and 55.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, 13, 14, 18, 20, 23, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 48, 52, and 54; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,425,246"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,968,076"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$582,505"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,030,350"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,527,910"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,097,282"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,562,302"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$954,561"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,277,631"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,300,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,381,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,585,960"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$390,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,769,180"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$450,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "three persons at a rate not to exceed $6,500 each per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on Senate amendments numbered 40, 41, 42, 50, 51, 57, and 58.

CHAS. L. McNARY,
W. L. JONES,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SYDNEY ANDERSON,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
EDWARD H. WASON,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
GORDON LEE,
Managers on the part of the House.

HUDSON RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have here several bridge bills which I desire to report from the Committee on Commerce. The passage of some of them is very much desired, and I shall ask unanimous consent for their present consideration.

Mr. KING. These are unanimous reports, are they?

Mr. CALDER. Yes. The first bill is Senate bill 3401, to authorize the Bear Mountain Hudson River Bridge Co. to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River near the village of Peekskill, State of New York. I report it back favorably from the Committee on Commerce and submit a report (No. 639) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Bear Mountain Hudson River Bridge Co., a corporation incorporated by act of the Legislature of the State of New York, approved March 31, 1922, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Hudson River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near the village of Peekskill,

County of Westchester, State of New York, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 22, 1906.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within three years and completed within seven years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably Senate bill 3417, authorizing Independence County, Ark., to construct a bridge across the White River at or near Batesville, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 640) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Independence, Ark., is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across White River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Batesville, in such county, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAVANNAH RIVER BRIDGES.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment House bill 10240, to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga., and I submit a report (No. 641) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved March 4, 1921, to be built by J. J. Smith and J. E. McGee, both of Starr, S. C., across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment House bill 10407, authorizing the counties of Jasper, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga., and I submit a report (No. 642) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Jasper, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Savannah, Ga., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably Senate bill 3316, to authorize the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River, in or about section 17, township 54 north, range 25 west, Itasca County, Minn., and I submit a report (No. 643) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is unanimously reported and has the approval of the War Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the highway bridge built by the authorities of Itasca County, Minn., across the south arm of Pokegama Lake, in or about section 17, township 54 north, range 25 west, in said county and State, is hereby legalized and the consent of Congress is hereby given to its maintenance by said State for the use of the general public: Provided, That any changes in said bridge which the Secretary of War may deem necessary and order in the interest of navigation shall be promptly made by the said State.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to legalize a bridge across the south arm of Pokegama Lake, in Itasca County, State of Minnesota."

MARIA M'ARTHUR.

Mr. CALDER. I also have three resolutions from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses giving six months' pay to the families of former employees of the Senate who have died recently. The first is Senate Resolution 283. I report it back favorably from that committee and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate for the fiscal year 1921, to Maria McArthur, widow of James McArthur, late a messenger in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ROSE CROSSEN.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably Senate Resolution 216 directing the Secretary of the Senate to pay to Rose Crossen, sister of Philip A. Crossen, late a laborer in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' pay, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Rose Crossen, sister of Philip A. Crossen, late a laborer in the employ of the Senate in the heating and ventilating department, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

AGNES MALLOY KILMARTIN.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably Senate Resolution 279, to pay to Agnes Malloy Kilmartin a sum equal to six months' compensation of the late Robert C. Kilmartin, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Agnes Malloy Kilmartin, daughter of Robert C. Kilmartin, late a messenger in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, April 27, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 26 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Lewis H. Schwaebe, of Los Angeles, Calif., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 27, with headquarters at Los, Angeles, Calif., in place of John B. Elliott.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

John F. Jones, of Blacksburg, S. C., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of South Carolina, to fill an existing vacancy.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Miss Amanda I. Frank, of Colorado, to be receiver of public moneys at Sterling, Colo., vice Charles W. Sederburg, resigned.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

To be colonels.

Lieut. Col. Arthur Sydney Cowan, Signal Corps, from April 17, 1922.

Lieut. Col. Reginald Edwards McNally, Cavalry, from April 20, 1922.

To be lieutenant colonels.

Maj. William James O'Loughlin, Infantry, from April 17, 1922.

Maj. Herbert Edward Mann, Cavalry, from April 20, 1922.

To be majors.

Capt. Claud Edward Stadtman, Infantry, from April 17, 1922.

Capt. Chauncey Francis Ruoff, Field Artillery, from April 20, 1922.

To be chaplains with the rank of captain.

Chaplain Samuel Eugene Crosby, from April 6, 1922.

Chaplain Charles Wadsworth Ball Hill, from April 6, 1922.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Col. Samuel Goode Jones, Cavalry, with rank from January 27, 1918.

Col. Edgar Thomas Conley, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Lieut. Col. John Brooke Shuman, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Lieut. Col. Wesley Wilson Knox Hamilton, Coast Artillery Corps, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Lieut. Col. James Totten, Coast Artillery Corps, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Lieut. Col. Robert LeRoy Collins, Cavalry, with rank from November 16, 1920.

Lieut. Col. Leo Asa Dewey, Infantry, with rank from April 27, 1921.

Maj. Raymond Sidney Bamberger, Air Service, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. Albert Gilmor, Coast Artillery Corps, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. Thomas Marshall Spaulding, Coast Artillery Corps, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. Daniel Huston Torrey, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. Robert Horace Dunlop, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. William Clayton Rose, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. Livingston Watrous, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Maj. Harry Coope, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

Capt. Jedediah Huntington Hills, Infantry, with rank from September 18, 1917.

Capt. David Andrew Watt, Quartermaster Corps, with rank from July 1, 1920.

FIELD ARTILLERY.

First Lieut. Robert Crane Hendley, Air Service, with rank from November 1, 1921.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

William F. Hanell to be postmaster at Patterson, Calif., in place of F. S. Harrison. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

FLORIDA.

Warren J. Armstrong to be postmaster at Valparaiso, Fla. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

IDAHO.

George F. Clark to be postmaster at Paul, Idaho. Office became presidential April 1, 1920.

ILLINOIS.

Sidney F. Coffman to be postmaster at Bluford, Ill. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Lawrence F. Hake to be postmaster at Hoyleton, Ill. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Benjamin F. Welch to be postmaster at Zeigler, Ill., in place of I. A. Foster, resigned.

INDIANA.

Claude B. Thomas to be postmaster at Moores Hill, Ind. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Robert M. Waddell to be postmaster at Lagrange, Ind., in place of H. O. Eldridge, resigned.

KENTUCKY.

Yaman Watkins to be postmaster at Clarkson, Ky. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Addie Elliott to be postmaster at Glencoe, Ky. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Elzie T. Wilson to be postmaster at Sparta, Ky. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Charles W. Parrish to be postmaster at Midway, Ky., in place of M. D. Cogar. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

MAINE.

Doris A. Day to be postmaster at Corinna, Me., in place of M. P. Hamilton, resigned.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Helen C. Dougherty to be postmaster at Beverly Farms, Mass., in place of L. J. Watson. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

MICHIGAN.

Clifford L. Slocum to be postmaster at Addison, Mich., in place of Floyd Sanford. Incumbent's commission expired March 4, 1922.

MINNESOTA.

John B. Smith to be postmaster at Kilkenny, Minn. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Gustave A. Krueger to be postmaster at Plummer, Minn. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Edward Lende to be postmaster at Appleton, Minn., in place of C. J. Reagan, deceased.

MISSOURI.

Elizabeth E. Letton to be postmaster at Mindenmines, Mo. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

Andrew S. Swafford to be postmaster at Excelsior Springs, Mo., in place of W. H. Titus. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

NEBRASKA.

Cecil E. Mills to be postmaster at Long Pine, Nebr., in place of Ira Lucy. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

OKLAHOMA.

Lincoln G. Shoop to be postmaster at Perry, Okla., in place of W. E. Merry. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Ceaf W. Ramsey to be postmaster at Beggs, Okla., in place of D. H. Watson, resigned.

OREGON.

Newton A. Perry to be postmaster at North Portland, Oreg., in place of V. D. Crosby. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

John H. Farrar to be postmaster at Salem, Oreg., in place of August Huckestein. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

PENNSYLVANIA.

D. Guy Hollinger to be postmaster at Hanover, Pa., in place of E. K. Eichelberger. Incumbent's commission expired February 5, 1922.

Edward N. Dubs to be postmaster at New Hope, Pa., in place of Isaac Scarborough, resigned.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Henry N. Folk to be postmaster at Bamberg, S. C., in place of A. W. Knight. Incumbent's commission expired July 15, 1920.

TENNESSEE.

Samuel A. Wheeler to be postmaster at Bolivar, Tenn., in place of J. K. Tate. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

TEXAS.

Leonard D. Kennedy to be postmaster at Ivan, Tex. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

William J. Lewis to be postmaster at Itasca, Tex., in place of J. H. Young, resigned.

Comodore V. Varner to be postmaster at Milford, Tex., in place of W. J. Hamlett. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1922.

John W. White to be postmaster at Uvalde, Tex., in place of J. W. White. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Roy A. Browning to be postmaster at Barboursville, W. Va., in place of J. J. Haddox, removed.

WISCONSIN.

William H. Howard to be postmaster at Altoona, Wis. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

James C. Taylor to be postmaster at Gilman, Wis. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

William McMahon to be postmaster at Lancaster, Wis., in place of E. E. McCoy, deceased.

WYOMING.

Elmer W. Ace to be postmaster at Green River, Wyo., in place of W. B. Cooper, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 26 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Lafayette French, jr., of Minnesota, to be United States attorney, district of Minnesota.

POSTMASTERS.

KENTUCKY.

George R. Holt, Campbellsville.
Herbert C. Hall, Hardinsburg.
Henry Hall, Waynesburg.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Frank D. Babcock, Haverhill.

OKLAHOMA.

Cosmo Falconer, Cheyenne.
Robert R. Sutton, Claremore.
Hiram H. Snow, Sand Springs.

WASHINGTON.

Amy E. Ide, Outlook.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate April 26 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

POSTMASTER.

Fred J. Gillam to be postmaster at Bloomville, in the State of Ohio.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 26, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, again Thou hast given voice to the day, and Thy hand, so mighty and yet so gentle, is upon us. We would respond to Thy claim. Open our minds and hearts to a knowledge of Thyself, for to know Thee is life eternal. This is the gift of the Father, and the light and the glory forever. As life is so often difficult and discipline is hard, open our lives for Thy wisdom and direct them with its nourishment. Thus may they be as treasures held in trust for God and our fellow men and may not the sense of fear or dejection have rule over us. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on the Library.

STATUE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on the Library I call up House Joint Resolution 127, to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site.

The SPEAKER. This joint resolution is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 127, to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site, with Mr. CRAMTON in the chair.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, debate upon this matter was begun at a previous session. Will the Chair kindly inform me of the situation as to the time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the affirmative has used 40 minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] has 20 minutes remaining, and no one has been recognized in opposition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is this a unanimous report from the Committee on the Library?

Mr. LUCE. As far as I know.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] is recognized in opposition for one hour.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I yield to no man in veneration for the personality, for the character, and for the memory of Abraham Lincoln. I represent a portion of the State of Indiana to which Abraham Lincoln went, as a blue-eyed boy of 7, from the State of Kentucky, and where he spent his youth until he had reached the full stature of manhood, and in the strength of a vigorous maturity left Indiana for the rich prairies of Illinois. It is out of regard for his memory, it is out of respect for Abraham Lincoln that I ask that this resolution do not pass in the form in which it is presented.

Let me give you the story. The statue was erected in 1868 in the middle of D Street, where John Marshall Place, or Four-and-a-Half Street, as it was then called, runs into D Street immediately in front of the courthouse. The statue was built on a mound in the middle of the street. The street at that time was very much wider than it is now. The courthouse had been built flush with the street, leaving a plaza in front of it 250 or 300 feet wide, the center of which was D Street. To the southeast runs Indiana Avenue; branching to the southwest runs Louisiana Avenue, but D Street is the street which the courthouse faces.

About 1871, when Gov. A. R. Shepherd undertook to give Washington up-to-date streets—the streets before that having been all mud except Pennsylvania Avenue, which was cobblestone—it was deemed expedient to narrow D street and to leave a grass plot in front of the courthouse. The statue was not moved. The street was lowered 6 feet. Originally the statue stood on a pedestal 18 feet high. When D Street in front of the courthouse was lowered the pedestal was made 24 feet high. I have illustrations here showing the statue as it stood before it was removed. The narrowing of the street and the putting of the grass plot in front of the courthouse brought the pedestal for the statue into the middle of the sidewalk, and we who remember it at all remember how it stood in the middle of the sidewalk blocking the entrance to the front entrance of the courthouse. For those who do not recall the statue, I have these photographs which were made shortly before its removal. It was removed in contemplation of certain changes in the courthouse. It was not properly taken care of after the removal, a matter which I greatly regret, but fortunately the figure of Lincoln did not suffer from the lack of care.

The statue stood there on a 24-foot pedestal. It was not a beautiful thing to look at. It never was a work of art. It was carved with absolute truth and accuracy by a stonecutter, Lot Flannery, who had the stoneyard right across from the Capitol. It was the only statue that Lot Flannery ever made. He was a man who carved gravestones and put names on them. The pedestal was so high that the features were always distorted to one who was passing, but the statue is not a work of art. Let me explain for a moment. If it were possible to make a plaster cast of me as I am speaking now or of any one of you as you are sitting in your seats, it might be a good likeness. It might be absolutely true to nature. Yet I can fancy that any one of us looking at that plaster-cast portrait would be humiliated and ashamed.

It takes a sculptor who is an artist to make a statue which shall be a work of art, and this statue never was a work of art. It is reasonably and fairly accurate. When it was erected it was put in a part of the town which was then a very desirable residence section. That time has passed. The locality is given over to business and boarding houses. The statue, as I say, was put in the middle of the street. When it was removed it occupied the middle of the sidewalk, blocking the entrance to the courthouse. It ought not to be put back in the same place. It not only mars the building by contrast, a building which is now a work of art, but the contrast is disagreeable and unpleasant and almost a shock when one thinks of that statue representing Abraham Lincoln. You have only to look at these photographs which I hold in my hand showing the statue as it stood in front of the old courthouse to see that it is not an appropriate place for it. We had a statue of George Washington, not a work of art but not a bad piece of statuary, which stood in front of the Capitol. Many years ago it was removed without a protest from anyone to a better location for it. I think it is now in the National Museum. Anyone of us can see it there. It is worth seeing. It is not a bad portrait of Washington. It is not a work of art. There is an artistic statue of Lincoln, a wonderful piece of artistry in Lincoln Park. There is a very great statue of Lincoln in the Lincoln Memorial. Why should this statue be put in a humiliating situation simply to have it where it formerly stood? Times change, manners change, men change, conditions change. Why should it go back there for a simple sentiment, because it was once put there?

It ought to be taken care of. I have been told by people who knew Lincoln that the statue is absolutely exact as to his features, but it is photographic. That is the objection to it. It does not reveal, as the statue should, the great mind and the great soul that lived in Lincoln's body. It simply represents the physical body of Abraham Lincoln. It is not attractive, and it ought to be put where it can be taken care of. The place is a bad place for the statue because statue and location are not suited to each other.

When Gen. Henry W. Lawton, a native of my State, was killed in battle in the Philippine Islands, the State of Indiana delighted to honor his memory and procured from a great sculptor a statue of General Lawton which is as fine a piece of sculpture as I ever saw. The great monument in the circle in the center of Indianapolis is surrounded by statues of Indiana soldiers and statesmen. At the statehouse are statues of Vice President Hendricks, Col. Richard Owen, and Oliver P. Morton. By common consent this superb statue of that brave soldier, Henry W. Lawton, was placed in a corresponding position to the Lincoln statue, in front of the courthouse, with the result that peddlers of shoe strings, peanut vendors and newspaper vendors, shoeblacks, immigrants from southern Europe surrounded it from morning to night. They obstructed the way in peddling their goods under the magnificent statue of General Lawton.

Representatives from the Grand Army and from the Loyal Legion—I think General Lawton was a member of both—and the societies of the Spanish-American War united in requesting the governor that the statue of General Lawton should be placed in a better location. It was taken away from the courthouse by universal agreement of all the people and placed in a position of prominence in one of the great parks of the city, and no man said nay.

The Lincoln statue ought not to obstruct the way to the courthouse. It ought not to be surrounded in that neighborhood by the class of people who frequent the courthouse—peddlers, loafers, professional jurors, witnesses, and people having business with the various branches of the courthouse. It is no place for a statue like this.

I have an amendment which I propose to offer to this bill, and in making that offer I want to read from a statute we have on the statute books providing for just such emergencies as this. It is not for Congress to decide questions of art, it is not for Congress to decide questions of landscape gardening. We have provided for that adequately and admirably. I read from the statute creating the Commission of Fine Arts:

> A permanent Commission of Fine Arts is hereby created to be composed of seven well-qualified judges of fine arts, who shall be appointed by the President and shall serve for a period of four years each, and until their successors are appointed and qualified. The President shall have authority to fill all vacancies. It shall be the duty of such commission to advise upon the location of statues, fountains, and monuments in the public squares, streets, and parks in the District of Columbia, and upon the selection of models for statues, fountains, and monuments erected under the authority of the United States, and upon the selection of artists for the execution of the same. It shall be the duty of the officers charged by law to determine such questions in each case to call for such advice.

There has been no call for advice by the Library Committee on the Commission of Fine Arts, which has charge of these matters and which has specific charge of the location of statues in the District of Columbia, so far as I know.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. I am in complete accord with the purpose of the statute and with the views of the gentleman in regard to the duties and purpose of the Fine Arts Commission. May I ask the gentleman if he does not think the situation may be altered somewhat when the question is the replacing of a statue that had been in existence long before the creation of the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I think the Fine Arts Commission ought to be consulted about all things within its jurisdiction. Conditions have changed vastly since that statue was erected. The street has been lowered and narrowed, and instead of standing as formerly in the center of the street it stood in the center of the sidewalk. It might have been appropriate and undoubtedly was to put the statue there when it was put there, but it ought not to be placed back there. It was taken away because when under the direction of Congress and the Fine Arts Commission in making improvements in the courthouse it became less desirable for the statue to be there than when it was first placed there; it was deemed best to remove the statue to another location.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. The last part of the bill directs that the statue shall be placed upon an appropriate foundation or pedestal in harmony with the statue; that the statue shall be located in the same general position, not necessarily on the precise spot where it was. If it would now be better to have the statue farther to the north, for example, it would, in the minds of the committee, come within the scope of the bill. The jurisdiction of the Fine Arts Commission is usurped only to the extent of determining, without consulting them, that the statue shall go back into the same general location where it was first placed. On that point, possibly, the gentleman may take issue with the judgment of the committee.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I understand there is no recommendation from the Commission of Fine Arts, either favorable or adverse, as to restoring the statue. I am not a witness, and I shall not testify as to what members of the commission have told me about the matter, but I am assured they were not consulted, and I am strongly of the belief that no member of the commission would consent that the statue go back into the identical spot where it was formerly situated. I will go that far in the matter. There are other things proposed and movements are on foot, as I have been told. The first which I heard of was a movement of this nature. Those of you who have been in the city of Newark, N. J., at the great square in Broad Street, in front of the courthouse, have seen in the square, fronting the courthouse but at a considerable distance from it, the wonderfully beautiful statue of Lincoln, seated, which, although surrounded by trees in a little park in the center of the city, is so accessible that hardly at any time during a sunny afternoon can you pass it without seeing children playing upon Lincoln's knees. It is almost pathetic to witness how the children of Newark love that statue. It is a beautiful statue; a work of very high art. It is placed in the park adjacent to the courthouse, but with a street between. It is proposed by public-spirited citizens of Washington that a replica shall be made of that statue, and that in Judiciary Park in another portion of the park this replica shall be placed; that a statue of the seated Lincoln, after the manner of the statue in Newark, shall be provided a place in Judiciary Park as much more appropriate.

The second proposition which I have heard is this: As perhaps all of you may not know, President Lincoln was under fire at Fort Stevens, when Confederate troops under General Early surrounded Washington and fired on Fort Stevens. A tablet has been placed at Fort Stevens within the last three or four years, which recites simply the fact that President Lincoln stood there, and that he was under rifle fire from the enemy for quite a while. There is nothing there but the tablet. It is proposed by some people that this statue of Lincoln should be placed in Fort Stevens to commemorate the fact that the President was there under fire. I confess frankly that I am not in favor of that plan, but I do think that some infinitely more appropriate place could be found in Washington than the place immediately in front of the courthouse, in the middle of the sidewalk, blocking the entrance to the front door, as these pictures show.

I am sorry to take the time of the House about a matter of this sort, which ought not to occupy our time. The matter should have been referred at once to the Commission of Fine Arts, and I am very positive that an appropriate position would have been found for this statue and that it would have been well taken care of. I can not think of a less appropriate place for the statue than to return it to where it formerly was. As it is the only portrait statue of Lincoln that there is, as it was made by a man who was careful and accurate, although in no sense a sculptor, it ought to be, I think, somewhere indoors in Washington, where it can be taken care of for all time and protected against the weather. It is too valuable to lose as a portrait, but it is worse than worthless as a work of art. The amendment which I propose is a very simple one. It provides that the statue shall be reerected under the direction of the Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to say anything that I said two weeks ago when this matter was under consideration and which was printed in the RECORD. I take it for granted that the Members of the House, as is their custom, are thoroughly familiar with those statements made at that time; but I do desire to present to the House some additional facts which have arisen in connection with the replacement of this statue since the last session of the committee on this subject. I was called upon by Miss Lillian Flannery, daughter of Martin Flannery. There has been great confusion in this House, confusing Martin Flannery with Lot Flannery. They were brothers and had a studio on Massachusetts Avenue. Martin was the man whom the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] is criticizing unwittingly when he says that he was not an artist. Lot was an artist. His niece came to the office after the discussion the other day and she stated that Lot Flannery, who is now a very old man and who lives with them, was a personal friend of President Lincoln; that Lincoln frequently stopped, as was his custom, at the studio of Lot Flannery, on Massachusetts Avenue, and conversed with him, and that frequently they walked about the city together. Lincoln at that time was interested in works of art, and he did associate with this artist and was personally acquainted with him.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Until three or four weeks ago did not the name "Lot Flannery" appear over the door of this marble yard, where they make gravestones, right across the street out here?

Mr. KING. I think his name appears there now. That, of course, is a remnant of the business. He did have a studio there at one time, but he never had anything to do with the monument business at any time in his life. His brother ran the gravestone business, as I said in my speech, which I shall not attempt to repeat. Lot was an artist, and did the work of that concern, so far as statues were concerned.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. In a minute, I expect to reach that point—yes; I yield.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Oh, if I am interrupting some line of thought, I would rather have the gentleman continue than to express my own.

Mr. KING. I yield to the gentleman, even though he was committing such a dastardly act as that.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I wondered whether the committee, in contemplating the possibilities that lie in the aesthetic culture of Washington, had ever given the benefit of its valuable thought to some measure for removing that mass of pottery we have on the front portico of the Capitol? There are all sorts of alleged statues there, and I am sure some of them ought to have come out of a brickyard or a pottery.

Mr. KING. The gentleman will understand that this statue to which I refer is one of pure white marble. I do not know what sort of casts those are in front of the Capitol.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is not so much what they are made of but what they were made for that interests me.

Mr. KING. I could not say, not being an authority on plastic art. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that Lot Flannery was not an artist. His name may appear over the door of the marble yard. He is not there any more. For many years he lived there. He is an old man, now close onto 90 years of age. Evidently they are selling out the marble yard, and I hope some enterprising financier will erect an apartment house on that old lot, because we all need it. That is made incidentally as a utilitarian suggestion, and nothing else. However, if you will go to the Government Printing Office, in the main entrance hall there you will find a marble bust of Benjamin Franklin, which was created by Lot Flannery, the artist, and his name is upon it. It was a present by the Government printers to the United States Government, to the Printing Department, and was outside of the old building for many years.

Afterwards it was removed to the inside. Now, I leave it to anybody who will examine that bust who knows anything at all about art—and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] is one—to decide that question. A very peculiar question was brought up in this matter, which goes to show that this man was an artist, although the question before the House is not whether he was or was not an artist; the question before the House is whether or not a monument paid for by the people of Washington and put up in a certain spot designated by the Government, supposedly forever, shall be removed. It is a question of sentiment. Now, upon the question of art here are a lot of old letters to which I simply desire to refer——

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Does the gentleman favor or would he be in favor of keeping that hideous caricature of Du Pont in Du Pont Circle, removed some time ago, but which stood there for about 80 years?

Mr. KING. Well, I never thought it was such a caricature of Du Pont. It certainly brought into the public mind things which the present statue there does not bring up. Admiral du Pont had clothes on him as a statue in the circle.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. They have got a fountain there, but I understand there is no water.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. It will not play.

Mr. KING. It seems that Franklin Simmons—but, by the way, I will say this first: From a newspaper clipping, which I will put in the RECORD, if necessary, it appears that in 1888 Lot Flannery made a bust of Gen. John A. Logan, that was on exhibition in Memorial Hall of the Senate, so-called at that time, for a number of weeks, and which Mrs. John A. Logan purchased for $2,500, as being a very fine bust of Logan. She thought it was such a fine bust of General Logan that when the eminent sculptor, Franklin Simmons, was employed to prepare the monument to stand in Iowa Circle of Gen. John A. Logan he sent a special messenger to Washington to interview Lot Flannery and get his permission to take a plaster cast of the face of the Logan bust that Mrs. Logan owned and took it to Rome, where Mr. Simmons then had a studio, and from that he molded the face that is on the statue in Iowa Circle.

Now, I regard that as pretty good testimony. And the gentleman from Indiana has now conceded that that face of the first statue of Lincoln is absolutely correct and perfect. Well, no credit has ever been given to him, but very fortunately among these old papers was this old memorandum. You see the age of it:

> Mr. Flannery, I came to let you know that I have taken a cast from the marble bust of General Logan in Mrs. Logan's house. The marble bust, etc., carved by you. I boxed it up for Mr. Simmons, to be sent to Rome to be used in the execution of the equestrian statue to General Logan to be erected in Iowa Circle in Washington City. Tuesday, December 28, 1893.

This is signed "Antonio Paladina," whoever he was. And there you have it. Therefore one of the finest equestrian statues in the United States has the face of General Logan prepared by this artist, Mr. Flannery, and who carved this statue now in question here to-day. Furthermore, here are a number of letters that prove that he was a prominent and well-known sculptor in his prime. This is a letter written to him in 1898 from the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds:

> In reply to your letter of the 22d instant, addressed to Colonel Bromwell, who is now absent from the city, you are informed that as the evidence furnished by you as to your nationality and your capabilities as an artist are satisfactory, you are hereby invited to enter the competition for the statue of Commodore Barry and are at liberty to submit a model if you so desire.
>
> Very respectfully,
>
> CHAS. J. BROMWELL,
> Colonel, United States Army,
> Executive and Disbursing Officer, Barry Statue Commission.

Now, it seems to me that all this talk that this man was not an artist is considerably incorrect. My witness is Freeman Thorp, and I will pit him against any other witness in this House, particularly as to the correctness of the face of this statue. He now lives in the district of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], but he did live here in the city of Washington. And in this book, "Works of Art in the United States Capital," by Mr. Charles E. Fairman, which is a very valuable work, which I will not have time to read, it shows that the name of Freeman Thorp appears. He is the artist who painted the picture of Lincoln from life that hangs on the left-hand side of the Senate door now. He is the artist who painted the picture that hangs in the corner of the lobby of James G. Blaine. He is the artist who painted the picture of Schuyler Colfax, and he is the artist who painted the picture of David B. Henderson, which hangs just beyond that wall. There is no doubt about his ability to testify in this case. And in addition to that he painted that magnificent picture, one of the best I have ever seen, of "Uncle Joe" CANNON, which now hangs in the Appropriation Committee room of the Capitol. So Freeman Thorp is entitled to speak, and he is the man whom I told you before found this monument on its back in the rubbish behind the old Bureau of Engraving and Printing after they said they had stored it in the cellar of the courthouse. He is the man who examined the face when he first found it, and he is the man who said, among other things:

I do not know who chiseled the head and face, but it was accurately done by some one who studied Lincoln from life, as I did, and was not done from photographs. It is a better likeness of Lincoln than anything in plaster, stone, marble, or bronze that I have seen, and I have seen about all that have been made. Some have been made that are unquestionably great works of art, but the best of them are not accurate likenesses of him. This one is to those who, like myself, knew Lincoln, pleasing to look at because it is accurately modeled, and in its simple truth is in keeping with the unassuming man we loved.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have no business with this monument. Congress has not anything to do with it. This monument was erected and paid for by the citizens of Washington and the sailors and soldiers and others who were contributing at that time while passing through the city. Congress had no authority over parks at that time. The city councils of the city of Washington did have authority, and they permitted the Washington Monument Association, of which Mr. Crosby Noyes, then the editor of the Star of this city, was president, to erect this monument here in front of the courthouse and to dedicate it. Later on, instead of giving them a deed for this perpetual easement in order that this monument should remain there, what did they do? They did that which is the best evidence of a title to real estate on earth. They put a fence around it. And on the date of March 30, 1869—and I read from a print obtained from the Public Library—the following act was approved:

An act providing for the erection of a fence around the Lincoln Monument.

Be it enacted by the board of aldermen and board of common council of the city of Washington, That the mayor be, and hereby is, requested to cooperate with a committee of one from each of said boards, to be appointed by the presidents of said boards, respectively, to procure an appropriate design by the artist for a wrought-iron fence, and to cause said fence to be erected around the Lincoln Monument in front of the city hall; and that the sum of $800, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of the general fund to pay the expense of erecting said fence.

So those who have conducted an insidious propaganda against this monument for years, those who, as a matter of fact, fooled the Congress into passing a bill appropriating $2,000 to remove it, and those who finally reached up and used force in taking the statue down, might just as well have conducted their activities in some quiet and pleasant graveyard. Congress is not to blame. I am one man who tries to stand up for Congress. There are enough people criticizing us at all times. But some little clerk from some bureau maybe, possibly assisting the clerk of the Appropriations Committee, when the bill came out with this appropriation, left out the word "Lincoln"—$2,000 for cleaning up the yard down there and removing this statue—that is the way the bill read. And with 55 men in the House at that time nobody inquired into it, because they did not know that it was Abraham Lincoln's statue and the first statue that was ever erected and a statue paid for by other people. Do you think we would have sat here and permitted that thing to get by if we had known it? That is the reason we have to do all this work in putting it back which the gentleman from Indiana complains of.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand that the reason the gentleman from Indiana objected to this location at that place was that some of the common people frequented that place and witnesses and jurors gathered there. I was of the idea that Mr. Lincoln was very close to the common people.

Mr. KING. I thank the gentleman for that. Lincoln would have rejoiced that those people gathered around a statue there in the plaza of the city. Oh, they say, they are erecting a magnificent one down here by the river. But this was the people's statue, a statue of the masses. Those who pass this statue and see Lincoln's face will never see it in the Lincoln Memorial, as beautiful as it may be. This is for the masses. This is for the people who walk; the other is for the people who have limousines. Thousands of people who come to Washington never have money enough to hire a taxicab that will enable them to get down there and look at it. I am not criticizing. You can not erect, as "Uncle Joe" told me in consideration of this before the committee, too many statues to Abraham Lincoln; but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] is going to offer an amendment to put it in an inclosure. This statue has been 56 years on the outside now and can stand it for a longer time. But he wants to put him in an inclosure, in a museum, and make him a sort of character like a curiosity in an Eden Musee.

Greenough's statue of Washington is in a museum, and perhaps it ought to be. It has peculiar features about it. In that bust they have taken off the clothes of George and have put him in the situation, so far as the clothes are concerned, of a Roman gladiator. As an anatomical statue it was good. You could count his ribs on both sides and other parts of his upper anatomy. That statue ought to be in a museum. It ought to be put into a medical school. I agree with the gentleman on that. But this Lincoln statue is an entirely different proposition. A number of resolutions have been introduced, one to take it to Illinois, one to take it to Wisconsin, and one to take it out to Moline, and others to take it to other places. All those places were suggested. But when it was discovered that this statue was paid for by the citizens of Washington the Library Committee bolstered up strongly the present resolution, and they have always been strong for it, and have been reinforced in their position by a letter from the President asking that on account of sentiment it might be restored to its old position. So far as putting it in the street is concerned, this does not apply to that. The proposition is simply to place it on this site. That is the proposition before the committee.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. KING. I will desist now, on account of another gentleman desiring to address the committee for a few minutes. I thank you, gentlemen, for your attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] has 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have not followed in detail the struggle over the reerection of the Lincoln statue in front of the courthouse. I have the same impression about the statue that many other Members have, that it is an injustice to the memory of Abraham Lincoln to put it where it was before, on top of a high shaft in front of the courthouse. I have, on the other hand, the sentimental feeling that we must not put this historic statue in some cellar, where it will be inaccessible to those interested in seeing it. To my mind, there may be a solution found by remembering that there is a square in Washington dedicated to Abraham Lincoln, a square, as most of the members of the committee know, which is located 12 blocks east of the Capitol, at the junction of East Capitol and Twelfth Streets, and where North Carolina Avenue and Massachusetts Avenue also intersect. Lincoln Square is a beautiful square. It has, I think, only one statue there now. That is a statue of Abraham Lincoln himself, a very wonderful statue. But the area is a large one. It is hallowed by the name of Lincoln. It is in a section of the city that never has been considered very much in the matter of works of art. To my way of thinking, it would be a desirable solution if we should direct the placing of this stafue there. I do not believe it ought to go in front of the courthouse.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. In a moment. Then I shall be glad to yield. Personally I should be pretty well satisfied with the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES]. But if we can make the eastern section of the city the location of this statue, in view of the fact that the Square of Lincoln is already there, it seems to me we could accomplish a good many things and could avoid many of the pitfalls into which we seem destined to fall as things are now.

Mr. KING. The gentleman speaks of Lincoln Park. Does the gentleman mean this park on the east here?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; 12 blocks east of the Capitol.

Mr. KING. The gentleman knows, or I presume he does, that there is a Ball statue of Lincoln in that park?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; I alluded to that when the gentleman's attention was perhaps diverted.

Mr. KING. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. ROGERS. As to Lincoln Square, I do not see why there should not be two representations of Lincoln placed in that square.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back three minutes of his time.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, some time ago my attention was attracted by two declarations concerning a greatly mooted question, which seemed to me of such force and merit as to deserve the widest publicity.

One of these was an address by the ex-president of the largest munitions company in the country, Pierre S. du Pont, formerly president of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., and the other by Charles M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, one of the largest steel-producing corporations of the United States. My reason for asking—as I shall do—that these public declarations be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is to obtain a larger circulation for statements which will contribute to truth upon a widely misconceived subject, and so enable not only the Members of Congress, but the public, to entertain a just conception where I believe a misconception now rules the public thought.

The statements made in these two articles are so clear and positive that they deserve the acceptance by Congress and the public, if they be true; if untrue, that the opportunity should be given to Congress and to anyone outside of Congress to refute them. In my judgment they are worthy of the careful consideration of all fair-minded men, for justice is the foundation of our national existence. The one supreme danger that threatens the permanency of our institutions is the widespread dissemination of false statements by ignorant people, or deliberately by ambitious demagogues. It seems to be esteemed a mark of high ability by some who aspire to high public regard to seize upon a popular misconception and use it for a demagogical benefit. We will survive as a Nation exactly in proportion to the number of years in which a square deal is given to every national interest, and exactly as we cherish truth, and not prejudice and error. [Applause.]

WAR DOESN'T PAY.

NO MUNITIONS CONCERN CAN LIVE BY WAR ALONE, AND WHEN CONFLICTS DO COME THEY ARE MUCH MORE LIKELY TO BRING SUCH A CORPORATION FINANCIAL RUIN THAN TO PRODUCE A LASTING PROFIT FOR IT.

[By Pierre S. du Pont, chairman E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.]

The popular conception of a munitions maker is a sinister individual with a deep hatred for peace and a contempt for the pursuits thereof. He is pictured as doing all in his power to fan the flames of distrust between nations and to delight in the conflicts that ensue, since they create enormous and immediate profits for his corporation.

I called this the popular conception of the munitions maker; in reality it is the popular misconception.

Consider the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., whose history is coincident in point of time with that of the United States. We have furnished a great part of the explosives used in all the wars in which the United States has engaged. Therefore, we feel that our records should show conclusively what war will do for and to a maker of munitions.

No munitions concern can live by war alone. During the 139 years of the existence of the United States as a Nation there were four major conflicts before the World War. They lasted about 10 years in all, or about 7 per cent of the time. How could any independent corporation keep itself alive for 139 years by turning out a product that was only wanted 10 years of the time?

The manufacturer of war materials who was prepared to meet the emergencies of these years was not supported during the intervening time by preparations for the conflicts. Such manufacturers existed through the ownership of factories occupied in making peace-time products. In that way alone could they stabilize their businesses.

Most people, business men included, probably think that war has no dangers for the maker of munitions. The truth is that no one realizes as clearly as do we makers of war necessities the grave financial dangers of modern conflicts. Even for a company as strong and firmly established as our own, it is a gamble whether it can successfully weather the storm.

There is the need for immediate and tremendous expansion; the steady, even flow of peace-time business gives way to a feverish rush for materials and labor. This expansion must be accomplished when there is a demand for money from a thousand sources. You might assume that our factories can turn to the making of war materials without changing their equipment. As a matter of fact, our plants that made powder for commercial purposes could not turn out the explosives used in modern warfare. New plants, then, must be erected; new organizations created when labor is hard to find and not overconscientious.

Wars stop suddenly. The munitions maker finds that his market has vanished overnight. He is left with plants and organizations on his hands that are of little value during peace, and these difficulties are enhanced by the depression that follows conflicts.

Our company has attained its present position not because of, but in spite of, the wars it has helped to fight. To-day we are still busy unsnarling the tangles that resulted from our part in the World War. We are by no means alone in this respect. I could name half a dozen great concerns that turned their energies to war production that are having serious difficulty in pulling through the after-war slump. I could mention a famous automobile company that turned to the production of airplane motors. They came out of the fight without even a factory, and since then they have not built a single car. There is a long list of such industrial casualties left in this country by the Great War.

In war times prices of most materials mount skyward. This is true particularly of foodstuffs, clothing, and many articles that go into the equipment of the fighting man. Manufacturers of such products are given an immense and immediate market at soaring prices. Yet manufacturers of these commodities are not accused of promoting war for the selfish purpose of increasing prices, notwithstanding the fact that the increased demands of war do not require the investment of their capital in special machinery and supplies useless for peaceful pursuits.

Smokeless powder, the chief product of the Du Pont Co. during the war, was the only essential material whose price declined during that period. We believe that is a record. Now, what happened to some of the other necessities? The price of cotton on the farm soared from 6 cents in October, 1914, to approximately 42 cents in July, 1920; the price of wheat on the farm went from 76⅛ cents in June, 1914, to $2.58⅜ in June, 1920. Our price on smokeless powder was reduced from 53 cents to 44 cents during the war period.

It is probable that few munitions makers gained much financially from their operations. In the case of the Du Pont Co., taxes paid to the United States Government during the recent war not only absorbed the entire profit of the company on powder sold to our Government, but, in addition, they wiped out all of the profit made on these powders during the preceding 20 years.

WAR FACTORIES ABANDONED.

The great factories of our company that produced powder during the World War were created for their purpose and were abandoned completely when the war ceased. It is true that the United States Government at all times maintained experiments requiring the production of military explosives, but compared to the industrial business of the Du Pont Co. the quantities were small—not more than 5 per cent of total production during recent years.

It is fortunate, indeed, that the United States encouraged the development of munitions through private enterprise in preference to Government control. The nuclei of manufacturing organizations available to the Government in the late war were undoubtedly a determining factor in the final result. Our European allies concede that they would have failed to withstand the preparedness of the German nation had it not been for the assistance of the munition makers of the United States. Without these same munition makers our own Government would have been powerless; in fact, it would never have had an opportunity to lend its assistance to the Allies, who carried the burden in the early war years.

While the Government of the United States showed wisdom in turning over the production of military explosives in small quantities during times of peace to the industrial manufacturers, still greater wisdom has been shown in the promotion of general industrial enterprise, so that the United States was prepared in many lines of manufacture necessary for war purposes.

It has not been many years since our European friends advised that the people of the United States should restrict themselves to the pursuit of agriculture, to which this country is well fitted, leaving Europe to manufacture from the raw materials won from American ground. Our Government wisely turned a deaf ear to those proposals, and, through the levying of tariffs, gave to the United States industries without which the war would not have been won. The production of steel, of many chemicals, and other products was fostered in the early days by protection that met such criticism, but this protection was a small price to pay for the development of manufactures.

WHERE GERMANY OUTWITTED US.

In one industry Germany contrived to outwit our Government, namely, in the production of dyes, which the German Government recognized as the key to the manufacture of certain military explosives not generally useful in other industry. However, the hand of fate delayed the war sufficiently to enable the manufacturers of the United States to prepare. Had the United States been driven to war a few years earlier there would have been total lack of preparation in a most necessary line of explosives and chemicals. No more cunning plan could be devised than to wrest from the United States the foundation of the manufacture of dyes. In raw materials the United States is not lacking. The skill of its labor and technical men is sufficient, but to establish the dye industry in competition with Germany, enough time must be permitted to work out economically the intricate processes that are required for the successful production of dyes. These latter can be made, in fact have been made, in quality equal to and even excelling the German dyes. But to date economical production through improvement of yield and economical disposition of by-products has not developed sufficiently to enable the industry to withstand unaided the competition of Germany, whose years of unopposed development work give her temporary advantage.

This same question has arisen many times before in the United States, and temporary increase in the prices of productive materials has been opposed by shallow thinkers, but the result of proper protective tariffs has been the employment of many men and women at good wages and the production of manufactured goods of quality and price far more satisfactory than the imported article of earlier years.

In time of war it is not difficult to enlist the capital of the adventurer in war-time pursuits. These adventurers are ready to take advantage of any situation. Their opportunities occur from time to time, not through their own making, and they are disregarded by the public as promoters of war. On the other hand, those industrial manufacturers who, through the production of similar materials, stand ready to help the Nation in the hour of need, are frequently the targets of those who aim to promote discord.

Could anything be more unlikely than that old and well-established industrial corporations should encourage a condition of affairs calling for the gravest financial risk in the preparation of huge quantities of special products in times so uncertain as a period of war? Again, the case of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. may be cited. At the outbreak of the war we had capital assets of about $80,000,000 and employed about 6,000 men. Our business amounted to about $26,000,000 per annum. Demands of war required the increase of this business to over $300,000,000 per annum, the employment of 68,000 men; and the investment in factories for the production of special military explosives of $220,000,000, equal to 270 per cent of the total assets of the company prior to the war.

The building of these factories and the production of 1,466,000,000 pounds of explosives required the purchase of an enormous quantity of materials in widely fluctuating markets, and in face of possible cessation of hostilities at any moment. Failure to produce on specified time would have entailed most serious consequences. Presence of explosives made the factories particularly liable to successful attack by the enemy, requiring constant guarding at all points. The introduction of thousands of untrained men not only caused grave risk with respect to the quality of product, but through possible carelessness or lack of information, introduced hazards whose consequence might amount to thousands of dollars in a single accident. Witness the wartime destruction of several powder magazines in flares that lasted a fraction of a minute, where the value of material lost amounted as high as $250,000 in one such accident.

I hope that I have made it clear that we makers of munitions who survived the risks to life and capital are not among those anxious to repeat the experiment of war by preventing the establishment of permanent peace. I consider President Harding's move in calling the disarmament conference a long step in the right direction, as it will be held while people still have in mind the physical horrors of warfare and while the nations still are suffering from economic wounds. Sentiment against war has always been strong; added to this sentiment now is the crushing burden of taxation and a disarrangement of all the orderly channels of domestic and international commerce. The conference has an excellent chance to achieve the high aim for which it has been called.

Nothing could contribute more to the ultimate and permanent prosperity and happiness of the world than the conclusion of agreements between the great nations of the world which would eliminate war and the causes of war. And so, let us say to the men gathered in Washington, let it go out from this gathering of men of the steel and iron industry, that we are solidly behind every effort they make which will hasten the coming of the time when war shall be no more. If disarmament inflicts a money loss upon us, the American iron and steel industry will accept it willingly and gladly.

—

[By Charles M. Schwab, chairman Bethlehem Steel Corporation.]

From the beginning to the end of the war our industry furnished for war purposes nearly 50,000,000 tons of steel. The mere figure does not picture to the mind what that means. And yet 50,000,000 tons of steel would build a modern railway ten times around the earth. During the war we talked of a "bridge of ships" across the Atlantic. Fifty million tons of steel put into the hulls of ships would actually build a bridge of ships from the United States to France.

It was truly a war of material and machines as well as of men, and we, of the American iron and steel industry, like to think, not that we won the war, but that we accomplished in full the part that was assigned to us. The demands then made upon our industry not only produced steel; they produced men who were at any time prepared to outdo in personal effort and sacrifice even the former great achievements of their industry.

After war comes peace. Our own great General Grant, after the Civil War, said: "Let us have peace." The Nation is prouder of that prayer than of any warlike utterance he ever made, and that sublime phrase of General Grant's might well be the motto of the world conference now assembled at Washington.

And I would like to take advantage of this occasion to say something which has long been upon my heart, and which at this significant moment it is clearly my duty to say. It was stated at some of the sessions of the recent League of Nations meeting in Geneva, it has often been carelessly suggested in the press, that the flame of war is in great measure kept alive by those interested in the private building of naval ships and the manufacture of munitions of war. I can, of course, speak only for myself, but I believe I know and express the sentiments of others placed in similar positions to mine when I say this:

I am at the head of the largest war-materials manufacturing works in the world. The shipyards of my company build more naval ships than are built in any other yards under one management in the United States. But I have been thrilled beyond expression, as has every good American, by the brilliant and statesmanlike scheme laid before the conference at Washington by Secretary Hughes. The carrying out of that plan may involve great monetary loss in some quarters, but such a thing as financial loss can be of no consideration when compared to the inestimable boon to mankind which would be involved in the realization of that magnificent plan. What red-blooded American would not, indeed, make any sacrifice if the burden of armament could be lifted from the shoulders of humanity. May God speed the day when this noble conception can be realized!

If the armed protection of our country is necessary, the establishment of which I am the head will devote itself with all its energy to providing means for protection of this country's homes and families. But I say to you from the bottom of my heart that if the statesmen now assembled in Washington under the farsighted leadership of our President and Secretary Hughes should find it possible to bring about disarmament and permanent peace, gladly would I see the war-making machinery of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation sunk to the bottom of the ocean.

Nothing could contribute more to the ultimate and permanent prosperity and happiness of the world than the conclusion of agreements between the great nations of the world which would eliminate war and the causes of war. And so, let us say to the men gathered in Washington, let it go out from this gathering of men of the steel and iron industry, that we are solidly behind every effort they make which will hasten the coming of the time when war shall be no more. If disarmament inflicts a money loss upon us, the American iron and steel industry will accept it willingly and gladly. We will do so not in a spirit of mere idealism and self-sacrifice but in a belief that the greatest permanent material prosperity would be brought about by the concentration of the energies of mankind upon constructive activities; upon means for well-being, and not for the destruction of civilization.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to print those two addresses as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a good deal of late about the testimony of experts and of referring matters to experts. I have not always agreed with that idea, but it strikes me that the amendment or the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] is the sensible thing under present conditions. We are certainly not a group of artists, we Members of Congress, and it seems to me that the Fine Arts Commission is the proper body to handle this proposition, and that we certainly need their advice on this question, on which we are divided, and there is only a handful of us here. I wanted simply to offer a word in favor of that proposition, of that solution of the matter.

Now, the question of the fountain at Dupont Circle does not belong in this discussion, but it has been dragged in. It has been suggested that that fountain is dry, that it has no water in it. I guess that ought to be referred to an expert on that subject. Perhaps I might suggest that my friend from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] take that up and consider it with his committee. He is an expert on "water," "drought," and kindred subjects. [Laughter.] But as for this proposition, I shall certainly vote for that amendment, as it seems to me the thing to do is to refer it to the Fine Arts Commission.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the rest of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds of the War Department be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site in front of the courthouse, city of Washington, D. C., upon an appropriate foundation or pedestal in harmony with the statue.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the resolution by inserting in line 5, after the word "upon," the words "or near."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Page 1, line 5, after the word "upon," insert the words "or near."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, in view of the ardent championship of this resolution by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING], the Committee on the Library has gladly given to him the hour at its disposal; but perhaps a word should be said as to the attitude of the committee.

I think I reflect the views of its members when I say that we were largely moved by the wave of sentiment aroused among those who joined in giving the statue to the District, as well as by the fact that the House has never passed deliberate judgment on the question of removal. For my own part I inclined to have the resolution reported to the House in order that the will of the House might be definitely ascertained. It will be recollected that the removal of the statue came about through a provision in an appropriation bill which was not brought clearly to the attention of the House.

We as a committee, I think, feel quite incompetent to pass judgment upon the artistic merits of this or any other statue. We feel that the law and the Executive orders relating to the functions of the Commission on Fine Arts were wisely conceived, and that as a rule it is the best practice to leave the decision in these matters to those who have made a lifetime study of them. In this particular instance, however, we were confronted by the problem of what to do with a work of sculpture that had been accepted and set up long before the modern method of handling these things had been devised. It is probably within the bounds of accuracy to say that there are many so-called works of art within the District of Columbia that would not to-day meet with the approval of the connoisseurs. But a few feet away, in Statuary Hall, are various statues that an expert, a connoisseur, a lover of the beautiful could not commend. What shall we do with them? That is a question to which I have found no answer. Possibly if we could reconstruct the city we would in this, as in many other particulars, abandon the judgment of our predecessors and relegate to obscure locations things which to-day offend the eye. For my part I hope these errors will not be repeated.

I trust that the finer and clearer understanding of what is and what is not beautiful may prevail. I have been disturbed at occasional indications that the House has been unwilling to leave decision in such matters to those trained in the subject, and I would here take this opportunity to align myself definitely and squarely on the side of the experts. Specialization, expert training is the order of the day. It is the secret of our progress. It is the spring of all the advancement that we are making in civilization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LUCE. I ask five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. In view of that fact, I hope the House will not disparage the judgment of those whom we ought to trust in such affairs. I hope as occasion comes, if support is necessary for this commission, it will be given with a free hand. What can more disturb the visitor to Washington who has a sense of the beautiful than the frightful monstrosity—I used my words with care—perpetrated when the War Risk Bureau building was allowed to extend its ugly height above Lafayette Square and so prevent for many years to come the surrounding of that beautiful spot with harmonious structures, the finest products of the architect's genius, which might make the square the most beautiful on all the continent? The mistake was made under the stress of war conditions. There was no time then to consider exigencies other than those of war. So the thing has been foisted upon us. And we might find other illustrations of the damage that has been wrought to the glory and splendor of this city by failing to follow the advice of those qualified to advise.

In this particular matter if the question were new and those qualified to advise should urge that this statue be placed somewhere else, their opinion might well prevail. In view, however, of the fact that this was the site given to those of the citizens of Washington, who so generously and in such numbers contributed the fund for the erection of the statue, and in view of the further fact that many of them who survive feel they have not been given fair treatment in the consideration of the question, your committee thought it might wisely come before the House for this full opportunity to determine whether the desires of the givers shall be longer controlling or whether, instead, some location shall be found that will meet the approval of the experts whom we have asked to advise us. Evidently, however, the statue ought not to be placed in the identical spot where it once stood, if perchance that be the middle of the sidewalk or in the street. In order that there may be no doubt about the matter, without consultation with the committee and purely upon my own initiative, I recommend an amendment saying that the statue shall be reerected upon "or near" the original site.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORES of Indiana offers the following substitute for the Luce amendment: Page 1, line 5, after the word "Lincoln," strike out the words "upon its original site in front of the courthouse in the city of Washington" and insert in lieu thereof the words "upon some appropriate site to be selected by the Commission of Fine Arts."

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana on the ground that it is not germane and is in violation of Rule XVI, section 7. I desire to be heard upon the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. If the gentleman will yield to me, I suggest to him that this is offered as a substitute and not as an amendment.

Mr. KING. I do not see what change that makes in the gentleman's position. If as an amendment it is not germane, then as a substitute, which is really nothing but an amendment, it certainly is not in order under this rule. Of course, one never knows the attitude of the Chairman's mind. If one did, he might determine just how far he should go with his argument and how much time he should take. The rule, as is well known to every Member of the House, is that no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under the color of amendment.

The House joint resolution under consideration authorizes and directs the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds—to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site in front of the courthouse, city of Washington, D. C.

The motion to amend provides—upon some appropriate site to be selected by the Commission of Fine Arts.

I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the joint resolution, and therefore in violation of Rule XVI, paragraph 7, which I have just quoted. Inasmuch as the subject now under consideration is the reerection of the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site in front of the courthouse, and so forth, it is very apparent that the motion to amend is on a subject most different from the subject under consideration.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the thing to determine, What is the matter under consideration by the committee? It is not the statue under consideration. That is not the question, although at first blush one might say here it is a statue under consideration by this committee. But what is under consideration is a joint resolution reported out of this committee which provides for the reerecting of a statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site in front of the courthouse in Washington, in the District of Columbia. There are numerous and divers and great quantities of decisions to be found in Hinds' Precedents, which I have taken some care to go over and which I have had copied, and if the Chair desires I will be glad to hand to the Chair. They are so voluminous and multitudinous that I will only cite a few of them. It is apparent from these decisions that the gentleman's amendment is far removed from the question under consideration, which is to reerect this statue in front of the courthouse. That, and that alone, is the question under consideration, and I will cite to the Chair a few of the decisions upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman as to one or two precedents upon which he relies.

Mr. KING. Section 5859, page 444, Hinds' Precedents, part 5: To a proposition relating to the sale of internal-revenue stamps in Porto Rico a proposition relating to posting lists of persons paying special taxes in the United States was held not germane. April 23, 1906, the House was considering a bill to provide for the sale of internal-revenue stamps in Porto Rico.

Mr. HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi, proposed as an amendment that collectors of internal revenue post the names of all persons having paid special taxes within the district. Mr. Hill, of Connecticut, made the point of order that the amendment was not germane. Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, Chairman, sustained the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that an amendment would not be in order providing that this statue of Abraham Lincoln should be reerected in the rear of the courthouse?

Mr. KING. I do not think that would be germane. As long as this resolution provides for the reerection of the statue where it was once before on its original site, I do not think it would be germane. It is not the erection of the statue but the reerection in the same place, and applies to a particular subject and nothing else. The gentleman, I suppose, has in mind the Canal case. No doubt he refers to that now. If the gentleman will read that case carefully, he will find that that was a general proposition, after all, and not the canal by a certain route, but a plan to put a canal through from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and under that theory it was a general proposition and not a specific one, and the Presiding Officer held that the amendment of Mr. PARKER of New Jersey prescribing the Panama route was germane to the original bill. But that case is entirely different from this.

Section 5862, page 450, Hinds', part 5: An amendment to repeal the duty on coal was held not to be germane to a proposition to pay for the investigation of a strike among coal miners. On December 3, 1902, the Committee of the Whole was considering a bill to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, when Mr. Gaines, of Tennessee, offered an amendment that all import duties on certain coals be abolished. Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, made the point of order that the amendment was not germane.

Mr. Grosvenor, of Ohio, Chairman, held—it would be quite as germane to provide a great many other remedies for the causes that may be reported to exist as for the House to assume what the report of that commission will be, and thereupon to proceed by appropriation of money, or by repeal of some existing statutes to provide against the contingencies that may be reported in that measure. The proposition is distinct in every particular from the bill here pending.

The Chair cites:

The paragraph to which this amendment is offered proposes to appropriate money for the building of a mint in the city of Philadelphia. The amendment deals with the general question of the coinage of money. It occurs to the Chair that the amendment is obnoxious to paragraph 7, Rule XVI, because it is not germane to the subject under consideration. (P. 1097, Parliamentary Procedure, Hinds.)

The Chair also cited, page 451:

The policy has been under all circumstances to distinguish and keep separate the provisions of a bill which by no means depend upon each other, or which relate to the same subject matter. But the policy of the House having been to separate and keep distinct the several matters of legislation, the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

In the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress there was before the House in Committee of the Whole a bill to provide reciprocal trade relations with Cuba. An amendment was offered to form a new section, providing for extending to the people of Cuba an invitation to apply for annexation of that island to the United States. Mr. Payne, of New York, made the point of order that it was not germane, and after argument it was sustained by so distinguished a parliamentarian as the gentleman from New York, Mr. Sherman. (P. 447.)

The Chair held the amendment was not germane.

These are but a few of the decisions sustaining my contention, and I suggest to the Chair the following decisions as being even stronger:

Section 5860, Hinds' Precedents, volume 5: To a bill relating to the tariff between the United States and the Philippines, an amendment declaratory as to the future sovereignty over those islands was held not germane.

Section 5863, Hinds' Precedents, volume 5: To a bill granting land to a railroad, an amendment allowing the importation of railroad iron free of duty is not germane.

Section 5867, Hinds' Precedents, volume 5: A proposition for the annexation of Cuba was held not to be germane to a bill providing for reciprocal trade relations with that country.

Section 5877, Hinds' Precedents, volume 5: To a bill relating to the sale of the public lands, an amendment proposing to give them to settlers was held not to be germane.

Section 5881: The distribution of seed grain to a class of destitute farmers was held not to be germane to the regular congressional seed distribution for the improvement of agriculture.

Section 5884: To a provision for the erection of a building for a mint, an amendment to change the coinage laws was held not to be germane.

Section 5886: To a bill relating to the coinage of silver in the Treasury and its use in redemption of notes issued against it, amendments authorizing the issue of bonds, and also authorizing the giving of notes for deposits of silver, were held not to be germane.

Section 5904: To a proposition to give an extra month's pay to the officers and employees of the House, an amendment to include clerks of Members was held not to be germane.

Decision by the Chairman, Hon. JAMES R. MANN.

Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to hand these various authorities to the Chair. I do not desire to occupy the time of the committee any further. The question before the committee is this: Shall this statue be reerected in front of the courthouse in the city of Washington? The gentleman would delegate the authority to some commission. An entirely different proposition is involved in delegating the authority of Congress to a commission to erect or place a statue. As the gentleman has himself said, the Fine Arts Commission has nothing to do except to advise. This turns over the power of Congress to the Fine Arts Commission and delegates to them that authority. This may be an argument about a simple statue, but the proposition is an important one and will perhaps become an important precedent. I am satisfied the Chair wants to render such a decision as will, 20 years from now, be quoted by Members of the House just as these other decisions which I have cited to the Chair are quoted now.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. The gentleman says that the Congress has no right to delegate the authority to put this statue back. How does the gentleman expect it to be erected—by the individual Members of Congress?

Mr. KING. The resolution provides how it shall be put back.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Shall we do it personally?

Mr. KING. I would sooner trust the gentleman to the personal possession of this treasure than I would the Fine Arts Commission, who have been its enemy from start to finish. They have been determined on getting it down and in some way destroying it and doing away with it. The gentleman knows that, and he knows of the insidious propaganda which has been conducted here by the Fine Arts Commission, which resulted in having its appropriation cut down from $10,000 to $6,000, and very justly. I think it ought to be cut down to the zero mark. I have gone into the activities of the Fine Arts Commission somewhat. I have had occasion to pay my respects to the Fine Arts Commission. The head of the Fine Arts Commission never studied art in his life. He never went to an art school. He had had some experience here in Washington in taking down the Greenough statue of Washington. He went on a junketing trip to Europe with 20 or 30 Senators 10 or 15 years ago, at the expense of the Government.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. KING. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] has asked me a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to have the gentleman confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, there was no objection made when the gentleman from Indiana interrogated me. I was merely answering his question. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is a good friend of mine. We are on the same committee. Confidentially, however, I doubt whether he has not been trying to damn this proposition with faint praise. [Laughter.] However, the gentleman knows the argument before his committee, and the gentleman knows that the committee reported this bill out in good faith, that the President wrote a letter to the gentleman's committee asking that they report it out, and the committee did report it out. There is no occasion for the gentleman to rise on this floor now and belittle a proposition that comes from his own committee. The statue of Abraham Lincoln will take care of itself.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have nothing further to say on the proposition. I have tried to put it plainly. The amendment has no connection or reference to the resolution under consideration.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, just a word or two. I cite the Chair to section 782 of the Manual, under Rule XXVI, which contains illustrations of germane amendments:

> An amendment which is germane, not being "on a subject different from that under consideration," belongs to a class illustrated by the following: To a bill providing for an interoceanic canal by one route, an amendment providing for a different route; to a bill providing for the reorganization of the Army, an amendment providing for the encouragement of marksmanship; to a proposition to create a board of inquiry, an amendment specifying when it shall report; to a bill relating to "oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products," an amendment on the subject of "renovated butter"; to a resolution rescinding an order for final adjournment, an amendment fixing a new date therefor; to a bill amending a general law in several particulars, an amendment providing for the repeal of the whole law.

The main thing in this resolution is the reerection of the statue of Abraham Lincoln. That is what the resolution is for. As it seems to me, the substitute is no less germane than the amendment tendered by the chairman of the committee, to which no objection was made. If we are to carry out the argument of the gentleman from Illinois literally, the provision that it shall be at or near is just as objectionable as the amendment which I offer. You have to take the whole thing together. The gentleman had a right to make a point of order on the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee. He did not make his point of order. He waited until the substitute was offered, and then made the point of order on the substitute. The substitute is in precisely the same class, even on his own theory, as the amendment which the gentleman from Massachusetts offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The title of the pending resolution is:

> To reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln on its original site.

The title well characterizes the resolution. In the text of the resolution it is provided that a certain official is "authorized and directed to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site in front of the courthouse in the city of Washington." To that language the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] offered an amendment providing that the same official "be authorized and directed to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon or near its original site in front of the courthouse in the city of Washington." As a substitute, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] offered to strike out certain language and insert other language so that it would provide that the same official be "authorized and directed to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon some appropriate site, to be selected by the Commission of Fine Arts."

The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that the proposed substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana is not germane. The great difficulty in passing upon questions of germaneness is the determining of what is the main purpose of the bill under consideration. The resolution that is now before the committee provides for the reerection of the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site.

The motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes to broaden that language so that it would be upon "or near" its original site. If the gentleman from Indiana had deferred his motion until the adoption of the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, then the question of germaneness would have been with reference to the resolution with that amendment—would have been with reference to a resolution providing for erection of the statue "upon or near" the original site. Manifestly the Luce amendment would broaden the resolution. No point of order was made against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and while it has not been adopted and that language is not yet embodied in the resolution, the gentleman from Indiana, offering his motion at this time as a substitute for the Luce amendment, the Chair thinks that he is entitled to consider in connection with this point of order the question of germaneness of the Moores substitute to the resolution as it would be modified by the pending Luce amendment. In any event, whether that be true or not, the Chair is impressed that the main idea of the resolution presented is not the erection of the monument upon a certain site but rather the reerection of a statue of Abraham Lincoln.

The word "reerect" does not mean necessarily the erection of a statue in the same spot where it was before. The statue having once been erected and taken down its erection upon any site would be a reerection. The Chair feels that the main purpose of the resolution is not to place the statue upon the same site that it was upon before but that the main purpose of the legislation is the reerection of the statue, and the question of the place is but a secondary detail. That being the view of the Chair as to the main purpose of the resolution as read from the text of the resolution, the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is germane, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak for one moment on the substitute proposed. We have here a drawing of the courthouse with the statue of Abraham Lincoln on its pedestal occupying the exact center of the sidewalk immediately in front of the main entrance door to the courthouse. It was an actual obstruction, a place not suited for the erection of the statue. My amendment or substitute is simply that the location of the statue when it is reerected should be left to the Fine Arts Commission where it is placed by law.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman has yielded to me, that this drawing which is before the committee was made by Mr. Elliott Woods, Architect of this Capitol, who placed the statue there, and he told me that it would be proper and artistic in that place, with plenty and ample room there, as anybody can see by looking at this simple picture. And it is not out of harmony in the appearance of the courthouse from what it is now. It is not to be erected upon a high pedestal—the gentlemen have seen pictures of the old pedestal—but it is to be placed upon one something like the one under the Daniel Webster Monument and like others in this city.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I do.

Mr. WALSH. In reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, does the gentleman know if the Fine Arts Commission is adverse to having this statue reerected, and if they are, is it not likely that they may select a site for it which will be out of the way and in surroundings that will not be considered adequate for this statue by those interested and enthusiastic about having this statue reerected?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. So far as I know, every member of the Fine Arts Commission is in favor of the reerection of the statue, and every member of the Fine Arts Commission is in favor of the reerection of this portrait statue, and I think without exception, without any breach of confidence, that I may say that without exception there is not a member of the Fine Arts Commission who favors the erection in the place from which it was taken down.

Mr. WALSH. But they are not opposed to having it reerected somewhere and will probably select a site that would be proper for this particular kind of work?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I am confident they would.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment largely for the purpose of answering more minutely the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Fine Arts Commission worked continuously for the destruction and tearing down of this monument. That I know personally. In the first place, when they were confronted with the charge of removal they laid it upon the judges. They say that the judges in the courthouse building wanted to erect a statue of some judge out in front of the courthouse and take Lincoln down. They gave another reason to one of the committee that the pedestal was defective, when it appears it is in absolutely perfect condition. And they said at another time that the lawyers demanded the removal of it, and another time they recommended to the committee putting it out here at Fort Stevens, where there is a real estate deal on, amongst the shacks out there and amongst the tin cans, dead cats, rubbish, and the goats. Never was there such animosity exhibited by man to man as that of the Fine Arts Commission toward this monument. If you turn it over to them, it will be in the same position that Julius Cæsar was in the Roman senate house at the time of his assassination. You would not know where you could ever find it again. They promised to put it in the cellar of the courthouse when it was taken down, and instead of that they put it on a rubbish pile down by the river, with the beautiful face exposed to the rain and dust. That was the work of the Fine Arts Commission. I have been down there and talked with them, and they deliberately stated that they were in favor of taking this monument down. And they said, "What are you going to do when they commence to take Farragut down?" I said I would have to fight in my humble way against that. It shows that they think that nothing in this city is artistic but what they themselves have passed upon and said is artistic. And having said it is artistic, therefore it is artistic. [Applause.]

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. If the statue is placed by the curbing, will there be room enough for people to pass on the sidewalk without obstruction?

Mr. KING. The Architect of the Capitol said that there is room enough in which to place it between the sidewalk and the steps of the courthouse.

Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. Leaving space enough for the pedestrians?

Mr. KING. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 39.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LUCE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRAMTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 127, had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 3.

So the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LUCE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FLORAL WREATH FOR MEMORIAL OF GEN. U. S. GRANT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 22 and consider the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming calls from the Speaker's table the Senate concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 22.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to purchase a floral wreath to be placed upon the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant at the unveiling ceremonies on April 27, 1922, the expense of such wreath to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER THURSDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 531. An act for the relief of Ivy L. Merrill; and

S. 3505. An act in reference to the summoning of grand juries in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 22.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and directed to purchase a floral wreath to be placed upon the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant at the unveiling ceremonies on April 27, 1922, the expense of such wreath to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, when the House meets on Friday we will continue the consideration of the "blue sky" bill, so called, and, except for conference reports that may be presented, the probability is that that will be the only legislation we shall consider this week, unless in the meantime it appears that there is some matter of importance that ought to be disposed of.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it probable that we will not have a session on Saturday?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not quite certain that we will conclude the consideration of the blue sky law on Friday. If we do not, I think we should meet on Saturday and conclude the consideration of that measure. But as matters now stand, if the blue sky law is disposed of on Friday, it occurs to me that there will be no very great urgency for a Saturday session.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. DUNBAR. Would the gentleman care to indicate about what time the House may be expected to recess this summer?

Mr. MONDELL. I have frequently expressed the hope that the Congress will adjourn on June 1. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNBAR. Does the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Does the gentleman anticipate the fulfillment of his hopes?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I try to be hopeful.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast."

Mr. MONDELL. It is true that adjournment may be a very few days later than that date, but June 1 is still my date. At any rate, the House program should be disposed before that date.

Mr. DUNBAR. In the event we should not adjourn on June 1, what are the probabilities of recessing for three days at a time during the coming months?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the House has a considerable amount of rather important business before it. Quite a number of important bills are on the calendar. They will take up the time of the House perhaps for several weeks, after which time it would appear that the business of the House will not be very pressing. I am still hopeful that the consideration of the tariff in the Senate will not take as long as some have anticipated.

The SPEAKER. Has the Committee on the Library any further business?

Mr. LUCE. It has not, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Committee on Printing was called.

CONTINUANCE OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Printing, I desire to call up Senate Joint Resolution 132.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania by direction of the Committee on Printing calls up a resolution, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to provide for the continuance of certain Government publications.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] will resume the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to provide for the continuance of certain Government publications, with Mr. CRAMTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration Senate Resolution 132, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 3 of the sundry civil appropriation act for 1922, approved March 4, 1921, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That hereafter no journal, magazine, periodical, or similar Government publication shall be published, issued, or discontinued by any branch or officer of the Government service unless the same shall have been authorized under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Joint Committee on Printing, and such publications shall not contain any commercial advertisement."

With a committee amendment, striking out on page 1, after lines 6 and 7 and on page 2 all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. That the head of any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to use from the appropriations available for printing and binding such sums as may be necessary for the printing of journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications as he shall certify in writing to be necessary to conduct the ordinary routine business required by law of such department, office, or establishment: Provided, That there may be printed, in addition to those necessary for official business, not to exceed 2,000 copies for free distribution by the department, office, or establishment issuing the same: Provided further, That the Public Printer shall print such additional copies thereof and of any other Government publication, not confidential in character, as may be required for sale to the public by the Superintendent of Documents at the cost of printing and binding, plus 10 per cent, without limit as to the number of copies to any one applicant who agrees not to resell or distribute the same for profit; but such printing shall be subject to regulation by the Joint Committee on Printing and shall not interfere with the prompt execution of printing for the Government.

Amend the title so as to read: "A joint resolution to authorize the printing of journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications, and for other purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, during the Sixty-fifth Congress the Joint Committee on Printing ascertained that many journals, magazines, periodicals, and other similar publications of semiofficial nature were being issued by the executive departments and other establishments of the Government at an enormous expense to the public. With a view of reducing these expenditures the committee recommended certain legislation in the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, which is contained in the legislative appropriation act for 1920 (40 Stat. 1270) approved March 1, 1919, as follows:

Provided, That hereafter no journal, magazine, periodical, or other similar publication, shall be printed and issued by any branch or officer of the Government service unless the same shall have been specifically authorized by Congress, but such publications as are now being printed without specific authority from Congress may, in the discretion of the Joint Committee on Printing, be continued until the close of the next regular session of Congress, when, if authority for their continuance is not then granted by Congress, they shall not thereafter be printed.

The term "close of the next regular session of Congress" fixed the date as June 5, 1920.

Pursuant to this law, the Joint Committee began a careful examination and investigation of all publications which were then being printed at Government expense and submitted a report of its findings to Congress, which was printed as Senate Document No. 265, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session. Attention is respectfully invited to the following paragraph of this report:

A careful investigation was made of 266 journals, magazines, and periodicals, which the committee ascertained were being published by various branches of the Government service at a cost of approximately $2,500,000 per annum. As a result of this investigation and the regulations adopted by the committee, 111 of these periodicals, which cost approximately $1,200,000 per annum, have been discontinued.

In order to continue this investigation and to bring about further economy in the printing of periodicals, there was inserted in the legislative appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1921, the following provision:

SEC. 8. That section 11 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out the first proviso and inserting the following in lieu thereof: Provided, That hereafter no journal, magazine, periodical, or similar Government publication shall be printed, issued, or discontinued by any branch or officer of the Government service unless the same shall have been authorized under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Joint Committee on Printing, and such publications shall not contain any commercial advertisements.

This provision did not become a law, however, as the bill was returned to the House of Representatives without the approval of the President, who contended "that this section, which would give the Congressional Joint Committee on Printing power to exercise censorship over the executive departments, is an encroachment on the functions of the Executive and incompatible with good government."

Upon the disapproval of this proposed legislation, there was inserted a provision in the sundry civil act for 1921 (40 Stat. 945) approved June 5, 1920, which extended the life of these publications until the end of the fiscal year 1921. The paragraph reads as follows:

SEC. 4. Any journal, magazine, periodical, or similar publication which is now being issued by a department or establishment of the Government may, in the discretion of the head thereof, be continued, within the limitation of available appropriations or other Government funds, until June 30, 1921, when, if it shall not have been specifically authorized by Congress before that date, such journal, magazine, periodical, or similar publication shall be discontinued.

It will be observed that this legislation is an absolute prohibition against the continuance of journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications after that date, unless specifically authorized by Congress.

Pursuant to the above act, the joint committee continued to investigate the remaining 155 periodicals that were being printed at Government expense, many of them consisting of newspapers which were being mimeographed or multigraphed in order not to be in conflict with the statute of the Sixty-fifth Congress, which provided that no periodical should be "printed." The sundry civil act approved June 5, 1920, provides that no periodical shall be "issued" by a department or establishment of the Government. This change of the law compelled the discontinuance of many of these publications, including those that were multigraphed or mimeographed.

Some of the executive departments invited attention to the fact that this legislation discontinued some journals, magazines, and periodicals which were deemed absolutely necessary in the transaction of public business. The Joint Committee on Printing, not having power to authorize the continuance of such publications, requested a second extension of time, which was enacted by section 3 of the sundry civil act for 1922 (41 Stat. 1433) approved March 4, 1921, as follows:

SEC. 3. Any journal, magazine, periodical, or similar publication which is now being issued by a department or establishment of the Government may, in the discretion of the head thereof, be continued, within the limitation of available appropriations or other Government funds, until December 1, 1921, when, if it shall not have been specifically authorized by Congress before that date, such journal, magazine, periodical, or similar publication shall be discontinued.

During this same session of Congress and in the same law the Committees on Appropriations carried a limitation upon the moneys appropriated to the executive departments for printing and binding which was intended to curtail wasteful printing. The paragraph is as follows:

Money appropriated under the foregoing allotments shall not be expended for printing or binding for any of the executive departments or Government establishments, except such as shall be certified in writing to the Public Printer by the respective heads or chiefs thereof to be necessary to conduct the ordinary and routine business required by law of such executive department or Government establishment.

During the closing days of the last session of Congress another effort was made to secure an extension of time until March 1, 1922, but this resolution was not considered in the House and the law specifically prohibiting the issuance of such publications has become fully effective.

On December 1, 1921, when the statute (41 Stat. 1433) discontinuing the printing of periodicals became effective there were approximately 40 of these publications being issued. Some of these are now consolidated and merged with other publications, and of this number probably more than one-half can be discontinued without detriment to the Government service, which will further reduce the cost of printing. When the joint committee first began its investigation of this reckless waste of public money in the printing of periodicals the total number was approximately 266 publications.

From the foregoing facts it will be observed that the Joint Committee on Printing, through its activity in stopping this wasteful practice, eliminated more than 200 nonessential publications which were being printed at Government expense. The annual cost of these publications was estimated at $2,500,000, and taking into consideration the few that now remain, it is fair to assume that more than $2,000,000 a year has been saved the Government.

This certainly is a very good record of economy for the Joint Committee on Printing, and personally I have felt that it would be perfectly proper to place in the hands of the joint committee the power to regulate the different publications.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIESS. Not just now.

Senate Joint Resolution 132, which we are now considering, provided that—

Hereafter no journal, magazine, periodical, or similar publication shall be published, issued, or discontinued by any branch or officer of the Government service unless the same shall have been authorized under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Joint Committee on Printing, and such publications shall not contain any commercial advertisements.

The resolution passed the Senate in that form and came to the House and was referred to the Committee on Printing. While our committee is a small one, we were not entirely unanimous in reporting this resolution as passed by the Senate, and we have amended the Senate resolution, as shown by our report.

The committee recommends the enactment of the proposed legislation, so that Congress may hold the executive departments and the Director of the Budget, who is charged with the duty of furnishing estimates for printing and binding, strictly responsible for the use of money appropriated for such purposes.

Congress having fixed a specific sum to be expended for printing and binding, the responsibility for the proper administration of this appropriation will rest with the executive branches of the Government, who, under the Budget system, are required to submit all requests for appropriations through the Bureau of the Budget.

The first proviso of this amendment authorizes the printing of not to exceed 2,000 copies of these publications for free distribution. This number is specified for the reason that the printing act of 1895 restricts the number to 1,000 copies. The increased number allowed by this legislation is considered adequate for free distribution by the executive departments.

The second proviso authorizes the Public Printer to print additional copies of any journal, magazine, or periodical which he may require for sale to the general public. The sale price is to be fixed at the cost of printing, plus 10 per cent. This proviso also authorizes the Public Printer to reprint for sale any publication issued by Congress. The Public Printer is now authorized by law to print for sale any publication issued by an executive department, but the Comptroller of the Treasury held some years ago that he did not have authority to reprint congressional publications for sale. Your committee is of the opinion that this authority should be granted, but believes that the privilege should be regulated by the Joint Committee on Printing.

By the act discontinuing the issuance of journals, magazines, and periodicals on December 1, 1921, Congress decreed that it was opposed to the executive departments engaging in the magazine business without specific authority of law. The proposed legislation permits the printing of such journals, magazines, and periodicals as are certified in writing to be necessary in the transaction of public business, provided the department has sufficient funds and the Director of the Budget approves thereof.

I am of the opinion that the enactment of this legislation provides a means whereby the departments may print necessary publications and still keep the expenditures thereof within the appropriations for printing and binding.

Mr. CABLE. I should like to ask the gentleman whether it was the intention of the committee to make all publications subject to the regulations of the joint committee or only such publications as shall exceed the original issue as needed by the executive department?

Mr. KIESS. I do not know that I understand exactly. Does the gentleman mean the number to be printed?

Mr. CABLE. In the last part of your committee amendment, in line 25, page 2, you say:

But such printing shall be subject to regulations by the Joint Committee on Printing.

Does that mean that the head of a department must come to your committee and get authority in the first place to issue any publication?

Mr. KIESS. This was called to my attention just as I came on the floor, and I think it will be necessary to offer an amendment in order to clarify it.

Mr. CABLE. I have an amendment to strike out "printing" and insert "additional copies," so that it will read:

But such additional copies shall be subject to the regulations of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. KIESS. I see no objection to that.

I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Under what order are we proceeding—general debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS] has one hour.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I wish to ask to be recognized later in my own right to speak about this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is opposed to the bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In its present form.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The debate is now going on in the hour of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS].

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS] yields to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the members of the Committee on Printing at last are in harmony over this measure, which is designed to restore certain Government publications considered necessary, which publications fell with the general order that knocked out some 255 Government publications—good, bad, and indifferent, but mostly bad and indifferent. I take it that it never was the intention of this Congress or the preceding Congress to destroy all periodicals and magazines issued by the Government; but the clause that was carried in the sundry civil act for 1922, the third extending clause, forced all of the war-born publications and many others to die on a certain date. Numerous good publications died, including the Journal of Agricultural Research, the Experiment Station Record, the Labor Review, and some others. Now, this particular bill, which is a sort of compromise brought out by the committee and which is, I think, based on a bill that I introduced in an effort to solve the situation, proposes to save the good publications and not to permit the revival of the unnecessary ones. It permits the Secretaries of the departments to say what publications they shall establish, and they say that by certifying to the fact that these are necessary for the carrying on of the business of their departments.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. That is just how this crop of 250 or 300 publications originated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not quite.

Mr. WALSH. Well, practically so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let us see if I can not make that clear. Heretofore if an appropriation were secured in the Agricultural appropriation bill for some activity of the Government—we will say for the extermination of the boll weevil, although it was never done in that particular case—the item would read:

For the extermination of the boll weevil, for expenditures in and outside of the District of Columbia, including printing—

So many thousand dollars. And then under that authority, "including printing," they would take a very considerable proportion of the appropriation made for the particular purpose and use it for printing a magazine. That is how they sprang up. You will notice here in this particular bill that the authority comes with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to use from the appropriations available for printing and binding.

Now, if the Budget officials and the members of Appropriation Committees of Congress are not able to sit on the demand of a bureau chief that he be permitted to print a more or less unnecessary newspaper or a magazine, I doubt if Congress should ask the Joint Committee on Printing to try to do that work.

Mr. WALSH. Why should not the Joint Committee on Printing do that work?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Because the Joint Committee on Printing is composed of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House, and they have other duties than sitting day in and day out to say thumbs up and thumbs down on a proposed United States Beekeepers' Journal or a suggested Shoemaker's Federal Magazine.

Mr. WALSH. Under the original authority of law it was the duty of the Joint Committee on Printing, and what objection would there be to adding, with the approval of the Director of the Budget and the Joint Committee on Printing in lines 8 and 9?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Before the gentleman seriously proposes such an amendment, let me ask if the gentleman has ever been pursued by bureau chiefs who are themselves pursued by the printing bug?

Mr. WALSH. I know the gentleman from Washington has and thrives on it, and the Joint Committee on Printing has done a great work in eliminating these foolish and silly publications that have been going on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me say to the gentleman that I thought really that I had done a little something for my Government in playing a part that struck down some 250 periodicals and magazines and saved by that act several millions of dollars. But I received a letter a short time ago from a constituent who had read my speech on useless Government publications, and this constituent wrote something like this: "So this is all you have been able to accomplish in Congress, is it?" [Laughter.] So I say to my friend, virtue is its own reward. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, I did not know that they had any individual as benighted and ignorant as that in the gentleman's district. That constituent evidently has not followed the gentleman's career in Congress, for if he or she had, they would know that he is always doing valuable work not only for his district but for the country. [Applause.] And one of the most valuable was this striking out or eliminating these foolish and silly publications by the Government. It was running wild, and they had no consideration for the taxpayer, Congress, or anybody else.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is very kind of the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that but perhaps this particular constituent of mine had received his education from "School Life," or some other publication of that kind which thrived here for eight years on the ability to exchange compliments between bureau chiefs as to how great and good they were and how poor the rest of us were.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If the gentleman will yield, it seems to me that under the language of the committee amendment the Government is not sufficiently protected against improper publications and that an amendment of the character suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts would not only be a safeguard but would carry out the intention of those who have sought to restrict Government printing to the proper official activities of the departments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This would undertake to put the burden of refusal on the Budget Commission and Appropriations Committee. Because I happen to be a member of the Joint Committee on Printing, why should I be obliged to say that one journal published by the Federal Government is a good thing and another journal published by the Federal Government is a bad thing? How do I know? One might be worthless from my standpoint, but not from the gentleman's viewpoint. Of course, we would both say probably that magazine printing is not truly a Government activity, but we would also agree that we can not now get out of it entirely.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I think there ought to be some committee in Congress with authority to finally pass upon what publications should be issued by the various departments and bureaus.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will not the gentleman admit that when Congress goes into the publishing of magazines and newspapers it has gone far afield? And have we got the nerve to stop them all? Or, for instance, should we stop the circulation of the Experimental Station Record?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No; I would not. I think that is a valuable publication.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. From the gentleman's standpoint, and another Member might say the Monthly Labor Review is a more valuable publication. So it is. And so you go clear through the list of Federal publications.

Now, to come back to the text of this bill. I think there is merit in the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Ohio on page 2, where it says such printing shall be subject to regulation of the joint committee. I think that ought to be tied to the provision beginning in line 18, that the Public Printer shall permit such additional copies thereof, and so forth. That is to say, make that restriction apply to additional copies.

It is also permitted in this part of the bill to reprint certain congressional documents which are out of print and for the reprinting of which there is no authority of law at present.

Mr. Chairman, I think further the bill might be perfected by striking out the beginning of the lines on the first page, lines 3, 4, and 5, which read:

That section 3 of sundry civil appropriation act for 1922, approved March 4, 1921, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

Why not let the bill begin with the words on page 2, line 6, and make this a separate law, a separate act of Congress? With these amendments, which I shall offer at the proper time, I think we may as well go ahead with the bill. If the House thinks it is better to let the Joint Committee on Printing say thumbs up or thumbs down on magazines, then the joint committee will have that work to do; but if that is done, then I suggest that the committee better be enlarged.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will it not be somewhat simplified if we provide that they shall go first to the Director of the Budget, and if they get his approval then that they shall go to the Joint Committee on Printing, and the Joint Committee on Printing can then approve or reject? I appreciate that it means quite a little additional work for the gentleman who is on another committee handling very important matters, but does he not think it is well for Congress for a while, at least, to retain some supervision, particularly when there is such a drive on to reestablish a lot of these publications that have been discontinued as a result of the decision of the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I agree with that in a way, but we have had some experience. We had these all down, and it was agreed pretty generally that they should stay down until we find a method of bringing them up by some uniform plan.

While a plan was under discussion the Interior Department appropriation bill went through carrying appropriations for two publications—School Life and the Public Park Magazine. That ended the general printing plan. They also sought to carry an appropriation for the Reclamation Magazine, but that went out. Two are now up by law.

Mr. WALSH. For a year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. For a year. It is better in my opinion to allow the Committee on Appropriations, representing a much larger proportion of the House than the Joint Committee on Printing, to say. Right this very day Members from different States have come to me, knowing this bill was about to come up, and have pulled from their pockets some particular Government publication that they think ought to be continued, such as the Good Roads Magazine or some other, and I want to say that unless a man is an expert, is able to say what is good and what is bad, he ought not to be given that discretion. How do I know that the Good Roads Magazine is not a good publication?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman did know enough about the matter and exercised discretion and judgment very wisely, so that the number was decreased from two hundred and sixty-odd down to about thirty-odd.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; we used a meat ax, and great was the distress thereafter.

Mr. WALSH. If the Joint Committee on Printing were competent to exercise that judgment and save over $2,000,000, it would seem to me that they are competent to pass upon a request from a department seeking to reestablish the printing and publishing of some other magazine. If it gets by the Director of the Budget, it seems to me that the work of the Joint Committee on Printing would be somewhat simplified, and they could require that the bureau chief or the executive head should make out his case with the most convincing evidence before they would give it their approval.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The only trouble is that the case is not made entirely before the Director of the Budget. The case is attempted to be made by asking those interested in this or that magazine all over the United States to write letters to their Members of Congress, and then the Members send them in to the members of this joint committee, and ask that this be done forthwith.

Mr. WALSH. I have not seen the gentleman swept off his feet by any demand of his colleagues or by the demand of people outside. I do not think that requests for reestablishing Government publications would appall him at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman knows that a Government publication is like the proverbial cat, except that it has even more lives than a cat.

Mr. WALSH. And I admit that some of them are not quite so useful as the proverbial cat.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. What does the bill contemplate—that the Budget Bureau should first determine what publications shall be allowed to exist; and is it contemplated further that the Committee on Appropriations should take into consideration the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget with reference to certain publications and make definite appropriations for them?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No. Any publication has first got to have the money with which to print, and in order to get the appropriation from the Budget it must show merit.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Does it contemplate that the Bureau of the Budget shall recommend that certain publications be continued from year to year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; it does not require that. The Secretary can determine what ones he thinks are necessary, and all he has to do is to so certify, and the next thing is to get the money, and when he gets the money he can print them within the limits of this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not know how we could ever keep track of them in that way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He certifies and then he prints them, and gets what copies he needs for the routine business of his establishment. The Secretary of Agriculture, say, would certify that he needs so many copies of the Experiment Station Record to send to stations throughout the country. That is routine business. He gets them. Then he gets 2,000 copies for free distribution, and that takes care of the magazine and his exchanges. Thereafter all copies printed are sold at 10 per cent above cost. They are all treated alike. Two thousand copies are given for free distribution.

One great trouble with the Government publication of newspapers and magazines and periodicals has been the method of distribution. It is surprising to hear a great hue and cry about the loss of this or that publication, and then on examining the matter to find that it had a circulation of only about 18,000 copies. If we are going to authorize them at all, we should not care about the number of copies, provided people pay for them. We offer them at 10 per cent above cost. In that we have followed the plan of the British Government. The publications of the British Government of all kinds are sold at a price and the price is marked on the publication, printed at the time.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That would mean that the Reclamation Record could be purchased by the different reclamation projects on a subscription basis.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and that is the way it was until it legally lost its life.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I wish to offer some amendments to the resolution. Everyone knows that Government publications have been put out, some of them unnecessary, in quantity unnecessary and improper, and that worthy effort has been made to reduce the number, method of printing, and so forth. The purpose of this bill is commendable, but in my judgment it goes too far. My attention was called to it in the first instance by officials of the Department of Agriculture, who examined the bill and found its provisions much too narrow. It would forbid the printing of important and, as they view it, absolutely necessary publications from that department; and, in addition to that, these officials have advised with the comptroller, who, tentatively at least, gives the construction he will put upon the language of this resolution as drafted and presented here if this shall become the law. I call the attention of the committee to page 1, line 13, where it authorizes and permits the printing of publications which are necessary to "conduct the ordinary routine business required by law of a department, office, or establishment." The comptroller construes that to mean just ordinary office business, and that it would forbid the publication of many of the important and necessary publications of the Department of Agriculture. It is suggested an amendment be adopted which will permit the preparation and issuing of publications in the "proper conduct of the activities of the department," instead of carrying on the routine business of the department. I have an amendment to cover this point, which I will offer at the proper time. And I would suggest another amendment, which seems to be acceptable to the chairman of this committee; that is, to change the words in lines 24 and 25 so as to limit the regulation and control by the joint committee to matters set forth in the second proviso, which is the printing and the distribution of additional copies. There will be no difference of opinion as to the wisdom of that amendment. Now, in my judgment the objections which are urged by the officials of the Department of Agriculture limiting them to routine business would make impossible the publication of many papers and documents of the greatest importance to argiculture.

Mr. KIESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will yield.

Mr. KIESS. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that in this language we are merely requoting what is the law now. It is provided in the sundry civil appropriation act of 1922, approved March 4, 1921, that—

> Money appropriated in the foregoing allotments shall not be expended for printing or binding for any executive department or Government establishments except such as shall be certified in writing to the Public Printer by the respective heads or chiefs thereof to be necessary to conduct the ordinary and routine business required by law of such executive department or Government establishment.

That is in the present law, and if you take it out of this bill it would not change the existing law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In my judgment that word "routine" is too narrow, and as far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned the words ought to be "ordinary activities of the department" because the principal work of the department, its important functions, cover a large number of activities which are not strictly routine business.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The department carries on scientific investigations. It is closely connected with agricultural colleges and with experiment stations—one in each State. Colleges and stations are carrying on experiments with money partly furnished by the Federal Government, and they make reports of work they have done, their findings, their discoveries, results of the experiments, and all that.

These matters ought to be published, and the law ought to provide for their prompt publication and general distribution. The number of them available for distribution ought not to be limited as they would be limited by this bill. They are distributed now, and the distribution ought to be permitted—I will yield to the gentleman in just a moment—to county agents, to colleges, and to scientists, and to a very large number of individuals and associations, and so forth, which cooperate with the department in gathering information.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In the gathering of crop statistics and the making of reports as to markets, and so forth. These matters of information ought to be published, and there should be available for distribution, at least to the persons directly concerned with the collection of the information, copies of the publication that are issued relative to those matters.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will yield.

Mr. WALSH. What business does any executive department engage in that is not routine and ordinary business?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The Department of Agriculture engages in a lot of business that is not routine, and in the opinion of the comptroller——

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Comptroller of the Treasury has given out the opinion to some Government official in advance of a law to be enacted by the Congress as to what that law would mean if the Congress enacts it?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I understand this language has been submitted to the comptroller and he has been asked what construction he would put on the word "routine," and he has said that, in his judgment, it would confine the Department of Agriculture within very narrow limits and would forbid the publication of certain of its matters and would limit the number of its publications available for distribution.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman now cite some activity of the Department of Agriculture that is not within the classification of their ordinary and routine business?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Weather reports and crop reports, also the work the department is doing with the agricultural agents throughout the country, receiving reports from them as to results of their work, the results of the work, and the communications of one kind and another by and between the department and experiment stations, colleges, individuals, and societies, which make experiments and investigations. They are not routine work, but they are among its proper and important activities. They are not routine work carried on in the offices of the department.

Mr. WALSH. What is it? Extraordinary work?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. They are not regular; they are irregular. I do not know how to describe it. They are scientific and investigational, and results are published when known and believed to be valuable.

Mr. WALSH. But they have never published these communications with their county agents in pamphlet form such as desired here?

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. The existing law, as read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS], is different from the language of this bill, I would call to the attention of my colleague. The present law reads as the gentleman from Pennsylvania reads it, namely, "ordinary and routine business." This amendment of the committee, as it appears in the pending resolution, leaves out the word "and" and makes it ordinary routine business. It changes the whole meaning of the law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have considerable information as to the length to which some departments went, beginning a few years ago and extending throughout the war, sending out papers, pamphlets, and publications of one kind and another, many of which were improper and altogether unnecessary. And the Congress ought to take up that matter and properly limit the preparation and the printing and the circulation of a lot of these things. My only contention now is, in trying to do that they have made this language too narrow and it will interfere with the proper activities of the Department of Agriculture. And my opinion of that is based on the statement of prominent officials of the department who speak of having interviewed the comptroller and having knowledge of the construction he might put on this language.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield to me a minute in regard to this construction?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the hypothetical ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury on a piece of legislation about to be considered by Congress is going a little far, and I think if the comptroller did rule that this would prevent the distribution of the weather reports, he made a mistake. If there is anything routine, it is that. It is not contemplated here at all.

I see no objection, if we are going to loosen up on it at all, to putting in that word. Who is to say as to what is the number? From the general plan a large number of agricultural publications will be required and perhaps a small number of some other bureau of the Government.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Some one does say what publications shall be issued and the number of them. This matter has to be brought to the attention of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget; officials of a department who are asking money must go before the Committee on Appropriations, and what a department proposes to do can not be done until it has the approval of the Director of the Budget and the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The chairman of the committee has just informed me that the dropping of the word "and" is a typographical error, which was noticed since this debate began. The words "ordinary and routine business" give a clear meaning.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill as it came to us and as it is before the House, unless the committee amendment is adopted, contemplates that the Printing Committee shall be the censor of all publications from the executive departments. That Printing Committee is made up of legislators, three from the House and three from the Senate. The publications are such as are necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the executive departments. Now, Congress can do one of two things. It can do what is suggested in the bill that causes all of these publications to stop except those specifically authorized by law and pass a law specifically authorizing certain publications to be made and they will be made. Now, if Congress wants to face the issue it can do that. The committee can provide for the publications to be selected and issued on the judgment of somebody in the executive department, or, as was proposed here, by the Joint Committee on Printing. Let us look for a moment at the natural result of that. Here is the Agricultural Department all the time wanting to expand in its publications, occasionally having a necessity for issuing a new kind of a publication. That is the executive. Contemplate the condition that would exist if the House was of one political faith and the Senate of another. What would be the complexion of your Joint Committee on Printing? There would be three Democrats and three Republicans. The Secretary of Agriculture at the present time is a Republican. He is charged with the responsibility of properly running that department, and the present gentleman, and every one I have known there, has been very earnest in the attempt to carry out the necessary, logical, and proper functions of the Department of Agriculture. He proposes to institute a new publication that he conceives to be absolutely necessary for the proper carrying on of the executive department of which he is the head, and it comes up here to be censored by a committee, and three of them say "no" and three of them say "yes"; then where will you land? There would be a deadlock all the time. You destroy the arm of the executive heads of your departments, because the executive head of a department is of the same complexion as the administration, and an administration ought to have the right to say what should be and what should not be published, without having somebody of an opposite political faith put a veto on it.

Mr. CURRY. Does the gentleman think the Department of Agriculture should have the right of propaganda with its publications? Does the gentleman think that if they were all Democrats or all Republicans the Agricultural Department has the right of propaganda in favor of any party or against any party? Or do you think it has the right to do as it does, to propaganda through its publicity bureau for or against legislation before Congress?

Mr. STEVENSON. The "gentleman from South Carolina" has stated no leaning to the proposition proposed by the gentleman from California.

Mr. CURRY. Do you not think we ought to have rules to stop what they are doing? They propose by this bill, which came from the Senate, to put it on the Committee on Printing to undertake to do that, and let it have the odium of having a controversy with a great executive department as to whether it is or is not properly discharging its functions, and charging it with propaganda in this country when it may be proceeding, in fact, from the very best motives to do what it was created to do. You propose to permit the Department of Agriculture itself to determine what is and what is not propaganda, and what is and what is not proper in legislation pending before Congress?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not propose, so far as I am concerned, to give the Department of Agriculture the right to propagandize if it is improper to do it, but it does seem to me that when you have a Director of the Budget who can say, "Here you are attempting to publish something that is not proper, and I will not approve the expense account for it," you have got a pretty good check on it, and he is a member of the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. CURRY. Yes; but the Department of Agriculture does not submit to the Director of the Budget the manuscript of the stuff they are to publish.

Mr. STEVENSON. Now, I will meet the gentleman from California on this ground: Is he prepared to-day to stand up here and vote that the Department of Agriculture shall publish a magazine and no other, and pass an act specifically authorizing what shall be published, and assume the responsibility that he wants Congress to assume, or that somebody wants the Printing Committee, divided half and half, to assume?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I entirely agree with the views expressed by the gentleman, and I wish to call his attention to this point: Here is a provision that, under certain conditions, the Department of Agriculture may print journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications. Now, under the ejusdem generis rule that lawyers talk about sometimes would not that confine the printing to journals, magazines, and periodicals, and probably preclude the Department of Agriculture from printing any other kind of publications?

Mr. STEVENSON. If the Department of Agriculture puts out anything which on its face could be detected as propaganda, and not a legitimate publication for the legitimate purpose of carrying on the public business of this Government, the Public Printer himself would call attention to it and be a check on it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the gentleman from South Carolina has lost the point of the remark made by the gentleman from Virginia. The gentleman from Virginia believes the use of the words "journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications" would preclude the publication of anything else except journals, magazines, and periodicals.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then it turns upon what the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify is a journal. What is a journal?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Would it not depend a good deal upon the view of other officials, the Director of the Budget or some other official?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Director of the Budget is the only man who has a check on it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. My point is this, that a narrow construction might be applied that would restrict the Department of Agriculture to the publication of magazines, journals, and periodicals.

Mr. STEVENSON. I get the gentleman's point. But he is getting away from the question I was arguing, that Congress has no business to run away from this question and undertake to put it on somebody else, and that is exactly what this resolution as it comes here proposes. The gentleman is criticizing the terms of the amendment which the committee has reported and for which I shall vote when it comes to that; but the first question is, What shall we do with the Senate bill? That bill is simply a proposition to throw the control into a committee which half the time in the history of this Government is controlled by three Members of one political party and three Members of another political party. That gives the power to a minority, perhaps by sitting still, to deprive an executive department of the power to issue what may be necessary. Therefore, I am opposed to that, and I am in favor of amending the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman let me interrupt him to state my own position?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think the Senate provision is entirely unfair, and I think the House proposition is unsatisfactory, because it leads toward undue restriction.

Mr. STEVENSON. If you are willing to provide that certain publications shall be made, and no other, then we shall stop these encroachments upon public printing. The stoppage of these publications was provided for three years ago.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman from South Carolina will permit I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] to the fact that the House amendment does not lead in the same direction as the provision in the Senate resolution. In the House amendment the only thing the Joint Committee on Printing is to do is to restrict, if necessary, the extra printing, and stop, if necessary, the resale which might come about in the commercializing of Government publications. Everything else is left to the heads of the executive departments. Congress can not, by the very nature of things, just as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] has said, say what is good or what is bad or what is necessary. We intend this resolution to mean, and I think it does mean, journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications. We do not attempt to define them. We do not name them. We are not opposed to printing when it is necessary. If the departments can get the money from Congress on the approval of the Budget Commission, they can go ahead with desirable publications as part of the routine business.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think, though, you would run the risk of having it said that such publications are not within the law because they are not similar to magazines, journals, and periodicals.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But you understand that under the printing law the departments still have the right to print statistical matter. Now, it stands to reason that if the Government goes into the collection of information, statistical and otherwise, for the people, the Government must not sit here like a closed bottle and hold it all. It is really a problem, as the gentleman will see. But I agree with the gentleman now speaking [Mr. STEVENSON] that we can not, through a small committee of Congress, undertake to censor the magazines themselves or to designate the particular magazines to be printed.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman from Washington interrupted me, because I think he knows more about this than anybody else in the House connected with the printing business.

But, now, to come to the proposed amendment. The original bill is indefensible from any point of view, as it seems to me. But coming to the proposed amendment, you have the provision first that the head of the department who issues the circular, or, as the gentleman from Virginia says, the journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications, you require him to certify in writing that they are necessary to conduct the ordinary routine business of the department. Now, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] seems to be afraid that that will not be broad enough, and so does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE]. What we have found has been that they always get clear away from the home base. They have been too broad, and the danger always is that they will construe these things into a license to carry them everywhere. As King Richard said to Friar Tuck, the holy clerk of Copmanhurst, "I will but assign thee three bucks every season, but if that do not prove an apology for thy slaying thirty, I am no Christian knight nor true king." And that is the way with this. This will certainly give them all the license they need. If they do not get it under the head of journal they will get it under the head of magazine, and if they do not get it under the head of magazine certainly they will get it under the head of periodicals, and if they can not come under that they will get it under the head of "some similar publication." If that does not cover enough territory to give discretion to the executive departments, why, I am not in favor of giving them any discretion. If we have to give them the right to publish the Holy Bible down there, while it would be a very good thing and probably be exceedingly enlightening to a great many Members of Congress and to a good many people in the country, I am not in favor of going that far. You can not lay down a specific hard and fast rule. You have got to give some little room for the working of the joints of the machinery. You can construct the most perfect machine in the world, and make it absolutely complete, but if you gear it so tight that the joints can not work you will break it all to pieces when you start it. The secretary of the department has in the first place to certify what? We suppose that these gentlemen at least have some respect for their reputation for truthfulness. A man who is going to certify to a thing that is going to be sent all over the country is necessarily careful that his certificate bears at least some resemblance to the truth. If he does not, why he is not fit to be Secretary of the Treasury, or Secretary of Agriculture, or secretary of anything else. He must certify that it is necessary—not merely that it is convenient, not merely that it is desirable, but that it is necessary—for the proper conduct of the business of his department. Now, you say you have got a horseback opinion from the Director of the Budget that he is going to construe it so and so. Well, let us see how he construes it when the case comes before him.

I have heard a heap of judges shoot off their mouths when sitting around hotels and at other places when they were off duty about what they would decide on a certain question before the question was brought before them and before the law was laid down. But when they are confronted with the responsibility of deciding that this shall or shall not be done, and hear the authorities on one side and on the other, and hear the reasons on one side or on the other, they frequently change their minds; and I submit that no Director of the Budget would be so arbitrary as to destroy the legitimate usefulness of a department of this Government because forsooth he had a little difference of opinion in his mind as to whether a certain thing was a journal, a periodical, or some similar publication. So it seems to me that it is our duty to do one of two things, either to kill this bill right here and now and then begin legislation which will specifically define what things shall be published by all the departments and put every one of them in a strait-jacket and say, "You can not go any further than this," or else provide this machinery which does give some discretion and not provide for an interminable tie-up here in case we might have a division of political complexion in the two Houses, as you are likely to have half the time.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman would not restrict these releases that are handed out by the departments every few days, would he?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think so. Those will get into the papers and be published sufficiently without governmental expense.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. There is no way for the department heads to get their views before the public except in that way if you cut off all these publications.

Mr. STEVENSON. If that is what is meant by propaganda, I think they usually get into the newspapers. We have some gentlemen up here in the press gallery who generally take care of that end of the business. I think these publications probably would not cover the releases and the reasons therefor, but the less said about those reasons frequently the better. I do not care to go into that.

So that my attitude upon this bill is that the original bill is entirely wrong, that it would be subversive of the best interests of the Government if passed in that form. The best solution I see of it is to take the amendment which the committee has reported and which I shall vote for if it is offered by the committee. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think the Joint Committee on Printing should be commended for the work it has done in reducing the number of Government publications. Nobody wants to interfere with legitimate activities of any executive department, particularly the Department of Agriculture. Their work reaches not only the active cultivator and tiller of the soil but goes into the homes in the cities as well as in the agricultural regions. But there ought to be some limit and some brake upon the discretion of the people who are to have charge of the particular work for which they desire this printing. If you do not have some brake on it, it will not be but a few months before you have 266 other publications here, printing all sorts of information—that the sun rises in the east and, if it is a sunny day, you can expect it to set in the west. That is typical of some of the information that was being conveyed by these publications.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. As I understand, the gentleman is afraid that this will give too much latitude to the departments?

Mr. WALSH. No; I believe that this ratification should be satisfactory not only to the Director of the Budget but to the Joint Committee on Printing. I believe under the original printing law, in view of the peculiar relations of the Government Printing Office to Congress and to the executive department, that we have vested not only by our rules but by law, by an act of Congress, approved by the Executive, peculiar jurisdiction and powers to the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman will remember that during one of the efforts in the last three or four years to curb excess printing we received a veto from the then President on the ground that we were invading Executive rights.

Mr. WALSH. I recall that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. So we have to avoid that; we do not want to be fighting the executive department.

Mr. WALSH. The Appropriations Committee makes a blanket appropriation for the printing of these departments—the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Interior, and various departments of the Government. This is an attempt to see that the appropriation shall not be diverted into publishing magazines, bulletins, and periodical publications that are not necessary for the efficient and adequate conduct of its ordinary and routine business. The gentleman from Washington read from some of the publications on the floor. I investigated myself, and the only excuse and justification of it was, to the ordinary legislator, that it permitted somebody to hold a position down there, to give employment to some people who are anxious to extend some particular fad or fancy that had crept into this department.

The Government does acquire a lot of useful information, and they ought to have the means of disseminating it, and if it is necessary to print bulletins and periodicals there ought not to be, and there will not be, under this measure any interference with it; but we ought not to encourage and stimulate a demand to print bulletins and publications such as the gentleman from Washington referred to the other day like the "Housewives' Diary" and the "Civic Diary."

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Washington is a good one, and I believe that the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan should be added. But I think if we put in after the word "ordinary" the word "and" and also add the words "to conduct the ordinary and routine and official business," that that will give them all the scope they need. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he does not think an amendment along that line will meet with the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think it would be improved by putting in after the word "ordinary" the word "and," and also by adding the other words suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I think it can all be done better by striking out the word "routine" and putting in "activities."

Mr. WALSH. Of course that is what the department would like to have, I appreciate, but that would, it seems to me, soon result in a lot of printing of publications upon matters which are not of sufficient importance to be dignified by the issuance of a Government publication.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Amended so as to read "to conduct the ordinary activities." That would not be going outside and taking up fanciful matters. The work of the Department of Agriculture is always described by the word "activities." They are engaged in numerous and manifold activities, and it is hard to describe them by any other words. Certainly the routine would be routine office work and would put them in a strait-jacket and make them pursue a given line. It would not be typical of the work of the Department of Agriculture at all.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the gentleman that if it is described as ordinary routine official business that will include any legitimate activity that the department might engage in. It could not be an activity unless it is official business, and it would seem to me the amendment along that line would meet the objection and come within the suggestion made by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting at the conclusion of my remarks some recent correspondence between the Attorney General of the United States and Maj. W. O. Watts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the inclusion of certain correspondence between the Attorney General and Major Watts. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the idea of this being inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that Maj. W. O. Watts apparently was discharged by the Attorney General, as shown by this correspondence, because of the fact that it was alleged that he had delivered some information to me at a time when I was acting as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. I expect to state the facts with reference to it and simply want to put these letters into the RECORD. They are a matter of public record already, and it would be shorter to do it in that way than to read them to the House.

Mr. WALSH. Of course that is out of order to-day on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I recognize the fact that it is out of order, and I ask unanimous consent that as these events occurred because of my activities as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department I be permitted to discuss them. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. It is as a result of some activities or investigation that the gentleman himself has made.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Oh, certainly, as I shall explain.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the request, it was also that the gentleman be allowed to proceed out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's request did not include that. Does the gentleman from South Dakota desire to make such a request?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not think anyone is going to make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a few years ago a young man named Maj. W. O. Watts, a very high type of American citizenship, was employed in the War Department in the surplus property division, and there performed very valuable services for the Government. He had enlisted at the beginning of the Spanish-American War and performed meritorious service in that war. Performing the work assigned to him, he discovered what was, I think, shown to the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, of which Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois was the chairman, conclusive evidence that frauds had been perpetrated upon the Government, and he had much difficulty with some officers of the Army with reference to statements he made concerning some of them at that time. Later, and after the Army was being reorganized, I am reliably informed and believe it to be true, that he was offered a commission as major in the Regular service, to be at the head of the emergency list, if he would withdraw his objections to the settlement of many of these claims.

To the credit of that young man, he did not do so, and consequently was discharged from the War Department. At the request of Representative GRAHAM of Illinois and other members of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, including myself, he was given a position with the Department of Justice. From that time on I have known little of Major Watts, except that I am satisfied he is the man who has done the major part of the work in the harness case, and I believe that case would not have been brought to public attention had it not been for that work; and I am satisfied that the case against the Old Hickory Co., one of the most infamous cases of war graft, would not have been brought to public light had it not been for his work.

In 1918 Congress passed a statute providing that the Secretary of War should submit to the Congress a complete report of the work of the War Department with reference to the disposal of surplus property and other activities. In accordance with that act of Congress the Secretary of War transmitted to the Speaker of the House a complete report. That report would fill an ordinary sized trunk. The Speaker of the House, in accordance with the rules of the House, transmitted that report from the Secretary of War to myself as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. The report was very voluminous. After having been refused by the War Department certain information which I had asked in behalf of myself as chairman of the committee, and in behalf of Representative MADDEN, of Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I began a rather independent investigation of this report. Later, while Major Watts was working for the Department of Justice, it became necessary for him to get some of that information. I am informed, and I believe it to be true, that he could not secure a copy of that report from the War Department.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, he did not receive any such report, and at the request of his superior officer he came to my office in the House Office Building and requested that I turn over to him, to be turned over to the Department of Justice, this report presented by the Secretary of War. As any Member of Congress, chairman of a committee or otherwise, would do, in order to assist the Attorney General in the investigation of war frauds, I turned this report over to him. It was necessary to get a delivery wagon to take it to the Department of Justice. It is still there. Incidentally, I gave Major Watts the benefit of anything there was in the examination of several months which Mr. WOODRUFF, of Michigan, and several other Members of Congress had been conducting. Major Watts naturally asked me my opinion as to certain of these cases, in respect to what the records show. I was very frank to tell him where I thought there had been fraud, and I gave him data for the Department of Justice which I expected later to present to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, believing, of course, that a real, thorough investigation by an executive department of the Government is much better than any congressional investigation, which, as the chairman of the Committee on Rules at one time very aptly said, starts nowhere, ends nowhere, and simply leaves a path while it goes by. I gave that information to Major Watts, and in the course of our discussion I asked him what information he had upon these same cases—cases of graft he inquired concerning, cases that I believe ought to be prosecuted by the Attorney General, cases that have been investigated by the audit department of the War Department, which I believe to be very efficient, and in which I believe there are some very honest and capable men, a department which I think ought to have another million dollars of appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-six minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield the gentleman from South Dakota 10 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not need that much. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS], but I know his time is exhausted, and that is the reason I did not prefer a request to him. The gentleman has been more than courteous in allowing me this time.

Some time on or about April 16 of this year Mr. A. F. Myers, who is assistant to Colonel Goff, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, requested Major Watts to send certain information. As I have the time I am going to read the letter. This was a verbal request and this is the reply of Major Watts.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What is the date?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. April 17.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
April 17, 1922.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

1. I am requested verbally by Mr. A. F. Myers, assistant to Colonel Goff, to inform you:

First. Whether I furnished any information to Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON, chairman Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, House of Representatives, on which he based his remarks in Congress on April 11 instant, and if so, why this was done; and Second. Whether I intended any criticism on the Department of Justice for delay.

2. Answering the first question I must report that I did furnish Mr. JOHNSON with some information. In doing this I was actuated in the public interest when I observed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that the War Department had submitted the name of Maj. Lancelot Marmaduke Purcell, Quartermaster Corps, for promotion to the grade of lieutenant colonel. This officer is guilty of crime in the sale of Government property and the adjustment of claims involving the Government in large losses which I caused to be investigated by the War Department and the congressional committee in 1920, and again by the Inspector General in 1921. The proofs were conclusive and warranted a court-martial and prosecution instead of promotion.

3. Answering the second question: In discussing the Purcell-Miller transactions with Mr. JOHNSON the question arose as to why prosecutions had not been instituted. I informed Mr. JOHNSON that copies of my proofs were brought with me to the department upon my employment as special agent July 6, 1921; that I had rendered a preliminary report on December 3, 1921, which was sustained by an attorney of the Department of Justice, and that the case had been referred to another attorney on March 17, 1922, and was still incomplete as to all evidence and awaiting the completion of an analysis by me of the Inspector General's report and some evidence yet to be obtained.

4. Under question by Mr. JOHNSON it became necessary for me to inform him that satisfactory progress on the many war fraud cases had been woefully impeded by lack of a competent organization or any definite plan of operation.

5. Such information as I furnished Mr. JOHNSON was given with the sole view of obtaining corrective and constructive improvements in the interest of the Government, and was therefore regarded by me as being in the real and actual interest of the Department of Justice.

6. In this connection attention is invited to my memorandum of February 18, 1922, to Mr. W. J. Burns, Chief Bureau of Investigation, and memorandum of April 1, 1922, to the Attorney General.

Very respectfully,

W. O. WATTS, Special Agent.

The reply came April 24 from Rush L. Holland, Assistant to the Attorney General, which is as follows.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What is the date?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. April 24 of this year. The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 24, 1922.

Mr. W. O. WATTS,
Special Agent, Department of Justice.

SIR: By direction of the Attorney General, you are dismissed from the service of this department, effective immediately upon receipt of this letter.

You are removed for disloyalty to the Department of Justice, inasmuch as you knowingly and willfully violated the rules of the department, which, as you must be aware, constitutes a breach of trust.

Upon application to the disbursing office of this department your salary will be paid up to this time.

Respectfully,

RUSH L. HOLLAND,
Assistant Attorney General.
(For the Attorney General.)

To this Major Watts replied, as follows:

718 NINETEENTH STREET NW.,
Washington, D. C., April 26, 1922.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of letter dated April 24, 1922, signed by Mr. Rush L. Holland, Assistant to the Attorney General, dismissing me "for disloyalty to the Department of Justice."

You are informed that I accept your characterization of my discharge as a distinct compliment, knowing the facts and circumstances involved, although it is wholly false and unjustifiable. It is particularly gratifying to me to note that you either did not feel warranted or have the moral courage to charge me with "disloyalty" to the Government. This, Mr. Attorney General, you can not do. My loyalty to the Government is well founded and of lifelong standing. I have followed and defended the flag in the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the late World War with honor and distinction, and I have performed every duty that has ever been assigned to me in a loyal and faithful manner; my record for loyalty is well known and unimpeachable.

My conception of loyalty in the highest sense is the defense and protection of the Government's interests under all circumstances and at all hazards. I do not recognize or subscribe to your theory of loyalty to corrupt and autocratic authority now so common in Government bureaus at Washington, which subverts the national welfare and public interests.

If you were at all informed on the departmental affairs of your high office, you must be aware of the outstanding facts that I have devoted more than two years of loyal and faithful efforts to protect the interests of the Government when a combination of certain Government officials and other common crooks have been assaulting and raiding the public Treasury on a scale so gigantic as to be almost unbelievable.

You must be aware that even a private citizen is required by statute to report to the authorities the commission of a felony which comes within his knowledge. A public officer is further bound by oath to uphold the law, and when an agency of the Government ceases to function, it is the letter and the spirit of the law that appeal should be made to some authority of the United States which will be interested and enforce correction. The record is clear and clean cut and will show that organized interests are looting the Government, and no man can charge me with a breach of trust, so far as the interests of the people are concerned. The real issue is: Shall this be a government by Harry M. Daugherty and Abram F. Myers, or a government "of the people, for the people, and by the people?"

Disloyalty is a loathsome word, especially when applied to one who has responded to the call to arms in every crisis which has confronted the country during the past 25 years. You have seen fit in the prosecution of the war graft cases to deprive the Government of the services of men who have served their country in both peace and war and to surround yourself in this great work by men who sought and secured exemption from military service when these crimes were being committed. You are entitled to share with yourself your conceptions of loyalty, and the people can judge whether or not the stigma you have attempted to place upon myself and my children is just.

Tens of thousands of people have sojourned in Washington long enough to know that this country is being strangled by an invisible government, and the fight for righteous government has at last been forced into the open. I call upon every man, woman, and child in America and especially my comrades of recent wars and every 100 per cent American in Congress to join in the cry of "Down with Daughertyism."

Respectfully,

W. O. WATTS.

In the permission given to extend I have inserted the letter of date April 26, 1922, addressed by Mr. Watts to the Attorney General so that all of this correspondence will be given to the Congress. I want to say at this time I think the Attorney General has been illy advised in taking this action, for I can carry myself back a few years in the time I have been in public life to 1912, when I can well remember a very distinguished citizen in my State, one of the distinguished Democrats by the name of J. W. McCarter, was then Democratic candidate for governor of my State, South Dakota, and I can remember in my relations with him what sometimes happens to all of us who are Members of this House, which we regret, but which sometimes occurs, in that we develop personal animosity as well as political feeling. In fact, the relations between Mr. McCarter and myself were not the most cordial in the world. After the election of President Wilson Mr. McCarter was brought to Washington to act as Assistant Register of the Treasury Department, a position which he held until 1919. In the course of his duties Mr. McCarter secured information which convinced him that there had been an enormous duplication of Government bonds which possibly had been printed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and certainly had gone through the office of the Register of the Treasury.

I think Mr. McCarter took the right attitude when he presented the matter first to a distinguished Democratic Senator from my State and very properly presented the matter to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. He was very quickly informed at that time by the former administration that nothing was wrong, that there should be no investigation, and that he should keep his mouth shut or lose his position, and Mr. McCarter, who had developed the fact that will later be shown by official documents, that there are probably hundreds of millions of dollars of duplicate bonds in the United States, was discharged from service by his administration for presenting those facts to Members of Congress. I think a man who took that attitude in the former administration was ill-advised in what he had done. I think the Attorney General has been poorly advised by his assistants in this case, and I take it that those in high authority in either case were not informed of the actual facts.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Did the gentleman notice a dispatch carried by the Associated Press this morning, in which the Attorney General is quoted as saying, in discussing the Watts incident, "that whatever Congress might think does not worry me a minute"? Has the gentleman seen that?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I had not seen it. I do not think it makes very much difference. Sometimes I have thought that the executive departments under a bureaucratic form of government in any administration oftentimes get to this, that they do not care a tinker's continental for what Congress thinks. I will say to the gentleman that I am not so sure but that sometimes under a form of government conducted by bureaus they get to a place where they do not care what the people think. But I want to say that I believe this Watts dismissal ought to be resented by the people of the country and by the Congress.

We are getting to a peculiar situation in our affairs of government if an employee of an executive department can not come to the chairman of a committee of Congress and give information concerning fraud upon the Government without being discharged from the service. And it is not during one administration, as I have shown. It has been done during other administrations. And I feel that eventually this is a sort of thing that the President of the United States, when it is called to his attention, will set right.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will yield.

Mr. WINGO. I am somewhat interested in the gentleman's statement about the duplicate bonds. Does the gentleman say that a Democrat from his State called the matter to the Senator's attention?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say that that is all a matter of public record. I took personally all of this data down to the Department of Justice myself early in the year 1921, after we had tried in every way to secure action from the former administration. These letters that were written to Mr. Leffingwell, at that time an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, are easily procurable. I have them in my files and I will be glad to insert them at this point. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to do so, that the House may have exactly the word that was sent by Mr. McCarter, and extend in the RECORD at this place Mr. McCarter's letter to Mr. Leffingwell.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WINGO. My question was the date on which this gentleman brought this information to you.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman sent the information to me in its real definite form in the fall of 1920, when I happened to be in my home State.

Mr. WINGO. You did not bring it to the attention of Secretary Mellon?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I did not. I brought it to the attention of the Department of Justice, where I think it ought to have gone.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman have information upon which he can pass a conclusion that there are millions of duplicate bonds printed?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that I took down seven typewritten sheets, single space, of numbers of duplicate bonds, and some bonds running 100,000 higher than the bonds issued. There is no man who can tell how many were issued.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman was furnished a list of them. Has not the gentleman conducted an investigation, or anyone for him, to see whether there was any truth in the allegation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman I am satisfied there is truth in it, because I remember at one time it was shown conclusively that a colored taxicab driver in Washington was discovered down in front of the New Willard with 31 $1,000 duplicate bonds, and he was discharged from custody in four days. I will say to the gentleman that I submitted a list of seven pages of duplicate bonds.

Mr. WINGO. What did Mr. Mellon say to the gentleman?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have never discussed it with him. The first notice was given to the administration when Mr. Wilson was in power, and Mr. McCarter was compelled to leave the service because he was bringing this to the attention of the administration with which he was affiliated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will yield one more minute to the gentleman. I want to ask him a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. Has the gentleman any information as to what the check up that has just been had at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, with a view to those things, has divulged?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have no information as to that. That has not been a part of my duties. I will say to the gentleman that my investigation, which was of an independent character, and which not only produced some of the facts which no one denied, came from another branch of the Government, and the exact part in detail which individuals have had in this I am not able to tell the gentleman.

Mr. STEVENSON. Has not the gentleman seen the statement purporting to come from Mr. Mellon that the check up has shown that there was absolutely nothing wrong down there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman I do not assume any responsibility for any of the statements made by the Secretary of the Treasury or anyone else.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I take it that no Member of Congress would be so reckless of the public welfare as to stifle the facts with reference to any matter that involves the public credit or instruments of the Government in the hands of citizens and banks and trust companies throughout the country. While the present Secretary of the Treasury belongs to a different political party from that to which I belong, I do not believe he is going to tell the country a falsehood, and when he said a few days ago that there was nothing in the statements that were sent broadcast that hundreds of millions of duplicate United States bonds had been issued and which could have nothing but a bad effect on the credit of the United States and bring uneasiness to investors and banks and holders of trust funds that might hold the bonds of the United States—I say that when Secretary Mellon said that these wild, reckless statements were false, I believe that Secretary Mellon spoke with knowledge of the facts and that he would not deny it if it were true, but that the man certainly would take the American people into his confidence and say so if it were true.

These statements are flying around here, and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] repeats them and said he advised somebody a year or two ago. It is not a question of partisanship. If a Democratic administration suppressed it, I would denounce it. The charge is made that both Democratic and Republican Secretaries of the Treasury and heads of the Department of Justice suppressed a knowledge of the existence of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of duplicate bonds. I would not believe it of a Republican administration any more than I would believe it of a Democratic administration.

If it is true, and you are going to continue to bandy that thing in the public press and in this RECORD here, you owe it to your party and the country to have an immediate investigation. If it be true, let us find out what the numbers and amounts of these bonds are. Let the banks and the holders of these spurious bonds know it. If it is not true, let us allay the suspicion and the uneasiness which must continue as long as disappointed office seekers bandy it around in the public press. The Secretary of the Treasury denies it. That is sufficient as against statements of irresponsible persons. But when a Member of Congress stands on this floor and says that he got this information from a man who ought to know, and incidentally charges the administration with suppressing the facts, that will breed uneasiness throughout the country, and I do not believe the gentleman ought to make the statement unless he can back it up with proof. But if it is true and the executive departments are suppressing the facts, then Congress ought to act swiftly and have an investigation and disclose the truth to the public.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the statements to this effect are bandied about the country continually, does not the gentleman think the Congress owes it to the country to conduct such an investigation as I proposed in a resolution which I introduced a few days ago and which is now sleeping in the Committee on Rules, a resolution relative to the removal of employees from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing?

Mr. WINGO. Yes. I realize that irresponsible people are running around and making statements, and that the Secretary of the Treasury says it is a lie. But here is a Member of Congress who stands up and says a Register of the Treasury furnished information sustaining the charge and that it was suppressed. He admits that he never brought it to the attention of Secretary Mellon, but took it to the Department of Justice. That carries a reflection on Secretary Mellon. He goes to the Department of Justice. This Member says he saw a list of the numbers of these duplicate bonds, and leads us to believe that the charge is true and can be sustained by available proof.

Gentlemen, do not misunderstand me. I want to reiterate the fact that I have confidence in Secretary Mellon telling the truth about it. I think an investigation will show that he did not lie to the people of the country. But I think we owe it to the Treasury and to the people who own the bonds throughout the country; we owe it to them to investigate this matter and set it at rest once for all. Let us find out about the bonds and find out whether or not it is true. If it is not true, let us brand the statements as false and allay the suspense and uneasiness that must affect the minds of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word before the bill is read. As a member of the Joint Committee on Printing and of the House Committee on Printing for 10 years, I submit it is not wise for Congress to give up the control it now has over printing. In other words, while it may be advisable to amend this bill as reported by the committee in some way, I do not want to see legislation passed that will take away from the Joint Committee on Printing its control over the Government printing. The fact that the legislation passed in 1919 by an amendment to the sundry civil bill made it possible for the Joint Committee on Printing to reduce the number of unnecessary publications from 266 to less than 40, saving the Government over $2,000,000 a year in printing, is certainly the best proof that the Joint Committee on Printing has been doing good work.

When these publications were stopped by act of Congress on December 1 there was considerable criticism, and many persons appealed to the Joint Committee on Printing, thinking that it was by its action that the publications were arbitrarily discontinued. The fact, of course, remains that it was done by act of Congress, and the Joint Committee on Printing had no power to continue the unauthorized publications beyond that date.

That is the reason why we are coming before Congress with a measure which will provide some means for continuing the publications which, in the judgment of the heads of the departments and of Members of Congress, should be continued. I think it is only fair that this statement should be made, because there has been more or less misunderstanding as to the discontinuance of these publications on December 1. It was due entirely to the act of Congress, and not to the action of the Joint Committee on Printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 3 of the sundry civil appropriation act for 1922, approved March 4, 1921, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That hereafter no journal, magazine, periodical, or similar Government publication shall be published, issued, or discontinued by any branch or officer of the Government service unless the same shall have been authorized under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Joint Committee on Printing, and such publications shall not contain any commercial advertisements."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the word "follows" in line 5, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. That the head of any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to use from the appropriations available for printing and binding such sums as may be necessary for the printing of journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications as he shall certify in writing to be necessary to conduct the ordinary routine business required by law of such department, office, or establishment: Provided, That there may be printed, in addition to those necessary for official business, not to exceed 2,000 copies for free distribution by the department, office, or establishment issuing the same: Provided further, That the Public Printer shall print such additional copies thereof and of any other Government publication, not confidential in character, as may be required for sale to the public by the Superintendent of Documents at the cost of printing and binding, plus 10 per cent, without limit as to the number of copies to any one applicant who agrees not to resell or distribute the same for profit; but such printing shall be subject to regulation by the Joint Committee on Printing and shall not interfere with the prompt execution of printing for the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have three perfecting amendments, which I will state to the Members so that they can all be understood together.

Mr. WALSH. Let them be reported first.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will ask to have the Clerk read them, for information.

Mr. WALSH. Offer them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They will not all be in order to be offered at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

First amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 1, strike out all of lines 3, 4, and 5.

Second amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 2, line 6, strike out the quotation marks and the words "section 3" and insert after the word "that" the word "hereafter."

Third amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 3, line 2, after the word "government," strike out the quotation marks and add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 2. That section 3 of the sundry civil appropriation act for 1922, approved March 4, 1921, be, and is hereby, repealed."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I think the three amendments read together will be understood by the Members.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Washington will permit, the Chair holds that the first amendment is pending and that the other two were read for information.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I thank the Chairman. That was my intention. I think that if the three are read together it will be clear that the intent is to change this from an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation act for a certain year and to make it an independent act, and then repeal the legislation which was a rider in the appropriation act.

The only other change is on page 2, in line 6, the introduction of the word "hereafter," so that it will read:

That hereafter the head of any executive department—

And so forth. I ask for a vote on the first amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The first and second amendments make this an independent act of Congress, and do not affect the sundry civil act at all. Later the gentleman strikes out that provision that is in the sundry civil act, so that this will be the independent law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is it, exactly.

Mr. WALSH. Dealing with these publications.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And repealing a certain section of the sundry civil act and letting it stand on its own.

I ask for a vote on my first amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the question will now be taken on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 1, strike out all of lines 3, 4, and 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 2, line 6, strike out the quotation marks and the words "section 3," and insert after the word "that" the word "hereafter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I offer the following amendment:

Page 2, line 24, after the word "such," at the end of the line, insert the word "additional."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 24, after the word "such," at the end of the line, insert the word "additional."

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. CABLE for the amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, lines 24 and 25, after the word "but," strike out "such printing" and insert the words "the printing of such additional copies."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is an amendment in third degree. This is a committee amendment, and the gentleman from Washington has offered an amendment to the committee amendment. The gentleman from Ohio has offered an amendment by way of a substitute, not to the committee amendment but for the Johnson amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is not the intention.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CABLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I again offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers his amendment as an amendment to the committee amendment. The Clerk will report the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CABLE: Page 2, line 24, after the word "but," strike out the words "such printing," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the printing of such additional copies."

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, the committee are very glad to accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE].

The amendment of Mr. CABLE was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 2, line 13, insert the word "properly" as the first word in line 13; page 2, line 13, strike out the words "routine business," and in lieu thereof insert the word "activities"; page 2, line 16, strike out the words "official business" and in lieu thereof insert the words "such official activities."

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman have any objection in the second part of his amendment, where he strikes out the "routine business" and inserts the word "activities," to inserting after the word "ordinary" the words "and official," so it will read "and official activities"? There are a lot of activities of the department that are not official business and not authorized by law. Let it read "ordinary official activities required by law of such departments."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will say in answer to that that I do not think the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts would improve it. Official activities might be construed as limiting the work to the offices of the Department of Agriculture, whereas some activities are going on in a somewhat official way and some in an informal way all over the country; the department is cooperating with a number of individuals and associations, some of them their officials, some of them not their officials, men engaged in investigation and experiment, and when they learn anything of value they report it and the department publishes it throughout the country. I do not know whether to put in the word "official" would limit the department to publishing the results of investigations or not. They are proper activities in the line of proper work of the department, which, under the enabling act, is to study agriculture and disseminate information in the broadest possible manner.

Mr. WALSH. This applies to other departments than the Department of Agriculture, and you will open the door to them to continue the practice which resulted in their elimination. I am not offering this in any spirit of antagonism to the Department of Agriculture or to hamper their work, but only to indicate that this printing and publication must be of their official work and not permit them to print press releases of social activities of functions such as we have had called to our attention, and not permit the Shipping Board to engage in the publication of ship bulletins at $1 a copy for the benefit of a few shipping folks up in the city of New York.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to suggest that I think the accidental omission of the word "and" in line 13 by the printer has brought about confusion and has caused those interested in the various magazines to offer these amendments. I suggest that we do not go so far afield. If you put in the word "and" where it belongs, you will solve the problem. I think it would be a mistake to put in the word "activities," whereas in the law which governs the Printing Office you have this provision:

Money appropriated under the foregoing allotments shall not be expended for printing or binding for any of the executive departments or other Government establishments, except as shall be certified in writing to the Public Printer by the respective heads or chiefs thereof to be necessary to conduct the ordinary and routine business required by law of such executive departments or Government establishments, and except such reports, monographs, bulletins, or other publications as are authorized by law or specifically provided for in appropriations herein.

Now the two should be together.

Mr. ANDERSON. The distinction is named between publications necessary for publication and publications incident to the real activities of the department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would not the routine business cover that?

Mr. ANDERSON. Evidently not. It refers to the reports and bulletins which are distinct from the ordinary routine business of the department. It refers to the printing necessary for the business activities as distinct from the ordinary publications.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me read the balance of this provision:

All other printing required or deemed necessary or desirable by heads of executive departments or other Government establishments or offices or bureaus thereof shall be done only as Congress shall from time to time authorize.

The whole trouble has been when we use the word "printing" with reference to ledgers and envelopes, the chiefs of the bureaus read it to mean newspapers and other publications. We have gone as far as we can go. I do not like to use the word "activities," because that is the word that came in and we might again have the "Rose garden" of publications up again in every bureau and on every side.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am as much opposed as is the gentleman from Washington to issuing unnecessary publications by the Department of Agriculture or any other department of the Government, but the work of the Department of Agriculture is peculiar to itself. Now, in relation to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I think the language that I offer is far better. I think it is properly protected by the few words that follow: "The ordinary activities required by law of such departments." That would limit them to official activities, and it would not be necessary to put in the word "official." I suggest that the amendment I offer be adopted just as it was offered and not as modified by the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts or the gentleman from Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment which I desire to offer. Page 2, line 11, strike out the words "journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar" and insert in lieu thereof the word "such," so that it would read:

for the printing of such publications.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. If these agriculturists are going to entirely divert the bill from what was originally intended, I think there should be a quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would it not be better to recommit the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WALSH. But, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division on the motion of the gentleman from Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's request comes too late. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. WALSH. [Interrupting the count.] Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment which I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 3, line 2, after the word "government," strike out the quotation marks and add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That section 3 of the sundry civil appropriation act for 1922, approved March 4, 1921, be, and is hereby, repealed."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRAMTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 132 and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the resolution as amended be agreed to.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to authorize the printing of journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications, and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. KIESS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SUTHERLAND (at the request of Mr. CURRY), until June 1, on account of important business.

To Mr. WURZBACH, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCFADDEN, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. REECE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7272. An act for the relief of Monroe B. Shealy.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1059. An act for the relief of J. B. Waterman;

S. 2616. An act to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey certain land; and

S. 3170. An act regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 531. An act for the relief of Ivy L. Merrill; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3505. An act in reference to the summoning of grand juries in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore adopted, the House adjourned until Friday, April 28, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

596. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter relating to certain amounts of appropriations resulting from the suspension or termination of contracts and requesting a further extension of time for settlement thereof (H. Doc. No. 292) was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committees on Appropriations and Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Committee on the Judiciary. S. 775. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of fact, and for other purposes; with an amendment (Rept. No. 931). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BARBOUR: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 10767. A bill to exempt from cancellation certain desert-land entries in San Bernardino County, Calif.; without amendment (Rept. No. 932). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CHANDLER: Committee on Ways and Means. H. R. 10877. A bill to permit an increase in the number of internal-revenue collection districts and in the number of collectors of internal revenue; without amendment (Rept. No. 933). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 11450) to provide for the printing and distribution of the Supreme Court Reports and amending sections 225, 226, 227, and 228 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TAYLOR of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 11451) for the purchase of a site for and the erection of a post-office building at Bloomfield, N. J.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 11452) to appropriate $1,000,000 for the purchase of seed grain and live stock to be supplied to farmers in overflowed areas of the United States, said amount to be expended under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HAMMER: A bill (H. R. 11453) to incorporate the Washington Rapid Transit Co.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WEAVER: Resolution (H. Res. 334) relating to pay of E. J. Hill and Marion L. Overby, clerks of the late S. M. Brinson, a Representative in Congress; to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 11454) for the relief of W. H. De Long; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DUNBAR: A bill (H. R. 11455) granting a pension to Katie Wood; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11456) granting a pension to Lucina Heath; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11457) granting a pension to Laura Morris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11458) granting a pension to Emma W. Pohimann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 11459) granting an increase of pension to Louisa N. Noyes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KIESS: A bill (H. R. 11460) granting a pension to George D. Helwig; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 11461) for the relief of John Megrath; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 11462) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth F. Hampton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 11463) granting an increase of pension to Fredonia Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBSION: A bill (H. R. 11464) granting an increase of pension to Haywood G. Lewis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 11465) granting a pension to Thomas A. Brassfield; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 11466) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Cornell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 11467) for the relief of F. J. Belcher, jr., trustee for Ed Fletcher; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11468) granting a pension to Henry E. Rubendall; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMSON: A bill (H. R. 11469) granting an increase of pension to George Gorham; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11470) granting an increase of pension to Michael Sullivan; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5299. By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of residents of Kings and Fresno Counties, Calif., protesting against the enactment of House bills 9753 and 4388 or Senate bill 1948, known as the Sunday laws; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5300. By Mr. CARTER: Resolutions adopted by the Presbytery of McAlester and the Presbytery of Kiamichi, Okla., urging the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 31 and House Joint Resolution 131; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5301. By Mr. CRAGO: Resolutions adopted by the International Association of Machinists, Lodge No. 159, of Philadelphia, Pa., indorsing House bill 10967; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5302. By Mr. FENN: Petition of citizens of New Britain, Conn., by George L. Gans, declaring its sympathy with Zionist aims in Palestine; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

5303. By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the Glidden Co., of Chicago, Ill., favoring House bill 10159, to further protect interstate and foreign commerce against bribery and other corrupt trade practices; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5304. Also, petition of E. E. Stevenson, president of the La Salle County (Ill.) Farm Bureau, favoring a tariff duty on blackstrap molasses; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5305. By Mr. GALLIVAN: petition of Old Colony Division, No. 312, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, urging the passage of House bill 10798; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5306. By Mr. KAHN: Resolution adopted by the council of the city of Alameda, Calif., urging the passage of House bill 10212; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5307. Also, petition of 89 residents of California, urging the passage of the Sterling-Towner educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

5308. By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Petition of the Presbytery of Lansing, Mich., favoring legislation for Sunday observance in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5309. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Lawrence W. Luellen, of New York, N. Y., relative to Senate bill 3410, and urging its passage; to the Committee on Patents.

5310. Also, petition of Pearl & Co., of New York, N. Y., relative to tariff on imported sugars; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5311. By Mr. MAPES: Petition of George Mattison and others of Grand Rapids, Mich., against the passage of House bill 9753 and similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5312. By Mr. NEWTON of Missouri: Petition signed by 210 citizens of St. Louis, Mo., protesting against the passage of any bills providing for the enforcement of the observance of any religious institution, and so forth; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5313. By Mr. RADCLIFFE: Resolution of Board of Commissioners of the city of Bayonne, N. J., indorsing House bill 10202; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5314. By Mr. RAKER: Resolution No. 477, of the council of the city of Alameda, Calif., indorsing House bill 10212, introduced by Congressman Bacharach; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

5315. Also, petition of the International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Division No. 415, of Roseville, Calif., indorsing and urging the passage of House bill 6432; also petition of Burnside Post, No. 188, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of California and Nevada, relative to the Morgan bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5316. Also, petition of the Reedley Chamber of Commerce, of Reedley, Calif., indorsing and urging the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill in its present form; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5317. By Mr. SWING: Petition of various residents of Imperial County, Calif., advocating the passage of the Towner-Sterling bills (H. R. 7 and S. 1252); to the Committee on Education.

5318. By Mr. WOODYARD: Memorial of Huntington Lodge, No. 104, International Association of Machinists, of Huntington, W. Va., favoring the enactment of House bill 10967, by Mr. Hull of Iowa; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5319. By Mr. YATES: Petition of the Union League Club of Chicago, protesting against the proposed reduction of the Army and Navy; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 27, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

DEDICATION OF MEMORIAL TO GENERAL GRANT.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, to-day is the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of General Grant. A great many of the Senators are desirous of joining the exercises in honor of the occasion. I think under the circumstances, even though we are greatly pressed with business, that the Senate ought to take a recess to-day. It is my hope that we can do that in a short time. If Senators desire to have any morning business transacted, we can proceed with that, and then, when we complete our routine business for to-day, I shall move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether anything aside from morning business will be transacted this morning?

Mr. McCUMBER. My expectation is to move for a recess immediately after Senators present such matters as they may have to submit in the way of morning business.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, coming from the South, as I do, I wish now and here, by unanimous consent, to pay my tribute and that of the South to the memory of the great soldier who at Appomattox refused to accept in surrender the purest of human swords—that of Robert E. Lee. In behalf of the great section whose army of northern Virginia Theodore Roosevelt said was the greatest that ever took the field, I wish to say that we honor General Grant and we love him, because at the surrender he was so kind, so magnanimous, as to say to the ragged and starving Confederate soldiers: "Take your horses home; you will need them in planting your crops."

Had General Grant been President after Mr. Lincoln, we never would have had the agony of reconstruction and the bitterness that followed the Civil War.

I see him on that monument, which is to be unveiled to-day and which I think is one of the sublimest conceptions of the human brain, and I feel like lifting my hat every time I pass it. My heart swells, and I am proud that our reunited country produced this great captain and that his family lived side by side with mine in the old country—his just above the Scotch border and mine just below—and that the clans never had a feud.

We of southern blood and memories bear in mind that, when the administration which followed that of Mr. Lincoln threatened to arrest the paroled Confederate officers, General Grant virtually put his hand on his sword and said to the President, in effect: "You shall not do it. My honor is pledged; I signed those paroles."

And the President of the United States dared not violate the pledged word of General Grant.

After the war I see him with a cancer eating out his life. He knew he was doomed, and yet he put his pen to paper and, with that fortitude which marked George Washington and Frederick the Great, I see him writing those immortal "Memoirs" which, it is said, were equaled only by those of Cæsar. Having read them myself and having read Cæsar, I quite agree that the tribute was deserved.

He was a great man, a big-hearted man, a great general whose sword had no poison on it; who conquered, but who, in the very moment of his victory, acknowledged the sincerity of those who fought him and gave them generous terms, forgave them and loved them. He wanted to bring us all back into a brotherly Union, when he said, amid the torment and tempest of passion: "Let us have peace! Let us have peace! LET US HAVE PEACE!"

Without irreverence, may I liken his words to those of the Galilean when He spoke to the turbulent waves of the wind-swept sea and commanded: "Peace, be still!"

In the one case, as in the other, the danger passed and the waves sank down.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it is always a pleasure to receive such evidences of a united country, and to receive from men of the South such a tribute to the great leader of the national forces. I think we can justly say that for many long years there has been no bitterness between any sections of the United States growing out of the Civil War; that we all feel that we have to-day but one flag, but one country, and we honor the great heroes who fought on both sides in that great conflict.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I be permitted in behalf of the minority to express their appreciation of the action of the distinguished Senator from North Dakota in moving the recess of the Senate in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of General Grant? It is altogether fitting that we should pause in the labors of this day and pay tribute to one who made such rich contribution to the cause of a united and enduring Republic. The skies above this Republic are studded with brilliant stars whose brightness will never fade, and whose glory will forever illume the pathway of our Nation. Ulysses S. Grant is in this immortal galaxy. His mighty achievements upon sanguinary battle fields of our country give him enduring fame as a military commander. Students of the strategy of war recognize his mighty genius, and acclaim him not only as a serene, tenacious, and courageous warrior, but as a technician in the art of war, which places him in the front rank of the military heroes of the world.

In the political field he won the highest honors, and in his private life he left a record to guide patriotic Americans who come after him.

Thousands of gallant soldiers who wore the blue and the gray will, on this notable day, recall the genius, the greatness, the patience, the gentleness, the chivalry, and the high and undying service of this great American; there will be no North and no South, but a deep and abiding spirit of unity and nationalism will bind all of our countrymen together. This great American will be regarded with love and affection in every section of our broad land, and held as a part of the rich inheritance of the past which has entered into the lives of the American people, and all will feel that he constitutes forever a part of that patrimony which lifts this Republic to the heights of moral and spiritual power and crowns it with world leadership. This day will bring inspiration and courage to all true Americans, and upon the morrow, with high resolve, they will go forth consecrating themselves and their lives to the preservation of this Republic and the establishment of peace and justice and righteousness in all the world.

PETITIONS.

Mr. WILLIS presented petitions of D. H. Swinton and sundry other citizens of Toledo and Columbus, in the State of Ohio, praying for inclusion in the tariff bill of a duty upon stained and painted glass windows, which were ordered to lie on the table.

ADMISSION OF WILLEM VAN DOORN TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 169) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to receive for instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis Mr. Willem van Doorn, a subject of the Netherlands, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 644) thereon.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. NORRIS introduced a bill (S. 3518) to promote the sale of pure seeds, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. BROUSSARD submitted an amendment and Mr. LADD submitted two amendments, intended to be proposed by them to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RECLAMATION LAW FOR IRRIGATION DISTRICTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4382) to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McNARY, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. SHEPPARD conferees on the part of the Senate.

RECESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that we may do honor to the name and the services of our great war hero, I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and the Senate (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, April 28, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 28, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Heflin	Nelson	Sheppard
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Simmons
Bursum	Kendrick	Norbeck	Smoot
Capper	Keyes	Norris	Townsend
Culberson	Ladd	Oddie	Wadsworth
Curtis	La Follette	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Hale	Lenroot	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Harreld	Lodge	Phipps	Warren
Harris	McCumber	Pittman
Harrison	McKinley	Poindexter

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague [Mr. WATSON of Georgia] is absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. McNARY answered to his name when called.

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Calder	Edge	Frelinghuysen	Sutherland
Colt

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Brandegee	Glass	King	Sterling
Broussard	Gooding	Ransdell	Swanson
Caraway	Ernst	Shortridge	Watson, Ind.
Dillingham	Hitchcock	Spencer
Gerry	Kellogg	Stanley

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the order directing the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators be vacated.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to provide for the continuance of certain Government publications with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 127) to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the board of direction, American Society of Civil Engineers, favoring investigation of the pollution of waters by industries and the review of legislation to determine what, if any, laws may be required to remedy the evil, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions and telegrams in the nature of petitions of the Sisterhood, Temple Emanuel of Lawrence, Mass.; House of Israel Congregation, Simon Cohen, president, Sharon, Pa.; Sharon Zionist Organization, Maurice Schloss, chairman of the executive committee, Sharon, Pa.; Congregation Sharey Tora, Myer Greenblatt, president, Sharon, Pa.; Western Star Lodge, Max Adler, president, Sharon, Pa.; Petatch Pikvoh Congregation and the Ladies' Auxiliary Petatch Pikvoh, of Baltimore, Md.; the Home of Daughters of Jacob of the Bronx, Mrs. A. J. Dworsky, president, of New York City; teachers of Newark Hebrew schools, Chenitz, secretary, of Newark, N. J., praying for the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 191, favoring the establishment in Palestine of the National Home for the Jewish People, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LADD presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of members of Cooperative Marketing Agencies, at Fargo, N. Dak., which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That we, the members of Cooperative Marketing Agencies designed for the purpose of selling farm products with the minimum of expense and maximum return to growers, fully appreciate the service rendered all agricultural interests by the War Finance Corporation under the direction of Eugene Meyer, jr., and further we believe that any agencies created by Congress during this session will not be able to function in time to furnish credit for marketing the crops of 1922: Now, therefore, we respectfully petition that the powers granted the War Finance Corporation be extended for one year or until such time as an agency is developed by the Government of the United States to perform the service now being rendered agricultural interests by the War Finance Corporation.

EQUITY COOPERATIVE EXCHANGE.
NORTH DAKOTA MEMBERS UNITED STATES GRAIN GROWERS.
NORTH DAKOTA WHEAT GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.
NORTHWEST WHEAT GROWERS.
THE FARMER.
DAKOTA FARMER.
FARM, STOCK, AND HOME.
NORTH DAKOTA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION.
NORTH DAKOTA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Whereas the flax crushers of the country are closing down on account of the flood of foreign oil now coming in under the present tariff of 10 cents a gallon, which is lowering flax prices below cost of production.

Whereas while the Fordney bill places an adequate tariff on linseed oil the time of passage of that act is very indefinite, it is the sense of this meeting that an amendment of the present emergency tariff act making the linseed-oil tariff the same as provided in the Fordney Act be passed without delay, so that farmers in the flax area will be in position to organize the farm operations for 1922.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a resolution of the International Arbitration Association (incorporated in the State of Michigan), Woodbridge N. Ferris, president, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for a peace conference of the nations for the purpose of establishing an international republic, in accordance with a plan suggested by Homer L. Boyle, of Lansing, Mich., and indorsed by Alex J. Groesbeck, governor of Michigan, and sundry other citizens, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Manhattan (Kans.) Rotary Club, praying for the enactment of legislation to control the traffic in narcotic drugs, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Concordia Presbytery, at Manhattan, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Concordia Presbytery, at Manhattan, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for uniform marriage and divorce laws, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Concordia Presbytery, at Manhattan, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARRISON presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Concurrent Resolution 61.

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to appoint a special committee to inspect and investigate the conditions in the territory from Brunswick, Miss., to Baton Rouge, La., on the east bank of the Mississippi River, during the prevalence of the present high water.

Whereas the territory from Brunswick, Miss., to Baton Rouge, La., on the east bank of the Mississippi River, is subject to inundation each year from the waters of the Mississippi River; and

Whereas the situation is at present pathetic and distressing and the people in said territory have not in the past been considered in the granting of relief or redress, while other sections on said river are enjoying great benefits by allotments of the appropriations made by Congress; and

Whereas we do not believe that it is the intention of Congress to neglect said territory or to discriminate against the same in its allotments of appropriations for expenditure by the Mississippi River Commission: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, memorialized to appoint a special committee or commission to inspect said territory during the present inundation and to investigate the conditions thereof, whereby proper allotments of the appropriation might be made for the benefit thereof.

Approved by the house of representatives April 3, 1922.

Approved by the senate April 3, 1922.

—

I, Joseph W. Power, secretary of state of the State of Mississippi, do hereby certify that the within and attached copy of House Concurrent Resolution No. 61 is a true and correct copy of the original resolution as the same appears of record in this office.

Given under my hand and seal of office this the 15th day of April, A. D. 1922.

[SEAL.] JOS. W. POWER,
Secretary of State.

OPERATIONS OF EMERGENCY TARIFF ACT.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably with an amendment Senate Resolution 284, and, as there will be no debate upon the resolution, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 284), which had been submitted by Mr. HARRISON on the 25th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, such facts and findings as it may have in its possession from a study and investigation of the operations and results of the rates carried in the emergency tariff act approved May 27, 1921, and as extended by the act approved November 16, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was, in line 3, after the word "facts," to strike out the words "and findings."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I merely desire to express my gratification at the promptness with which the committee have reported this resolution, and, through its chairman, have asked for its immediate consideration. The amendment to the resolution reported by the committee does not, in my opinion, affect it materially at all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3248) to provide for the issuing of a patent to Richard Murphy for a certain tract of land in what is known as the Big Pasture of Oklahoma and upon which he has made full payment of purchase price (Rept. No. 645);

A bill (H. R. 70) to allow credit for husbands' military service in case of homestead entries by widows, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 646);

A bill (H. R. 7109) to accept the cession by the State of Arkansas of exclusive jurisdiction over a tract of land within the Hot Springs National Park, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 647);

A bill (H. R. 7598) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dedicate and set apart as a national monument certain lands in Riverside County, Calif. (Rept. No. 648);

A bill (H. R. 8675) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept a certain tract of land donated as a site for an administration building for the Rocky Mountain National Park (Rept. No. 649);

A bill (H. R. 9499) to authorize the State of Idaho to exchange certain lands heretofore granted for public-school purposes for other Government lands (Rept. No. 650); and

A bill (H. R. 10443) to repeal sections 2453 and 2454, and to amend sections 2450, 2451, and 2456, Revised Statutes of the United States (Rept. No. 651).

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3154) for the relief of C. M. Reives (Rept. No. 652); and

A bill (S. 3235) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands (Rept. No. 653).

Mr. POINDEXTER, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3103) to amend section 2294, United States Revised Statutes, relating to homesteads (Rept. No. 654);

A bill (H. R. 5684) to authorize the purchase by the city of Medford, Oreg., of certain lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916 (Rept. No. 655);

A bill (H. R. 6817) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the State of Michigan, in trust, of a certain described tract of land to be used as a game refuge (Rept. No. 656);

A bill (H. R. 7862) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent certain lands to William S. N. Calhoun and Zaidee Boatner Calhoun, residents of Catahoula Parish, La. (Rept. No. 657);

A bill (H. R. 8358) for the relief of Israel Butts (Rept. No. 658);

A bill (H. R. 9495) for the protection of timber owned by the United States from fire, disease, or the ravages of beetles or other insects (Rept. No. 659); and

A bill (H. R. 10461) to add certain lands to the Siskiyou National Forest in Oregon (Rept. No. 660).

Mr. POINDEXTER, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7812) to extend the time for cutting timber in the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests, Ariz., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 661) thereon.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3345) changing the name of Keokuk Street in the county of Washington, D. C., to Military Road (Rept. No. 662);

A bill (S. 3448) to validate an agreement between the Secretary of War, acting on behalf of the United States, and the Washington Gas Light Co. (Rept. No. 663); and

A bill (S. 3483) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint as special policemen such District employees as they may deem necessary for the protection of property of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 664).

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2083) to regulate the practice of undertaking and embalming in the District of Columbia, and to safeguard the public health, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 665) thereon.

Mr. LADD, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6323) for the relief of Frank M. Stewart (Rept. No. 666);

A bill (H. R. 8119) for the relief of certain persons, their heirs or assigns, who heretofore relinquished lands inside national forests to the United States (Rept. No. 667); and

A bill (H. R. 10554) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to Lassen County, Calif., for certain lands, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 668).

Mr. LADD, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3123) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites," approved January 13, 1897, as amended (Rept. No. 669); and

A bill (H. R. 9275) for the relief of Frances Kelly (Rept. No. 670).

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3332) to provide for a grant to the city of Boise, in the State of Idaho, of the use of a certain part of the Boise Barracks Military Reservation, under certain conditions (Rept. No. 671);

A bill (H. R. 7968) granting to the city of St. Andrews, Fla., the right to remove shells, sand, and gravel from certain public lands for road-building purposes (Rept. No. 672); and

A bill (H. R. 10007) for the relief of certain persons to whom, or their predecessors, patents were issued to public lands in the State of Minnesota under an erroneous survey made in 1876 (Rept. No. 673).

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7053) to grant certain lands to the city of Canon City, Colo., for a public park, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 674) thereon.

Mr. BROUSSARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2467) to provide relief for the victims of the airplane accident at Langin Field, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 675) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2853) for the relief of persons suffering damage by reason of proceedings for the condemnation of land for Camp Benning, Ga., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 676) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3519) defining the rights of the Mescalero Apache Indians in the Mescalero Indian Reservation, providing for an allotment of certain lands therein in severalty to the Mescalero Apache Indians, and creating and defining the all-year national park; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. NELSON (by request):

A bill (S. 3520) to amend section 117 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LADD:

A bill (S. 3521) to prohibit the transportation and sale of field seeds in packages not properly branded; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 3522) to extend for six months the powers of the War Finance Corporation to make advances under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, to provide relief for producers of and dealers in agricultural products, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1921; to the Committee on Finance.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENT.

Mr. LADD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SMOOT. House bill No. 463 was referred to the Committee on Patents. The bill relates entirely to public lands, the granting of a patent to Joseph Robicheau. I therefore move that the Committee on Patents be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 127) to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

NAVAL OIL RESERVE LEASES.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on the calendar day of April 21 I submitted a resolution (S. Res. 282) calling upon the Secretary of the Interior for information with regard to the naval oil reserves. When I presented that resolution, sir, I asked that it be printed and that it lie upon the table subject to call. I am not able to call it up this morning, as the unfinished business, the tariff bill, is before the Senate; but I want to give notice now that as soon as I am able to call that resolution before the Senate I am going to avail myself of the right of the introducer of every resolution or bill to perfect it before it is submitted to a vote, and I shall make certain changes in it. As I desire to have those changes appear in the RECORD in connection with some remarks which I am going to submit at this time upon the resolution, I send to the Secretary's desk the resolution in the form in which, as I am now advised, I shall submit it to the Senate, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed modification of Senate Resolution 282, heretofore submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to send to the Senate:

(a) Copies of all oil leases made by the Department of the Interior within naval oil reserve No. 1, and, separately, naval oil reserve No. 2, both in the State of California, and naval oil reserve No. 3, in the State of Wyoming, showing as to each the claim upon which the lease was based or issued, the name of the lessee, the date of the lease, the area of the leased property, the amount of the rent royalty, bonus, and all other compensation paid and to be paid to the United States.

(b) All Executive orders and other papers in the files of the Department of the Interior and its bureaus, or copies thereof if the originals are not in the files, authorizing or regulating such leases, including correspondence or memoranda embodying or concerning all agreements, instructions, and requests by the President or the Navy Department as to the making of such leases and the terms thereof.

(c) All correspondence, papers, and files showing and concerning the applications for such leases and the action of the Department of the Interior and its bureaus thereon and upon all the several claims upon which such leases were based or issued, all in said naval reserves; be it further

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be authorized to investigate this entire subject of leases upon naval oil reserves, with particular reference to the protection of the rights and equities of the Government of the United States and the preservation of its natural resources, and to report its findings and recommendations to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to submit some observations upon the resolution in the form in which I have modified it this morning.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. May I inquire of the Senator what was the action of the Senate Committee on Finance as to a duty on petroleum in the tariff bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As the Senator will see from an examination of the tariff bill, no duty was placed upon the imports of this product.

I desire especially to refer to the condition in which the country finds itself with regard to the reservations of oil lands made for the protection of the Government in supplying oil as the source of motive power for the modern Navy of to-day.

It will be remembered by Senators that some years ago, beginning with the administration of President Taft, it was decided that oil-burning vessels were likely to displace coal-burning vessels in every navy that sought to keep abreast of the advanced policies of naval construction. As soon as that was understood by our Government, the head of the Navy Department sought information as to whether it would be possible, from the public lands owned by the Government, to supply the oil necessary for the vessels of the Navy. He was informed by the Secretary of the Interior of that time, on the authority of the Geological Survey, that there was an abundance of oil on the public domain. It was then determined that there should be a radical change in all naval construction, and that from that time on we should build oil-burning instead of coal-burning vessels.

As the next step in taking care of the public interests a plan was formulated, and urged upon the President, of withdrawing from sale or entry certain oil-producing lands, as indicated by investigations that had been made by the Geological Survey.

Mr. President, as a result of this understanding between the different departments of the Government certain lands known to contain oil were thereupon withdrawn from sale or public entry and were set apart as Government reservations, known as naval oil reservations Nos. 1 and 2, located in California, and No. 3, located in Wyoming.

It must be confessed, to our humiliation and our shame, that private interests, eager to profit out of the exploitation of any natural resource, at once sought to secure a foothold in these oil reserves that the Government had selected and set apart as a source of supply for the Navy. Under various subterfuges private entries were made upon these lands, and contests were raised as to whether the President had a right to make these reservations for the protection of our Navy, and out of these contests there grew up a controversy which developed into what I might say amounted to a national scandal.

The Navy Department tried to protect the naval reserves. Private interests, great oil companies, intruded upon these reserves, questioned the authority of the Government, through an Executive order by the President, to withdraw them from public entry, and raised technicalities here and there to break down the authority under which the reservations had been made. It is the history of legislation touching this subject that there were men to be found in the Senate of the United States and in the House of Representatives to take the side of the private interests that had invaded these reservations to deprive this Government of the naval reserves that had been thus withdrawn in the public interest.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HARRELD. I am not sure that I am right, but my recollection is that the Executive order which set aside these naval reserves provided that they should be controlled by the Secretary of the Navy. I do remember that I called on the Secretary of the Navy once about some proposed leases, and at that time he told me that he had control of the situation. I would like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin how it comes that the Secretary of the Interior is now vested with authority to make these leases?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. These naval reserves were under the authority and control of the Secretary of the Navy down to the time when there was a change of administration following the election of 1920.

Some time after the present administration came into control of the Government the public was informed that a movement was on foot to transfer from the Navy Department to the Interior Department the control of the naval oil reserves. The change of policy under the Harding administration goes much further than that. It involves the forests and it involves the coal lands.

I say now, and I sound it as a note of warning to my Republican colleagues, that we can not afford to permit a record to be made here which will parallel the record of Mr. Ballinger, Secretary of the Interior under the Taft administration.

Mr. President, all sorts of looting goes on in a Government as big as ours in spite of anything that can be done to prevent it. The most scandalous gouging of the public by private interests probably occurs during a war period, and the plunderers operate through the War Department. But, sir, in normal peace times the sluiceway for a large part of the corruption to which this Government of ours is subjected is the Department of the Interior. That department has been befouled under all administrations, in greater or less degree, by the corrupting influences which work through it to plunder our great heritage of public lands, of timber, of coal, of iron, of copper, of oil. All of the wealth deposited by the lavish hand of nature in the public domain belongs to the people of this Government, but it is raided by selfish special interests through the Interior Department.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator a question for information?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am very much interested in the Senator's statement as to the change of policy with respect to these lands which were reserved for naval oil supplies. Have they been leased to some person connected with the Standard Oil, or one of its subsidiary organizations? Have there been any limitations in the terms of the lease as to the prices which should be charged? Are they to be the same monopolistic prices which now prevail in the United States? What are the terms?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator for bringing me back to the subject of my resolution.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will pardon me. I thought he was about to conclude, and I wanted an answer to those questions.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I think I can answer the question of the Senator from Utah. I think this lease has been given to a new organization known as the Mammoth Oil Co.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am coming to that, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I suggest that the Senator go on with the line he was following.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The throwing open of the naval reserves by leasing the lands to oil corporations by this administration came as a distinct shock to the country when it became known a few weeks ago after the transfer of the control of the naval oil reserves to the Interior Department, after they had been handed over by the consent of the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of the Interior. Following that the country was startled with the information that practically all the oil in naval reserve No. 1 and naval oil reserve No. 2 in California and naval oil reserve No. 3 in Wyoming had been leased to private interests.

Mr. President, ever watchful of the public interest, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] was the first Member of this body to call attention in a public way to what had been done. I myself had overlooked it, and I have had for many years (very near to my heart) an interest in this branch of the public service. The junior Senator from Wyoming introduced a resolution, calling the attention of the Senate and the country to the leasing of naval reserve No. 3, located in Wyoming, the richest of all the naval reserves. He first informed the public that this lease had been made without open competitive bidding to some favored party.

The Senator from Wyoming promptly demanded information on the subject. He introduced a resolution and made a brief statement on the floor. That brought the matter to my attention. Subsequently I introduced the resolution to which I am now addressing myself.

Mr. President, the policy of 13 years of conserving underground oil in naval oil reserves has been abandoned. The three great naval reserves have recently become private oil reserves.

Within the present month the last of the reserves, and the richest, No. 3, in Wyoming, has been leased in its entirety to one oil corporation. The only possible justification which can be offered for this action by the Interior Department is the one which they have put forward, namely, that these valuable reserves are being depleted by the drilling of wells on adjoining privately owned lands. I shall presently call the attention of the Senate to the opinions of competent authority upon that subject, but for the moment I wish to consider the phases of this situation which led up to the action of the Interior Department.

I was astounded when I learned that the Navy Department had turned the administration of these naval oil reserves over to the Interior Department. It can be said for the present Secretary of the Interior that he has always frankly declared his position on public questions. As a Member of the Senate, his attitude toward the public domain generally, and the naval oil reserves in particular, was well understood during his service as a Member of this body. Upon every measure that involved the conservation of natural resources upon the public lands Senator Fall, from New Mexico, was the aggressive opponent of the policy of conservation as established under Roosevelt and thereafter maintained as a general policy of administration by his successors. His position, as shown by speech and vote while a Member of this body, makes it very plain that he was opposed to strengthening and extending conservation and in favor of weakening and impairing the policy.

During the long fight over the naval oil reserves, which was the subject of sharp contention from time to time on the floor of the Senate, the present Secretary of the Interior, then a Member of the Senate, was not conspicuous as a guardian of naval oil reserves. Everybody familiar with his record will admit that to be true. He voted and spoke against provisions offered to safeguard these valuable reserves.

In view of this record it seems almost unbelievable that the Secretary of the Navy would be willing to turn over to the Secretary of the Interior the administration of the naval oil reserves. Especially is this true when one remembers the strenuous fight which the Navy Department had with the Interior Department during President Wilson's administration to prevent the very disaster which has now occurred. In this connection it is significant to note that every officer of the Navy who had been specially detailed to investigate the naval reserves and who had become especially well informed as to these naval oil reserves and who supported Secretary Daniels in that contest have since the advent of the present administration been ordered to sea or to other parts of the world for duty. I have been informed upon very high naval authority that these changes in personnel detail were made after the present Secretary of the Interior had begun his campaign to secure the transfer of these naval reserves to the Interior Department. In fact, it was after a very stormy interview with the former custodians of the Navy oil that Mr. Fall, Secretary of the Interior, requested the Navy Department to send more "reasonable" officers to represent the Navy in conference with him. These naval officers, equipped and efficient, who had proven their loyalty to the naval reserve, were ordered elsewhere, and others who had not been specially associated with or interested in the former policy of the Navy were named to take their places.

Without access to the records in this case it is somewhat difficult to get at all the facts, but there is sufficient material available to make it plain that the naval reserves are being sacrificed to private exploitation at the hands of favored interests.

On the 28th day of February there was organized under the laws of Delaware the Mammoth Oil Co., with a capital stock of 1,000,000 shares without nominal or par value. The articles of incorporation stated, in article 4, that the actual number of shares with which the corporation commenced business should be 10. The incorporators were T. L. Croteau, of Wilmington, Del., who subscribed for eight shares; M. A. Bruce, of Wilmington, Del., who has one share; C. H. Blaske, of the same place, who also subscribed for one share.

The next record which appears in the files of the secretary of state of Delaware is an amendment to the articles of incorporation of the Mammoth Oil Co., which by this time had blossomed out with a vice president and secretary, who filed the amended articles of incorporation with the secretary of state. They are, respectively, G. C. Wahlberg and H. W. Kenwell. The former appears in the directory of directors of New York City as a director of the Sinclair Central American Oil Corporation.

This amendment increased the authorized shares of capital stock of the Mammoth Oil Co. from 1,000,000 to 2,005,000. There were certain other amendments of the articles of incorporation filed at the same time not material to note at this time.

In passing it may be interesting to observe that this capital stock is divided into two classes—A and B—2,000,000 shares being class A and 5,000 shares constituting class B.

The right to elect directors in this corporation is vested exclusively in the holders of class B stock. This virtually gives these 5,000 shares absolute control of the company.

A conservative estimate of the value of naval reserve No. 3 in Wyoming, known as Teapot Dome, is a half billion dollars. Any Senator with paper and pencil can figure out the value of these 5,000 shares of stock.

At the very time when correspondents of the press were being assured by officials of the Interior Department that no lease of the rich naval reserve No. 3 had been made, a certain gentleman, prominent in oil, racing, and administration circles, published an interview in the New York World in which he asserted that the lease had been made and signed.

Mr. KING. That showed that he was swift. He learned to be so in horse racing probably.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. He was very rapid; he was somewhat ahead of the announcement of the Interior Department. This gentleman was none other than Harry Sinclair, of the Sinclair Oil Co.

This lease between the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Mammoth Oil Co. was signed on April 7, 1922. The fact that this lease had actually been made was not officially admitted until April 21, when its existence was acknowledged in the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy, in response to Senate resolution of April 15, 1922, introduced by the able and diligent junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK].

During the time between April 7 and 21, when this mystery surrounded the public's business, speculation in Sinclair oil jumped on the New York Exchange in three days' trading over $30,000,000.

Mr. President, if there was a bill before the Senate granting a concession to the Mammoth Oil Co. of naval oil reserve No. 3 in Wyoming, comprising between six and seven thousand acres of the richest oil lands in the United States, worth at least half a billion dollars, the Senate would certainly demand all the facts and details respecting the matter before taking any action upon the bill. It would not accept glittering generalities. It would not be satisfied with the mystery, evasion, and denials that have emanated from the Interior Department for weeks concerning this Mammoth Oil deal. It would not be satisfied with the answers to the resolution of the Senator from Wyoming that duck and dodge the facts in the case. Would not some Members of the Senate want to know who were the real organizers of the Mammoth Oil Co. who were to be favored by the Government with a special privilege in value beyond the dreams of Crœsus? Would they not want to know something specific about Mr. Harry F. Sinclair and his associates, to whom it was proposed to transfer this naval oil reserve?

If the lease of No. 3 is as loosely drawn as the one given to other favored companies on the naval reserves in California, copies of which have recently come into my possession, I would want to bring certain provisions of it to the attention of the Senate. In any event the Congress of the United States and the public should have all the facts and information regarding the reversal of a great national policy and the surrender of our naval oil reserves, which may involve the Nation's safety, to say nothing of the question which is raised here of granting to favored individuals public properties worth hundreds of millions of dollars which belong to the people.

I shall confine my remarks to-day to naval reserve No. 3, sometimes called the Teapot Dome, because this is the reserve which has been thrown open to private exploitation most recently. Later on I shall have something to say concerning the department's handling of naval oil reserves 1 and 2 in California.

The only possible defense which the Interior Department can make for leasing the No. 3 reserve is that it is being drained by drilling in the adjoining privately owned Salt Creek field. No other valid reason can be advanced, and some reason of paramount importance for the action taken will have to be proven before the public will accept this reversal of an approved Government policy which has been in force for nearly 13 years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is making some amazing revelations, and I think that most of the Members of the Senate are not aware of that fact. Will he yield to me in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Gooding	Lodge	Ransdell
Brandegee	Hale	McKellar	Sheppard
Broussard	Harreld	McKinley	Shortridge
Bursum	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Calder	Harrison	Nelson	Spencer
Capper	Heflin	Newberry	Stanley
Caraway	Hitchcock	Norbeck	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Kellogg	Oddie	Swanson
Dillingham	Kendrick	Overman	Townsend
Edge	Keyes	Page	Wadsworth
Ernst	King	Phipps	Warren
France	La Follette	Pittman	Watson, Ind.
Glass	Lenroot	Poindexter

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I repeat that the only possible defense which the Interior Department can make for leasing the No. 3 reserve in Wyoming is that it is being drained by drilling in the adjoining privately owned Salt Creek field.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In just a moment. No other valid reason can be advanced; and some reason of paramount importance for the action taken will have to be advanced and will have to be proven before the public will accept this reversal of an established governmental policy which has been in force for nearly 13 years.

I now yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, this report shows that the contracts under which these lands were leased provided for royalties running up to as much as 50 per cent. It also shows that it is claimed that these Governnrent lands are being drained by the operators of the Salt Creek territory. The Salt Creek territory leases provide for only 12½ per cent royalty. Does the Senator's investigation show whether or not the people who got these leases from the Navy Department own any leases in the Salt Creek territory?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President. My information is that no drainage of naval oil reservation No. 3 into the Salt Creek field is possible.

Mr. HARRELD. It would seem that if some people are draining this field under leases which provide for 12½ per cent royalty, they certainly would not stop draining it in that way in order to operate under leases under which they would pay 50 per cent royalty.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is perfectly true; and I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma—who, I know, is quite familiar with this whole subject—whether he has any information or knowledge as to the connections of these leases of naval oil reserve No. 3 with the operators in the Salt Creek field?

Mr. HARRELD. No; I am not informed on that subject. I was asking the Senator for information in regard to it. That is a very material question, though.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will inquire of the Senator if he has any indirect information upon that subject, any reports or statements that bear upon it?

Mr. HARRELD. The only interest I have in this matter is that some independent operators claim that they were precluded from being allowed to bid on these leases. That is all the information I have.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator is concerned in this matter not only on account of the independent operators but upon the broad ground of the public interest as well.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HARRELD. I want to correct my statement. That is not my only interest.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am sure it is not.

Mr. HARRELD. I am interested in this matter for the very same reason that the Senator has expressed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am certain that must be so, and I am glad to have the Senator say so.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. As contributing something to the evidence in reference to whether or not the Teapot Dome is being drained, with the Senator's permission I should like to have read a telegram which I have recently received from former Governor Brooks, of Casper, Wyo., who lives in the immediate vicinity of the Dome.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have several telegrams upon that subject, Mr. President, and if the Senator will withhold that until I reach them, I would like to have it offered at that time and in that connection. I think I am approaching the presentation of some testimony upon this question.

Mr. KENDRICK. Very well.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Interior Department has stated, in defense of this leasing of naval oil reserve No. 3, that an "expert of this department" has found that the Teapot Dome was menaced by drainage.

This claim, made by one lone expert of the Interior Department, is contrary to nearly all opinions of geological experts who have heretofore examined and are intimately acquainted with this field.

In order to be possessed of current information, I sent a telegram to Gov. Robert D. Carey, of Wyoming, a Republican, by the way, with whose father I served in the House of Representatives more than a quarter of a century ago. I know the stock. The name Carey carries with it to my mind integrity and honesty and devotion to the public service. The elder Carey, with whom I served in the House, subsequently became the governor of his State, to be succeeded by his son. I read a telegram from Gov. Robert D. Carey, of Wyoming, as follows:

CHEYENNE, WYO., April 25, 1922.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate:

Reference your inquiry relative Naval Reserve Three: While it is possible agreement may prove beneficial to oil industry in this State, I seriously doubt it, as an increased production may lower prices, causing both State, school, and road funds and United States reclamation fund to suffer accordingly. From such information as I have been able to obtain, I believe there is no chance of the Salt Creek field draining Teapot Dome. Regardless of all other objections to agreement, a great wrong is being done Wyoming to rob it of one of its most valuable natural resources, giving the State nothing in return. Further, the reserve was created to assure the Navy a supply of oil at some future time when oil might not be available from other sources. To use this oil now may mean that at some time this country may be seriously embarrassed in a war for lack of fuel for its Navy. From the standpoint of the Navy, it would appear that the Navy desires this oil in order to be relieved of purchasing oil elsewhere and using naval appropriations for other purposes. No one can justify the bartering away of valuable natural resources, the property of the State and Nation. Maybe there is a possibility that others besides the Mammoth Oil Co. might have made more favorable offers if given an opportunity.

ROBERT D. CAREY, Governor.

I also wired Dr. G. B. Morgan, State geologist of Wyoming. His telegram is direct and to the point. It is as follows:

[Western Union telegram.]

CHEYENNE, WYO., April 23, 1922.

Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Washington, D. C.:

No producing wells in neighborhood of Teapot except Salt Creek wells. My opinion is that Teapot and Salt Creek are separate structures and practically no possibility of draining Teapot through Salt Creek wells.

G. B. MORGAN, State Geologist.

This is the statement of a scientist in the employ of the State of Wyoming, and I think his testimony should be accepted as disinterested.

A telegram from the Hon. W. A. Blackmore, mayor of Casper, Wyo., which is very close to this reserve, gives very interesting facts. I trust that Senators will listen carefully to this telegram. I read:

[Western Union telegram.]

CASPER, WYO., April 24, 1922.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate:

The Teapot structure can not be drained by outside wells. The Salt Creek and Teapot Domes are entirely separate. The syncline between contains water—two wells drilled on Salt Creek side proved this. Shannon sand in Teapot carries oil—same sand in Salt Creek carries water. Hence impossibility for outside wells to drain Teapot. These views upheld by geologists who are familiar with actual conditions. Government owns entire Teapot Dome, and I believe it unwise to tap same at this time with 900,000,000 gallons gasoline reserve.

W. A. BLACKMORE, Mayor.

I also direct the attention of the Senate to a telegram from Hon. Robert C. Bell, former Special Assistant Attorney General in charge of withdrawn oil lands in Wyoming. He certainly ought to be fully informed as to all matters in controversy regarding Wyoming oil reserve No. 3. In his telegram of April 24 he says:

As former Special Assistant Attorney General in charge of withdrawn oil land matters, Wyoming, I know the situation relative to Teapot structure on naval reserve. To lease this field is positively criminal.

In addition to all the foregoing I had my secretary call Dr. David White, chief geologist of the Geological Survey. In answer to a direct question as to whether or not his office had stated that the Teapot Dome could be drained by contiguous drilling, Doctor White replied:

There is no information in my office upon which I could make any such statement. The only statements which we have are those of interested oil parties. We have considered sending a man to the field to investigate this situation, but have not done so as yet because of our limited appropriations.

Mr. President, now I yield to the Senator from Wyoming to offer as additional testimony the telegram to which he called attention a moment ago.

Mr. KENDRICK. In support of the statement which the Senator has just made, I ask to have read the telegram which I sent to the desk a few moments ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

CASPER, WYO., April 19, 1922.

Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Replying to your telegram of the 18th, it is a physical impossibility for wells in the Salt Creek field to drain oil from the Teapot structure. Two wells already drilled struck water in 2,300-foot contour in second wall creek, thus proving conclusively that the saddle between Salt Creek and Teapot Dome contains water. Further proofs show the ridiculousness of any contention that wells in Salt Creek could affect Teapot. Detailed geological proofs of this fact follow by letter. A sharp distinction should be drawn between naval reserves in California that may possibly be drained by offset wells when there is no possibility of such a condition affecting the Teapot Dome in Wyoming.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN OIL & GAS PRODUCERS' ASSOCIATION,
By B. B. BROOKS, President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Wyoming to state who is the sender of this telegram.

Mr. KENDRICK. Recently, in referring to this subject, I had read into the record a communication from Mr. Brooks, who, as I then stated, was formerly Governor of Wyoming, and one of the ablest governors who ever served the State. He is a very successful business man, and, being a large operator in and producer of oil, and not in any sense a speculator, he is in close contact with the oil industry and is generally considered to be one of the foremost authorities on the subject. He is president of a number of oil companies in the section where he lives, and also, I believe, president of one of the banks of the city of Casper, the largest city in Wyoming. He is probably as well informed on the oil situation in Wyoming as any man not only in the State but in the West.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming if Mr. Brooks is informed not only with regard to the surface situation, the location of wells, and so on, but is he also informed about, and has he made a study of, the geological structure of the oil-bearing formation of that State?

Mr. KENDRICK. On account of Governor Brooks's connection with and investments in oil properties situated in the immediate vicinity of the so-called Teapot Dome and by actual drilling operations carried on to develop the properties, he has acquired not merely knowledge but most detailed information as to the structures of that oil country; in fact, his knowledge, gleaned from drilling operations, is probably surpassed by that of few geologists.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand the Senator to say that he is a gentleman of the very highest integrity and character?

Mr. KENDRICK. He is one of the most widely and most favorably known men in the State, as well as one of the most highly respected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What are his political affiliations?

Mr. KENDRICK. He is a lifelong Republican, and his record is unassailable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the Interior Department, or whoever it was he quoted, identifies the expert upon whose judgment they based the claim that it would be a loss to the United States to permit operations elsewhere, and that in order to protect this oil it would be necessary to drill for it now? Who is the expert referred to as "an expert in the Interior Department"?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He is referred to in a communication which the Secretary addressed to the Senate in response to a resolution which was introduced by the Senator from Wyoming. I have given the language of the department in referring to it just as it is given in the letter, "an expert in the department."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. His identity is not known?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It does not appear to be disclosed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is an anonymous authority.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me to have a letter read in connection with the request for information as to the lease and development of oil fields in the State of Wyoming? The letter is from the author of the telegram just read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it bears upon the question of the geological structure with respect to drainage, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator to have it read at this point; otherwise I prefer that he offer it a little later.

Mr. KENDRICK. I will take occasion to do that. It has more directly to do with the general effect of the leasing.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The excuse that the naval reserve is in danger of depletion by draining into private wells on contiguous lands is as old as the date of its withdrawal. It has ever been the specious plea upon which those desiring to exploit this rich field have based their efforts to secure access to it. But even if the weight of scientific opinion were not against the contention that this field can be drained by outside drilling there is a definite way in which the Government can protect itself against such a ruthless system of pillage. It does not have to surrender to the burglars. The oil in these reserves, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, belongs to the Government. Private interests threaten to draw that oil off by sinking wells on adjoining territory. The policy of the present Secretary of the Interior is to surrender to these pillaging interests.

Mr. President, I do not hold any brief for the Democratic administration. I never had any concessions or any favors or any personal consideration at the hands of the Democratic administration. I have received the same treatment from the bosses of the Democratic Party that I have received from the bosses of the Republican Party. I owe nothing to either side. I pursue my course in public life as I see it in an endeavor to serve the public interests. But the truth compels me to say that when Josephus Daniels was Secretary of the Navy he did not supinely surrender to these oil-grabbing corporations.

Upon this precise point I quote from a recent statement by former Secretary Daniels, made last Saturday while he was in Washington, in which he contradicts the assertion that millions of dollars of naval oil had been lost by drainage while he was the head of the Navy Department. And I assert that what Secretary Daniels said in this statement last Saturday in the city of Washington is sustained by what he did as Secretary of the Navy. I quote:

> There never were any wells drilled near our reserves. Several times owners of adjoining lands intimated that they would sink wells close to the naval reserves. I made it plain to them that if this was done the Navy Department would put marines into these fields and sink a well for every one drilled by them. If they attempted to tap our reserves, we would tap theirs. When they learned that we would not be forced by such methods they abandoned their attempts, and we kept our oil. We made it plain that the United States was a larger business concern than any of the oil corporations, and that we would protect the naval reserves that had been set aside by former President Taft.

Contrast the two policies. On the authority of "an expert in the Interior Department," who states that Teapot Dome naval reserve No. 3 is menaced with drainage by an outside private company stealing Uncle Sam's oil underground, Secretary Fall throws up his hands and leases the land to the pirates. Is that service in the public interest? I do not care, Mr. President, for my part, what party label a public servant bears. No eminence of position should protect him from just criticism if he betrays the public interest.

In another interview while he was in Washington former Secretary Daniels said:

> Any man who permits the oil reserves of the Navy to be tapped is risking the very national existence of the United States. It is outrageous and wicked. When the present scrapping of naval ships is completed we shall have practically nothing but oil-burning vessels in our fighting line. Without plenty of oil for a future emergency, they will be as useless as painted ships upon a painted ocean.
>
> The reasons given by the present administration for turning over the naval oil reserves in California and Wyoming to great private corporations are childish. They say the Standard Oil Co. has bored wells immediately adjoining our reserve in California and is tapping our oil pools. Is this Government impotent to defend its own property? Should the Navy stand by with its hands folded and let the Standard or anybody else steal our oil?
>
> The same threats were made when I was Secretary of the Navy. We decided that, first of all, we should get out an injunction; if that failed, we decided that every time the Standard or anybody bored a well that might tap our oil we would bore one immediately adjoining which would tap their oil. I got an appropriation from Congress for that purpose.
>
> During the last months of my administration I sent an officer out to the Pacific coast to see what steps were necessary to protect the Navy's oil. I have been out of office so long that I do not remember what he reported. But in any event the security of the United States demands that the future fuel supply of our fighting ships be saved from the greedy hands of private oil corporations.
>
> The suggestion that the oil in the naval reserve pool should be pumped out and stored, so that it may be immediately available in case of emergency, is intended to deceive. Oil is now cheap and plentiful. The Navy can buy all it needs at a fair price. And we have great underground tanks at Yorktown, Va., and San Diego, Calif., where enough surplus oil can be stored for any emergency.
>
> The Navy oil reserves were intended to insure a supply of fuel in years to come, when other fields are near exhaustion. Some experts say the oil supply of the United States will be exhausted within 20 years. Others think it will last longer. Everybody knows the rate of consumption is increasing with extreme rapidity. Certainly in 20 or even 10 years a sufficient oil supply will be hard to get unless we maintain a large reserve. That was exactly the object when President Taft and President Wilson set aside the naval oil reserve tracts in California and Wyoming.
>
> The only way to keep an oil reserve is in the ground. To pump it out now is to waste a great deal and to insure the almost immediate use of it all. Other nations are hunting oil reserves for their navies all over the world. We, with such reserves already provided for, have apparently decided to turn them over to be exploited by private corporations. It is, I repeat, simply outrageous. What is more, the time is likely to come when the people who are responsible for using up the Navy's oil reserve will find that they have endangered the very existence of the United States as an independent Nation.

For several years this fight to protect the naval oil reserves against these hungry exploiters has been waged in and out of Congress. From the beginning it has been much more than a question of oil reserves; it has been a question of national safety.

Ever since the Executive withdrawal of 1909 and the creation of the naval oil reserves there have been many bills introduced in Congress which sought to vitiate the Navy's rights in these lands set aside for the exclusive use and benefit of the Navy.

Mr. President, I digress just for a moment to say that it is inconceivable, to my mind, that Members of the House of Representatives and Members of the Senate would introduce and sponsor bills to take away from this Government the oil necessary to supply its Navy in the future, and to do that in the interest of private oil monopolies, such as the Standard Oil. We have had considerable discussion about "disloyalty" in the United States Senate, in the House of Representatives, and in the country during the last four or five years. Show me something comparable to the betrayal of this Government's interest, the undermining of government itself, the serving of special oil interests against the interest of this Government in the preservation and protection of the oil reserves necessary for a modern Navy.

In the Sixty-fourth Congress the general leasing bill (H. R. 406) was so amended by the Senate Public Lands Committee as to virtually abolish the Navy oil reserves. Fortunately it was defeated, together with the entire bill, and the naval reserves saved.

"In the Sixty-fifth Congress the general leasing bill (S. 2812) provided for the disposition of every acre of the Navy's land in reserve No. 2. In the Sixty-sixth Congress the oil leasing bill, in sections 18 and 18a, contained provisions allowing leases on naval oil reserves. This bill was reported from the Senate Committee on Public Lands. I opposed the sections of this bill dealing with the naval reserves, and offered an amendment to strike out the parts of the bill dealing with the naval oil reserves. From the beginning I have opposed in the Senate legislation seeking to destroy these naval reserves.

On September 8, 1919, when the oil leasing bill was under consideration in the Senate, I said, speaking of the naval oil reserves:

> I think that this phase of the question is of such magnitude and is so vital to the position that the Government will occupy as a sea power of the world, that we ought to give special attention to those sections. I am going to ask the Senators present to follow me as I take up the subject.
>
> The bill as drawn will, I believe, destroy the naval reserves set aside for the Navy. This is done by provisions contained in the second paragraph of section 18, aided by succeeding paragraphs of that section. Out of the lands originally withdrawn on or before September 27, 1909, certain areas were set apart to furnish a future supply of oil for the Navy. The reports of the Navy experts of the highest authority, as well as the experience of our own Navy and of the navies of the foreign powers, had established the fact beyond question that naval efficiency, and, therefore, national safety, were dependent upon the increasing use of oil-burning ships. It is therefore evident that, after a brief moment of time, as the lives of nations are counted, there will not be a sufficient supply of oil in the ground necessary to insure our safety from attack if the existing deposits are to be thrown open to private exploitation without maintaining any reserve for our future naval use. This was the purpose for which the naval oil reserves were set aside. The needs of the Navy require that the oil should be kept in reserve in the ground until future naval necessities require its extraction and use.

I measure my words when I say that what I had fears of then has already transpired. To-day the naval reserves are on the right road to destruction or exhaustion by allowing specially favored private interests to secure leases upon them. They are being scrapped; that is all. Had my amendment to the oil leasing bill of 1919 been accepted, the Interior Department and the Navy Department would have been compelled by law to protect these reserves. Yet I received just eight votes in this body for the amendment which I offered at that time.

On September 27, 1909, in line with the policy of the Navy Department regarding oil-burning ships, a presidential order of withdrawal of oil lands was issued by President Taft. Previously Admiral George Dewey, as president of the General Board of the Navy, had recommended—that the use of oil fuel both as an auxiliary in large ships and as the sole fuel of destroyers and smaller vessels would be attended with marked advantages, * * * and recommended that in its building programs for the current and proceeding years that vessels be fitted accordingly.

The Taft order of withdrawal, as testified by Director George Otis Smith, was predicated on "the present and future requirements of the American Navy."

On December 6, 1910, the President in his annual message made the following statement:

In September, 1909, I directed that all public oil lands, whether then withdrawn or not, should be withheld for disposition pending congressional action * * * and for the further reason that it seemed desirable to reserve certain fuel-oil deposits for the use of the American Navy. * * *

As not only the largest owner of oil lands but as a prospective large consumer of oil by reason of the increasing use of fuel oil by the Navy the Federal Government is directly concerned both in encouraging rational development and at the same time insuring the longest possible life to the oil supply.

There was some question raised by lawyers as to whether the President had the right to make these oil withdrawals. Thereupon the Pickett Act was passed by Congress, June 25, 1910, giving the President authority by legislative act as an added precaution. On July 2, 1910, the President by Executive order under authority of this act (36 Stat. 847) rewithdrew these lands.

Throughout this entire period the record will show that the Navy Department was in correspondence with the President and the Interior Department urging the necessity of reserves for fuel oil. Finally two petroleum reserves were created by Executive order—No. 1 on September 2, 1912, and No. 2 on December 13, 1912. These were withdrawn by President Taft. Later on President Wilson established, by Executive order of April 30, 1915, naval reserve No. 3, in Wyoming, also known as the Teapot Dome.

In practically every annual report of the Secretary of the Navy there are references to the importance of holding these naval reserves intact for future naval use. For instance, in his report of December 1, 1916, the Secretary of the Navy devotes six pages to the necessity of oil conservation for the Navy.

Likewise on December 9, 1916, the Naval Consulting Board, through Thomas A. Edison, its chairman, declared in an official statement that the national defense would be imperiled if any legislation was enacted which would divert from the Navy any portion of its petroleum fuel reserve.

Hearings before the House and Senate Committees on Public Lands and on Naval Affairs for the past several years show testimony by naval experts support the conclusions of the Edison report.

There are many official reports and statements by experts on the necessity of doing everything possible to keep in the ground intact a supply of fuel oil for the Navy.

My colleague, the late Senator Husting, made a fight against the efforts to destroy these naval reserves, and his minority report as to the naval oil controversy I believe is unanswerable. I quote briefly from this admirable report:

We have entered upon a policy of substituting oil-burning for coal-burning ships. We have entered upon the policy of substituting oil-burning for coal-burning ships, believing it to be essential for the national safety. Other great naval powers have adopted the same policy. It is probable that it will take about 15 years to work out this policy fully, at which time the Navy's needs for oil will reach its maximum. But if we abandon the reserve policy we have only 15 years' supply in sight. The most recent estimates put the total oil reserves of the United States in known fields at 7,629,000,000 barrels and forecast an increase in consumption of 5 per cent per year. At this rate our total oil resources would be exhausted in 16 years but for importations from abroad.

The leasing of the United States government-owned naval oil reserves located in the State of Wyoming to private corporations will come as a distinct shock to the country. The transaction followed close upon the transfer of control of this enormously valuable property from the Navy Department to the Interior Department. Then came the startling information that all the naval reserves, No. 1 and No. 2 in California and No. 3 in Wyoming, had been leased to private parties.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels on February 9, 1916, in testimony before the Senate Committee on Public Lands, said:

I wish to as earnestly as possible impress upon you our conviction, in which not only the Navy Department joins, but the Department of Justice, that this oil land having been set apart for the Navy belongs to the Navy; that this leasing bill would take away from the Government that which in time of peril might change the tide of war; that these gentlemen who have suitable rights should be remanded to the courts or to the regular department of the Government to have their rights tested.

In a letter to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, dated February 17, 1916, Secretary Daniels said:

These reserves were relied upon when the policy of building oil-burning ships was adopted; and now that we have a large and increasing number of ships that depend solely upon oil for fuel it is of the utmost importance that the rights and needs of the Navy be not overlooked in the effort to relieve oil claimants of oil lands. * * * The Navy Department does not desire to produce oil from the naval petroleum reserves at the present time and does not want the oil converted into money at any time, but does want the oil conserved under ground, where it may be stored without cost and free from loss or evaporation until the decreased production and the increased market price renders its production and use desirable.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt, in February, 1916, in an address, said:

If private individuals have valid claims on these lands, they must be adequately compensated for these claims, but they must cease to remove oil from these lands.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels said, in testifying before the Senate Committee on Public Lands, February 9, 1916:

* * * In pursuance of a long and earnest effort to secure oil for the Navy, we are now building all our ships in the Navy to burn oil. The advantages of oil burning over coal is so very great that if there is any policy of practical conservation of oil that can be adopted, I think it is entitled to be put through, especially in view of the plans of preparedness we are now discussing. * * * Every battleship that we build now increases the demand by 90,000 barrels per year. Every destroyer we build increases it by 20,000 barrels. * * * Our country is the greatest oil-producing country in the world, and yet I apprehend if this bill passes—

That is the Phelan bill, which Senators will recall—before the lives of these ships ended this country will be in the position of having oil ships and no oil except at the very high prices that will prevail. * * *

Whom do Senators and Members of the House of Representatives serve here when they support the policy of depleting and robbing the Government of its oil lands in order to enhance and enrich the oil monopoly? You will find the same Members and the same Senators supporting a policy of naval expansion, large naval building, which means large purchases of oil from private monopoly if these naval oil reserves are surrendered to private interest. Is it possible that Senators and Members of the House of Representatives are stockholders in these private oil companies? I do not know; but I think some explanation ought to be forthcoming for a failure to stand by the interests of this Government as against the interests of Standard Oil and other monopoly oil interests.

I have read from the testimony of Secretary of the Navy Daniels, who during his entire tenure of office resisted the efforts of the oil monopolists of this country to take within their control the last remnants of the public domain reserved for the use of the Navy of the United States.

But, Mr. President, there is a deeper underlying issue involved here than our national safety or the protection of the mere property rights and equities of our Government. It is true that over an unbroken period of more than a decade three Presidents—Roosevelt, Taft, and Wilson—maintained the policy of conservation in respect to the natural resources of the public domain, which has now been repudiated and reversed during the first year of the administration of President Harding. It is true that Admiral George Dewey, as president of the General Board of the Navy, more than a dozen years ago, declared the necessity of an ample oil supply for the Navy, and that Thomas A. Edison, probably the greatest creative technical mind of American history, as chairman of the Naval Consulting Board in 1916, gave his assent to the policy which has now been overthrown. It is true that every competent authority that has written upon the subject in recent years has named oil as the natural resource upon which the industrial and naval strength of the future must depend, and, because of the prodigal waste of our oil resources under the present system of exploitation, that the supply which should have lasted us for a century to come will be exhausted within a brief span of years.

I assert that these propositions are established beyond dispute, and I rely upon unimpeachable authority for that statement. Yet these facts are not the basic fundamental elements involved in this problem after all.

The great issue involved here is whether the Congress of the United States, charged with solemn responsibility under the Constitution as trustees of the public domain, is to take the necessary steps to protect the people of this country from the extension of monopoly control over their natural resources.

The trail of corruption left by the oil monopoly in the pages of American history is not calculated to inspire the confidence of the people in any transaction to which the agents of that monopoly are parties.

Dominated by the Standard Oil Co., the oil monopoly has been the boldest, the most brazen, the most aggressive violator of the law with which any legislative body has ever had to contend. It has forced people all over this country out of business, crushed competition, and driven competitors in many instances to suicide. It has had on its pay rolls the employees of its competitors, who have sold to it the secrets of those competitors.

There are volumes of evidence taken by congressional committees to which I can cite the Senate in support of every statement I make. The oil monopolists have, in a word, corrupted Government servants, ruthlessly seized and exploited the natural resources which Nature gave to man, and systematically robbed the people through extortionate prices. They could not have done that if they did not have servants on this floor and on the floor of the other branch of Congress and in the Cabinets of every administration.

Under the leases which are the subject of the resolutions offered by the Senator from Wyoming and myself, the oil monopolists of the United States have now taken within their grasp the three remaining naval oil reserves of the United States. The great special interests, which are the beneficiaries of these leases, will inevitably withdraw the oil which belongs to the people and sell it back to the Government for its naval vessels at extortionate prices. Not only will oils to the value of hundreds of millions of dollars be lost to the Government, but the oil monopolist will exact his toll whenever the Congress passes an appropriation bill making public money available for the maintenance of the Navy. Moreover, with an increasingly profitable customer, such as the United States Government, bidding against other consumers of oil, the Standard Oil Trust and its allies will find a ready excuse to increase further the already unreasonable prices exacted from the general public.

That is what this conspiracy amounts to, sir. It not only appropriates for private gain the rich natural wealth which the Government holds in trust for the people, but it reaches out and enables the special interests behind this scheme to tighten their grip upon the farmer, the business man, and upon every person who runs a gasoline engine, and upon every family that enjoys the use of an automobile.

I believe I have produced this afternoon the outline of enough evidence to suggest to the minds of Senators that the rights of the Government and the interests of the people are imperiled in these transactions, which involve hundreds of millions of dollars in public property. Congress can not escape its responsibility in this matter. The Ballinger-Pinchot investigation a decade ago, which broke the back of the Taft administration, did not proceed upon more damning evidence that public interests were being violated than is ready at hand at this time bearing upon the leasing of these naval oil reserves.

By that earlier investigation Congress discharged its obligations to the people and set up a precedent, supported by public opinion, which has had a salutary influence upon every administration since then down to the present time.

Congress in the present instance must either call for an investigation which will unearth all the facts, or, by its silence, it must share its responsibility with the executive branch for what has already transpired. There is no escape from that alternative.

The able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] took the initiative in this matter and by his resolution focused upon it the attention of the public. For that action he deserves the gratitude of the country.

I propose to support and sustain him in the stand he has taken. This is not a partisan question. Men of both parties in the Navy and in the Interior Departments in previous administrations have worked together to preserve the public interests and to protect the rights of the Government in these lands. The resolution I have introduced offers Congress the opportunity to ascertain the truth regarding these leases and to perform its duty to the public.

I propose to press this resolution for prompt passage, and I invite Senators upon both sides of the aisle to examine its provisions, and, if they may conscientiously do so, to give it their support. No matter whom it hits or hurts, let us have the facts. The American people will be satisfied with nothing less.

If I can not have the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Finance to give us time for the consideration of this resolution, the matter is so urgent, Mr. President, that at an early date I shall move to displace the unfinished business and take this resolution up for a long enough time to have it considered and put upon its passage. I shall do that at a very early date.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have an idea that if the Senator from Wisconsin would ask for the consideration of his resolution and for the adoption of it there would be no objection to its passage at any time it may be brought up; at least, I hope not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I can have the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, without a roll call, to ask to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside, I will ask for a vote upon the adoption of the resolution immediately.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator would ask for unanimous consent, I think he would get it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for unanimous consent now that it may be taken up.

Mr. SMOOT. I really have not read the resolution. I would like to have it go over until to-morrow at least, so that I can read it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. All there is of the resolution is that it calls for an investigation with regard to this matter. There are no preambles to the resolution. The Senator can not be ignorant of the fact that we have these reserves. He can not be ignorant of the fact that the public press has carried the announcement of their lease to private interests. I am simply asking for an investigation into the truth of this whole matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I may have no objection to it at all when I have an opportunity to read it, but I really want to have it go over so that I can look into it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think that if a request is made for the adoption of the resolution at an early date, it will be adopted.

I may say in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin that, of course, it is perfectly obvious that whatever he may say or whatever he may do to preserve the naval oil reserves to the best possible advantage of the Government is in the interest of the public and of the naval service and should have the commendation and support of Congress and of the country.

Listening very carefully to his remarks, it seemed to me that an analysis of the proposition might reduce it to one or two quite simple questions. As he stated, and as has been reported by the department, it is claimed by the department that the oil from naval reserve No. 3 in Wyoming was being drained by private parties through wells sunk on private property adjacent to the boundary of the reserve.

Assuming that that is true, it then appears obvious that it would be necessary for the Government to take some action to protect its reserve of oil under its own land from being drained away by the wells which are alleged to exist upon adjoining property. The Senator from Wisconsin has pointed out the means by which the previous Secretary of the Navy proposed to prevent any such attack upon the Government's interests and the Government reserve of oil during his administration. Those means were the sinking of a Government well for every well sunk by private parties. That might be the proper course to pursue. That might be the best means the Government could adopt to protect its interests under such circumstances as are alleged to exist; but the question remains as to whether it would be advisable for the Government itself to undertake to sink wells by the employment of its own labor, or whether it would be to the advantage of the Government to procure the sinking of these wells, which it is admitted by the authorities cited by the Senator from Wisconsin should be sunk, by some other agency, by contract, on such compensation as might be agreed.

It seems, from the facts presented by the Senator from Wisconsin, that that is the course which the Government has pursued; that instead of sinking wells itself it has procured the sinking of wells by a private corporation, by means of a contract under which the Government is supposed to receive certain compensation in the form of oil, not in its crude form, but converted by a process of partial refinement to the condition of fuel oil, in which shape it can be used by the ships of the Navy, delivered at some reservoirs on the seacoast.

It seems to me there are two questions which ought to be investigated, and which I assume could be investigated under the terms of the resolution proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, although I have not examined particularly its exact terms. I assume it is broad enough to cover these two questions. One of those questions is, Is it a fact that wells are being sunk by private parties upon private property adjacent to the boundary of the naval oil reserve, through which wells an attack is being made upon the naval oil reserve of the country? We ought to know that. I am in favor of the adoption of this resolution for the purpose of ascertaining what the facts are in connection with that question.

When we know what the facts are regarding that matter, and consequently have arrived at the second degree of the solution of the problem, namely, as to what measures should be taken to meet this attack upon Government property, we are confronted by another question which likewise should be investigated, and which I assume could be investigated under the resolution offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

That is a question which has not been discussed, I believe, as I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to say that he did not undertake to cover this entire subject in his remarks to-day. That is an inquiry into the reasonableness and the propriety of the terms of this contract, or lease, or whatever it may be called, which was made by the Government with a private party for the sinking of these wells.

I think Congress ought to know, and that the country ought to know, whether or not the interests of the public are being protected by the terms of the contract or lease which has been made for the extraction of the oil from the Government reserve, and that will be ascertained, I assume, by this investigation.

So there are two things to be ascertained. In the first place, was it necessary for the Government to sink wells or to have wells sunk upon its reserve in order to meet an attack upon the oil underneath its own property by which it was being drained? In the second place, are the means which have been adopted by the Government for doing that the proper ones, the best ones, to the greatest advantage of the Government, which could be obtained? So I assume that no one would object to the adoption of the resolution inquiring into those matters.

I may say one thing further as to my observation of this matter, in which I have the same interest as has the Senator from Wisconsin and as, I assume, other Senators have. Some time ago my attention was called to the fact that wells were being sunk on private oil lands in California adjacent to one of the naval oil reserves in that State, by which the oil, as seems to be admitted by all experts and by all persons who are familiar with the conditions of oil pools lying partly under one ownership of land and partly under another, was being drained out of the Government reserves. I took occasion at that time to go to the Secretary of the Navy and to urge that expeditious measures be taken for the protection of the Government interests in this vital matter of fuel for an oil-burning navy, and I may say that, whoever may have been responsible for the delay and whatever may have been the causes of it, I was somewhat disappointed at the apparent apathy or lack of diligence, at least, in proceeding to take steps to counteract this taking of the oil from Government reserves in the manner which has been indicated.

Subsequently that was done, but I felt that it was not done expeditiously and was not done diligently, and I would like to have that matter inquired into in connection with the inquiry which will be held if the resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin should be adopted.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, in fairness to the Departments of the Navy and of the Interior, to print at the conclusion of my remarks and immediately next to them a letter, signed by the Acting Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy, in reply to the Senate resolution of April 15, 1922, which has been referred to in the debates.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Document No. 191, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVE NO. 3, WYOMING.

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy in response to a Senate resolution of April 15, 1922, transmitting information relative to negotiations with private parties for the operation of lands in naval petroleum reserve No. 3, Wyoming.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 21, 1922.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In repsonse to S. Res. 277, relating to naval petroleum reserve No. 3, Wyoming, commonly known as the Teapot Dome, requesting the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, whether negotiations are pending with private parties for the operation of lands included in said reserve, and if so, the names of the parties, the terms and conditions of proposed agreements, and whether opportunity will be given the public for competitive bidding for operation of the lands, or whether it is proposed to award a lease or operating contract or agreement for the entire area to one person, corporation, or association, we have the honor to advise as follows:

For more than a year the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy have had under consideration the handling of the two naval reserves in California and the naval reserve in Wyoming, commonly known as the Teapot Dome, with the idea of working out a policy which would secure the greatest conservation and benefit for the Navy of the oils in such reserves, and secure to the Navy an available storage of fuel oil at convenient points readily accessible wherever and whenever needed, particularly for future needs.

The crude oil in none of these reserves, nor in fact any crude oil, is suitable for use by the Navy as fuel in an unrefined state, and before being available for storage and naval use must be placed in the form of fuel oil. Experts state that the storage of fuel oil in suitable tanks results in practically no loss from evaporation, etc.; certainly not exceeding one-tenth of 1 per cent per annum.

The naval reserves in California have, by drilling and production on privately owned lands adjoining, already been drained to a very large extent, involving a loss to the Government of millions of barrels of oil, and from a careful geologic study recently made by an expert of this department it was found that the Teapot Dome was menaced with a similar drainage danger. The naval reserves in California can be reached through existing pipe lines, and the principal problem there was the exchange of the crude oil for fuel oil in proper and available storage.

With respect to the naval reserve in Wyoming, same was not available for naval use or for exchange of fuel oil to the advantage of the Navy, for the reason that the field lies in the interior and is not connected with pipe lines at any point on the seacoast or with the existing pipe-line systems of the country, while the famous Salt Creek field lies immediately contiguous to the naval reserve (Teapot Dome), and the lands in the Salt Creek field having been leased under the general leasing act, that field was without adequate pipe-line or refinery facilities, and independent producers have been unable to dispose of more than 40 per cent of the possible production of existing wells. Manifestly, therefore, the oils in the naval reserve could not be handled with existing facilities, and after careful consideration of the matter the Secretary of the Interior, with the complete concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, considered proposals from a number of prominent oil companies and individuals for the development of this reserve, with the accompanying guaranty of the construction of adequate pipe-line facilities connecting the field to Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico points, through connection with existing pipe lines. It was also desired that provision be made for the exchange of crude oil produced for fuel oil for naval purposes in such manner and at such points as might be designated by the Navy. After full consideration of all the offers submitted, a contract was entered into by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy on April 7, 1922, with the Mammoth Oil Co., a Delaware corporation, H. F. Sinclair, president.

The contract is in the form of a lease covering the entire area of naval reserve No. 3, with graduated royalties running up to 50 per cent, according to the production and specific gravity of the oil. It provides for the drilling of at least 20 wells within a limited time, for the construction of a pipe line from the field to existing pipe lines in Missouri, for the exchange of crude for fuel oils, the latter for naval purposes, and for the delivery of Navy specified fuel oil at points designated by the Navy, from Guantanamo, Cuba, to the northeast corner of the United States. It provides for a line of credit under which, in exchange for the crude oil, ample storage for the fuel oil is to be provided without cash outlay by the Government at any point fixed by the Navy Department along the coast described. It provides that the lessee shall, at such or any other points, at its own expense and without obligation on the part of the Navy, provide gasoline, kerosene, lubricating, and cylinder oil at market prices. It provides prior right of transportation for all governmental oils from not only the Teapot Dome but from the Salt Creek field, even prior to the uses of the pipe line by the lessee. It makes the pipe line when built a common carrier for all Government oils. The pipe line already constructed with which the new pipe line will connect involved a present investment of $115,000,000, and this contract calls for an investment on the part of the lessee of not less than $26,000,000 additional. Furthermore, the contract will bring about immediate competition in the Salt Creek field and will add from 40 to 60 cents per barrel to the present prices of governmental royalty oils, now amounting to more than 5,000 barrels per day. This is secured by an option given the Government to sell royalty oil on basis of midcontinent prices, if and when desired.

The production from the Salt Creek field at present is about 40 per cent of the capacity of existing wells, which will be immediately raised to 100 per cent, yielding to the Government for reclamation, State, and Treasury purposes approximately 12,000 barrels of oil per day, with an added value thereto of from 40 to 60 cents per barrel; or, in other words, that added price over and above the amount which the Government and independent producers are now receiving.

It may be further stated that private claims were being asserted under the mining laws to a number of areas within the naval reserve. Before the contract was approved the Mammoth Oil Co. presented to the Secretary of the Interior deeds to the United States for outstanding claims of title of every character in the reserve.

For further information of the Senate we have to advise that naval reserve No. 3, Wyoming, was created by Executive order of April 30, 1915; that in the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 813), making appropriations for the naval service, etc., Congress provided:

"That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves as are or may become subject to the control and use by the United States for naval purposes, and on which there are no pending claims or applications for permits or leases under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 25 1920, etc., to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same, in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, or sell the oil and gas products thereof and those from all royalty oil from lands in naval reserves, for the benefit of the United States." * * *

At the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy, the President of the United States directed the Secretary of the Interior to take over the administration of lands in the naval reserves in consultation and cooperation with the Secretary of the Navy. The Interior Department and the Navy Department have been in close cooperation and have been endeavoring, as they saw it, to carry out the purposes for which these naval reserves were created, i. e., not the sale of oil for commercial or other purposes but the securing of a reserve of fuel oil for Navy purposes.

Respectfully,

EDWARD C. FINNEY,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.
EDWIN DENBY,
Secretary of the Navy.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say, Mr. President, that the scope of my resolution will include an investigation of that matter. It will also include an investigation of the opening by the present Secretary of the Interior of the Honolulu case, a case which will very much interest the Senate when it comes to go into it fully, a case which had been decided against the dummy operators who had been used as a basis of making the filings on this Government reserve. The case had been fully investigated and decided against the claimants. But it is a significant fact that when this administration came in the whole matter was reviewed and the Honolulu case reopened, a case which had been decided adversely to the claimants.

Filings had been made on the Government oil reserve, as shown by the undisputed testimony, by Chicago stockyard employees who thought they were signing, and testified that they thought they were signing, a petition with respect to an election, when they were in reality signing a document which was used as a basis for making an entry on that very Government naval oil reserve, and was the basis of the claim of the Honolulu Oil Co. to dispossess the Government of the oil there. That was thoroughly investigated. It was decided by Secretary of the Interior Payne as being without claim of right, and yet when this administration came in and the present Secretary of the Interior got an opportunity, he opened up the whole matter, reversed that decision, and turned those wells over to the Honolulu company.

I have drawn the resolution broad enough to investigate the whole subject. It has got to be investigated. There will be no peace and no quiet here until that is done. I hope that the resolution may be taken up to-morrow at the latest and acted upon.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, from what I have heard of the argument upon the resolution, I have thought at least that I should favor it, and I would also favor its being taken up and voted upon at such time as might be agreed upon without any prolonged debate. Hence I was a little surprised when the Senator from Wisconsin intimated that unless the chairman of the Committee on Finance was willing to allow the matter to be voted upon he would move to lay aside and displace the unfinished business—the tariff bill.

Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin and all other Senators will agree with me that, being in charge of the bill, I have at all times tried to be courteous and help Senators in morning business as much as it was possible to do so. Knowing that the tariff bill will take considerable time before the Senate, I think it very proper that from time to time I should yield for such pressing temporary business as may come up in the Senate.

However, I want it to be done, not through a threat but because it is right that it should be done. If I yield to have the Senator's resolution brought before the Senate, I want the Senator to feel that I have done so because I think it ought to be brought up and disposed of in order that we may get speedy action upon the investigation which he proposes, and that I am not doing it through a mere threat that the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. I think at least there is enough in what has been said to justify an investigation of the subject, even though I have no personal knowledge except what the Senator from Wisconsin has given us to-day and the few remarks made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. After the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has examined into the matter, possibly to-morrow or at any time we can have a vote immediately, I can ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of voting before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am not a subscriber to the doctrine that any Senator can "boss" legislation on the floor of the Senate. I know we have built up a system here by which the man who comes in as chairman of the committee which reports a bill is the only one who seems to be solely authorized to determine whether we are to have any consideration of other legislation for such period of time as he chooses to keep that bill before the Senate. The tariff bill will be before the Senate probably for two or three months. It will depend upon whether the Members of the Senate think the action of the Senate on the resolution, which I have asked, is more important than the uninterrupted consideration of the tariff bill, and not upon the consent of any one Senator on the floor. I merely say that in all courtesy and good feeling.

I do not subscribe to the doctrine to which I have referred. I think we have had too much of it here. I believe that if we had a more individual and less partisan responsibility for what takes place on the floor we would have a better service of the public interest than we have now.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, of course a settlement of the question which the Senator from Wisconsin has just been discussing is more important to the Nation than it is to any locality, but as suggesting its importance in relation to my own State I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in the regular type a letter which I have received from ex-Governor Brooks, of Wyoming.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, in 8-point type, as follows:

ROCKY MOUNTAIN OIL AND GAS PRODUCERS' ASSOCIATION,
Casper, Wyo., April 21, 1922.

Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KENDRICK: Your telegram of April 20 stating that you had written President Harding a letter requesting that the independent operators be given a hearing before final action was taken on the Teapot lease is received. In reply I wish to make a few comments on the contract made by the Government for the opening of this naval reserve. Yesterday's Denver Post published an Associated Press dispatch, giving details of this contract upon which I base my comments.

In the first place, I think a very clear distinction should be drawn between the naval oil reserve in California and the one in Wyoming. California is a great resourceful State, and, with its important harbors, derives many direct benefits from the Navy which, of course, is not the case in Wyoming. Our State has no precious minerals—only coal and oil. These, together with our forests and public lands, make up the bulk of our natural resources and, should the Government receive the bulk of the income from our natural resources, we are going to have a hard time to maintain the standard of our public schools, keep up our roads, and run the State as it should be run if people expect to make their homes here.

There is no similarity between the California oils and the oil in Teapot—one is black, the other light; one has an asphalt base and is suitable for fuel oil purposes, the other has a paraffin base, is high in gasoline content, lubricants, and other valuable ingredients, which makes the Teapot oil vastly more valuable than an equal quantity of California oil. One can be used for the Navy fuel oil; the other can not. One is near the ocean, the other in the mountains. In a few years the industries of this mountain section of America will be sadly in need of the products of our light oil right here at home; and at this distance from water transportation we can not take advantage of new discoveries in foreign lands.

The royalties in Teapot range from 12½ to 50 per cent. Now, in the sale of the Salt Creek edge lands at Douglas last year, the royalty was 33⅓ per cent, and the few acres sold brought a bonus of over $2,000,000. This contract completely reverses the former established rule of competitive bidding and fairness in disposing of one of the most valuable oil domes in the world.

I have already seemed to prove that there is no possibility of outside wells draining this Teapot Dome; and this Government drainage argument, which probably applies to California, falls flat here. The fact as stated that the Navy Department buys its gasoline and lubricating oil at market prices is no argument in favor of the Teapot lease, as the Navy, like everyone else, always had this privilege. The pipe line, which is to be built, will follow as a matter of course, but the opening of the Teapot dome has little influence in this, because the pipe line would have been built in any event.

Yesterday's dispatch states that the new scheme will immediately open the Salt Creek field and take all the production therefrom. This, of course, is ridiculous, because the present pipe lines to Salt Creek are carrying oil to full capacity and there is no way on earth to take more oil immediately, as additional pipe lines and trunk lines must first be laid. Neither will it affect present prices, which should be fully as high as the prices in the midcontinent field. This price adjustment will probably follow the investigation being made by the Bureau of Mines.

It is also stated that, through the increased sales of Salt Creek oil, a third competitor may be brought into the field. This sounds like another big joke. It intimates that we now have two competitors, when everyone knows that this Mammoth Co. has a joint parentage in both the Sinclair and Standard Oil Co. In fact, the Standard controls, and to-day openly acknowledges that it has an absolute monopoly in the production, transportation, refining, and marketing of all Wyoming oils; and instead of increasing competition by this lease, the action of the Government has simply strengthened the Standard Oil Co.'s hold in Wyoming.

* * * We now have a surplus of oil production in Salt Creek on top of the ground amounting to nearly 75,000 barrels per day. It seems incredible that they would try to open up a new pool at this time.

Owing to past action by the Government in handling unowned acreage in the Salt Creek field, we had every reason to believe that wherever additional acreage owned by the Government was disposed of it would be open on a competitive basis; and the Teapot contract seems like a radical departure and hardly fair to our oil industry here. Of course, all this is a very narrow view to take of it, for, above all, it is absolutely unfair and unjust to Wyoming as well as to all this intermountain country.

Very truly yours,

B. B. BROOKS.

WOODROW WILSON FOUNDATION.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on yesterday the Commissioner of Internal Revenue rendered an opinion in which he said and held that contributions made to the Woodrow Wilson Foundation are not deductible in making income-tax returns. That was quite surprising, I am sure, to all the people who read it, and it is quite humiliating to a great many. A few weeks before he had held that contributions made to the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association are deductible in income-tax returns, and shortly thereafter or just prior thereto he made a similar ruling that contributions made to the William McKinley Memorial Association fund are deductible in income-tax returns.

I desire to place in the RECORD the rulings of the commissioner in these three instances, in order that those who may read the RECORD can interpret the demarcation lines upon which the rulings are based. I ask that the rulings, as printed in the New York World of to-day, may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The rulings are as follows:

THE DIFFERENT RULINGS.

The Roosevelt Memorial Association, organized to erect and maintain monumental memorials to perpetuate the memory of Theodore Roosevelt, with an endowment fund to promote the development and application of the policies and ideals of Theodore Roosevelt for the benefit of the American people, is an educational organization within the provisions of section 231 (6) of the revenue act of 1918, and that contributions thereto are deductible in the manner and to the extent provided in section 214 (A) (11) of the same act.

D. H. BLAIR, Commissioner.

—

The McKinley Memorial Association, to perpetuate the name and achievements of William McKinley, late President of the United States of America, by erecting and maintaining in the city of Niles, in the State of Ohio, the place of his birth, a monument and memorial building, is exclusively educational and comes within the provisions of section 231 (6) of the revenue act of 1921. Consequently contributions to said fund are deductible in the individual returns of the donors in the manner and to the extent provided in section 214 (A) (11) of said act.

D. H. BLAIR, Commissioner.

—

The Woodrow Wilson Foundation was created by a committee of 250 representative men and women who have undertaken to endow it with a fund of $1,000,000 or more to be raised by public subscription.

The articles of incorporation provide that the purpose of this foundation is far beyond the thought of a tribute to the former President. While it is that, it is chiefly to perpetuate his ideals of democracy and human freedom, and as such it is to be both an inspiration and a reward to other men whose ambition it is to "enable the world to live more amply, with greater vision, with a finer spirit of hope and achievement."

The foundation will from time to time make awards—by a nationally constituted committee—to the individual or group that has rendered within a specific period meritorious service to democracy, public welfare, liberal thought, or peace through justice.

AMERICAN NOBEL PRIZES.

The fund is to be perpetual; awards are to be made only from the income; a part of the fund is to establish scholarships at some of the higher universities. In brief, America is to have its Nobel prizes.

The statement is made that the purpose of this organization is to avoid conflict with the civil and political thought of any portion of the citizenry of the country, as is often the case when a foundation or fund is organized in recognition of distinguished service of a certain individual, but that the purpose and activities of this foundation are exclusively educational.

Held that the foundation is civic and not educational; consequently contributions thereto are not deductible in the individual returns of donors in the manner provided in section 214 (A) (11) of the revenue act of 1921.

D. H. BLAIR, Commissioner.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, personally I can not see any difference, and the American people, irrespective of party affiliation, will not be able to see any in the rulings. It is a difference such as is found between "tweedledum" and "tweedledee." When contributions were sought for the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association, as well as the William McKinley Memorial Association, they came from Democrats as well as Republicans. I was delighted a few weeks ago, when I happended to be in the city of St. Paul, to see there before the gorgeous and magnificent capitol of that State the statue of John A. Johnson, a great statesman and ex-governor of Minnesota. I saw inscribed thereon a statement to the effect that the statue had been erected through $1 contributions of 100,000 contributors of that State. It was erected, not through contributions made solely by Democrats, but through contributions made by independents, Republicans, and Democrats alike. The same was true, as I said, as to the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association as well as the William McKinley Memorial Association. I have been delighted and I am sure everyone has been delighted to see so many Republicans contribute to the Woodrow Wilson Foundation fund. I noticed not long ago that ex-Postmaster General Will Hays had made quite a liberal and generous contribution. Thousands of others could be named. It is a most worthy, patriotic, and laudable cause. It seeks to preserve to generations yet unborn ideals that make for the general good and peace of mankind.

So, while the decision of Internal Revenue Commissioner Blair that contributions to the other memorial associations to perpetuate the ideals of those great men were deductible in making income-tax returns, and in the instance of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation fund they are not deductible—which was a decision based upon partisanship, which was puerile, which was picayunish, which was little, which was small—I am quite sure that it does not express the opinions and feelings of any Senator on the other side of the Chamber. When it is read and known by Republicans and independents and Democrats all over the country, they will be surprised and disgusted with the ruling.

So, because I believe it does not express the true sentiments of the American people and of the present administration, especially of Republican Senators and Republican Members of the House, in view of the ruling of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I am going to introduce a bill which will change the law so that contributions made to the Woodrow Wilson Foundation fund will be deductible in income-tax returns, the same as those made to the McKinley Memorial Association and the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association. If in the one case contributions are deductible, then surely there is no reason, either in justice or law, why the same policy should not be pursued in the other case. If Mr. Blair is correct in his ruling, then the law should be changed. It is that that I seek to do, unless this ruling is modified or changed.

The bill (S. 3523) to amend the revenue act of 1921 was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, on day before yesterday just at the close of the session the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. MCCUMBER] made some statements which I deem of the greatest importance. During the previous two days I had been endeavoring to obtain from the chairman of the Finance Committee and the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], another active member of the majority of that committee, information as to the basis for the tariff bill. The Senator from North Dakota in his last utterances upon the subject apparently attempted to clarify the situation. I desire to call attention to what he had to say.

He frankly said that there was one basis upon which the bill was prepared. In certain instances he said that the committee had before it the manufacturers in the United States and the importers, and that they furnished the committee very valuable information and aided in adjusting the rates. I read what he said regarding that:

> We have had those two opposing forces together, and in many instances we have fixed the rates of the bill in conformity to what each of them thought he could still do business under.

That in itself is an important statement. There is evidently no scientific foundation for tariff rates upon such a basis as that. We get the importers together; we get manufacturers together; and we let them come to an agreement as to what the rates of duty shall be. That, as I have said, is a decided departure from anything hitherto announced in all tariff legislation; and I should be very much interested in knowing how that is going to appeal to the citizens of this country. The importers bring into the country certain specific commodities; the manufacturers produce certain other articles of the same class. Take cutlery, for instance. There are some classes of cutlery which are imported. There is no comparison between the imported article and the domestic manufactured article. That was made apparent to us by the manufacturers of cutlery who are also importers, and there are a number of them in this country. I suppose in that case, where the manufacturers produced certain lines of cutlery and imported certain other lines, that those manufacturers must have gotten together and agreed upon the rate of duty which should be imposed upon certain lines of cutlery. The same thing may be said of other articles.

That, to my mind, is a matter that deserves very serious consideration. I should like to know, in the individual cases, which one of those parties had the greater influence with the Finance Committee; whether the manufacturer had the greater influence or the importer had the greater influence. Certainly in all cases they did not agree. Just recently I have been talking with gentlemen who are manufacturers and also importers, and they are very much dissatisfied with some of the rates which are fixed in this bill. There, however, is a clearly defined statement of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that as to certain articles in this bill—how extensive the number we do not know—the importers and the manufacturers got together and agreed as to the rates which should be imposed under the bill; in other words, the Finance Committee surrendered its right, and it is asking the Senate to surrender its right, to fix the tariff rates, to surrender the right to exercise the great power of taxation and impose taxes upon the people of this country simply because interested parties get together and agree upon the rates.

The distinguished Senator admits, however, that the whole bill was not prepared in that way; and while he says that in many instances that occurred, yet he does not advance that as the real foundation for the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Ordinarily I do not like to interfere with a Senator's address, no matter how unfair he appears to be in that address; but when the Senator from New Mexico again and again makes a statement for which there is no foundation, while I am in the Chamber, I feel that sometimes I must be called upon even in his time to reply to him.

The Senator from North Dakota has never said that any rate which is found in the pending bill was made by the importer and the manufacturer getting together. What the Senator from North Dakota said, or, at least, what he intended to say, was in answer to a statement made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] indicating that the rates were all fixed and based upon testimony that was given by manufacturers. In reply to that, I said, or, at least, intended to say, that in many instances the rates which we fixed agreed with what both the importer and the exporter felt was about right. They did not fix the rates; the Committee on Finance made the rates; but the fact that they agreed, the importers, that they could import under the rates, and the manufacturers that they could still do business in the United States under the rates, caused us to feel that the rates were somewhere near right. We justified ourselves in thinking that we were not far away from the right and that the rates were fairly correct when the importer and the manufacturer agreed that they could do business under the rates.

The Senator from North Dakota has not said at any time or intimated at any time in any way, shape, or manner that any agreement made between the importers and the manufacturers fixed the rates of duty for the Committee on Finance. What the manufacturer agreed was right would naturally have some influence on the committee and what the importer agreed was about right would also naturally have some influence; but in all instances the committee did the best it could in applying a rate which it thought was fair both to the manufacturer and the importer. I am surprised that the Senator from New Mexico should make this studied effort right along in his argument to misinterpret the statements which have been made.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should not have said anything on this subject in the absence of the Senator from North Dakota, because if I am wrong about what I say I am sure he will be glad to correct me. It may be that I stated the proposition in an inverse way, but I should like to know how the Senator from North Dakota interprets the language of the statement which I read a while ago, and, in order to refresh his recollection, I desire to read it again. First, however, I will read a little further from his statement. The Senator did complain that there had been some insinuation that the committee had called before it only the manufacturers. I did not feel that that criticism as to anything I had said was justified, but we will let that go. After reciting that the committee had had not only the manufacturers but the importers before them, the Senator said:

> I will admit that men are all selfish; that the American manufacturer would like to get as high a protection as he possibly can. I will also admit that in the selfishness of his desires the foreign importer would like to import everything into this country as cheaply as he can.

Now, here comes the sentence which I read a while ago:

> We have had those two opposing forces together, and in many instances we have fixed the rates of the bill in conformity to what each of them thought he could still do business under.

Of course, I did not mean to infer that those people signed the report of the majority of the Finance Committee or that they actually wrote it, but when the Senator from North Dakota says that the committee fixed the rates "in conformity to what each of them thought he could still do business under," I should like to know where the difference appears. Is that not, in effect, allowing these people to suggest the rates which the Finance Committee adopted, for the Senator says that they fixed the rates in conformity with the understanding between the importers and the exporters? I therefore respectfully submit the question as to the foundation for my remarks to the judgment of the Senate.

However, as I have said, that is not the most important feature of the statement of the Senator from North Dakota to which I desire to call attention.

The Senator from North Dakota further said:

> I have stated again and again—the Senator may conscientiously differ from me in that respect—that we have tried to make the tariff rates measure the difference between what we regarded as the cost of production at home and the cost of production elsewhere, where it was possible to obtain that cost of production. In very few instances, however, can we obtain the actual cost of production in a foreign country. Therefore, we must assume that the goods are sold in the foreign country for a price which represents the cost of production, plus a reasonable return for the manufacturer. That is the basis on which we have always levied our duties in the past, because it is the only substantial basis which we can get. It is also, I think, equally true—and I believe we can establish the fact in most cases—that the wholesale selling price in the United States represents the cost of production, plus a reasonable return upon the investment and upon the cost of manufacture. We could not in all cases obtain the actual cost of production in the United States, but in many instances we had figures showing exactly what it cost to produce a given article by different manufacturers, and from that evidence and from the information obtained as to conditions abroad we made up our schedules.

Mr. President, that statement is very broad and comprehensive. It lays down the principle upon which the bill is founded, and it also advises us as to the source of information for the application of the principle. What the majority of the committee seek to arrive at is the cost of production abroad and the cost of production in the United States, and to adjust rates in accordance with that difference and thus equalize the costs in such a manner as would bring about an equilibrium or competition in the United States.

That is a very beautiful picture. It is very attractive to many people. It conforms absolutely to many statements of people as to what a tariff bill should do. In order to find out to what extent that principle has been applied to this bill, it will be necessary for us to gain a little further information.

There are many articles coming into the United States of a similar grade, under the same paragraph in this bill, from different countries. The prices vary; and I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota what prices were taken into consideration in ascertaining the prices in the foreign countries?

The Senator says that the majority of the committee obtained the information as to the cost of production in the foreign countries by knowing the price. They assumed that the price at which the article is sold in the foreign country is the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. We will take some articles that are imported. They come from England, they come from Germany, they come from France. The prices at which those articles are sold in the foreign countries differ very materially; and I should like to know from what country came the prices which were used by the majority of the Finance Committee in framing this bill. Did the Senator take English prices, German prices, French prices, Japanese prices, or from what country did the Senator obtain his prices as to the cost of production abroad? Will the Senator enlighten us on that subject?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. President, the Senator understands the rules of trade well enough to know the impossibility of importations coming in to any great extent from two countries where there is a very material difference in the cost of production in the two countries. In most of those instances the Senator will find that if an article has been coming from Great Britain, and Germany gets into the field on the comparable article and produces and imports at a very low price, lower than the British can manufacture and import that article, the importations cease coming in from Great Britain. They come in from Germany. Likewise, if a line of goods which have heretofore come in from Germany at a reasonably low cost are being produced in Japan at a much lower rate of cost, the Japanese will drive the Germans out of the market. So, if the Senator looks over the entire list of importations and finds a certain class of importations coming into this country from Germany in considerable quantities, he will find that the same articles are not coming in from Great Britain in any great quantities, and so of the different countries. Therefore there is not as much difficulty as might appear upon the face of the matter in ascertaining and taking the standard of the valuation.

We look at these articles. Where do they come from? Why, the great bulk of them come from Great Britain or France or Germany or Japan or China, and the trade that one country has the other country has very little of.

There are certain woolen and cotton goods, for instance, that are produced in Great Britain and also in Germany. When we analyze them carefully we find that one is far superior to the other, and while it may go under the same name it will bring a considerably higher price. Therefore Great Britain still imports woolen fabrics into the United States because of their superior quality. Before the war Germany took from Great Britain practically entirely the importation of hosiery, and to a great extent the importation of gloves, and so forth; and instead, then, of going to Great Britain to get the cost price we go to Germany, and we go to India for things that come from India.

Ordinarily, however, two countries do not import comparable articles at the same time. One country drives the other out of the market; and, of course, in many instances here we have had to make the rates such that they will practically exclude entirely the British manufacturer. We base the rate upon the price in the country from which the greatest amount of goods comes.

That is as nearly as I can explain the matter to the Senator. I sometimes have some difficulty in making my explanations, because I think I sometimes find the Senator hardly fair in his reply to what I attempt to make clear.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I certainly disclaim any intention to be unfair. The Senator from North Dakota undoubtedly assumes that his judgment upon that subject is not subject to criticism or investigation; but I desire to assure the Senator from North Dakota now that not only have I attempted to be fair in my statements but every time I have made a statement I have called upon the Senator from North Dakota to corroborate what I have said, and to offer any criticism that he might have to make. In all kindness and good will toward the distinguished Senator, I recognize that he is overworked, that his patience may not be all that one would expect on the floor of the Senate in the dealings of one Senator with another, and I shall make allowances for any such condition or frame of mind, and still believe that the Senator from North Dakota does not really intend to go beyond the rules of propriety which should govern in discussions of this sort.

I have not at any time charged that the distinguished Senator from North Dakota was unfair in any of his criticisms of what I have said, and I have accepted all of his castigations in perfectly good humor; and I wish to assure the distinguished Senator, regardless of what he may have to say, that I shall endeavor to preserve my good humor during this discussion.

Coming to what the Senator has just said, I wish to analyze the statements which he has made regarding the duties on these different articles, and to apply in a concrete way what he has said to some of the paragraphs of this bill, and to one of them in particular. I do not want to consume any unnecessary time. We are simply seeking enlightenment upon this subject.

Paragraph 212 of this bill relates to earthenware, which comes in under different designations, and reads as follows:

> Earthenware and crockery ware composed of a nonvitrified absorbent body, including white granite and semiporcelain earthenware, and cream-colored ware, and stoneware, including clock cases with or without movements, pill tiles, plaques, ornaments, toys, charms, vases, statues, statuettes, mugs, cups, steins, lamps, and all other articles composed wholly or in chief value of such ware; plain white, plain yellow, plain brown, plain red, or plain black, not painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, ornamented, or decorated in any manner, and manufactures in chief value of such ware not specially provided for, 45 per cent ad valorem; painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, ornamented, or decorated in any manner, and manufactures in chief value of such ware, not specially provided for, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Turning to the so-called Reynolds report, which contains the prices of these various articles, which were obtained last fall at the expense of $100,000 for the majority of the Finance Committee, I find that articles embraced in that paragraph come into the United States from England, Holland, Germany, Czechoslovakia, France, and Japan, and a number of articles included under that one schedule come into the United States from every one of those countries.

On looking into the prices, I find that they vary materially for the different countries. Let us take ordinary chinaware, decorated, and so forth, which would come within paragraph 212, which I have just read. That comes from China, from France, from Italy, from Holland, from England, from Germany, from Czechoslovakia, and all comes within the identical paragraph, and precisely the same rate is fixed for each commodity. The Senator knows that there is a vast difference in the cost of these commodities, and he knows that those articles are coming here now from each one of those countries, and it is beside the point, in my judgment, for Senators to say that in framing this bill they fixed on the tariff rate for each article by taking into consideration only the country from which the article was exported in greatest quantity.

I should like to know, in regard to that schedule, how the Senator arrived at his rate. Did he simply ascertain the country whence the largest amount came or did he ascertain the country which was exporting the article at the lowest price? I would like to have the Senator say whether or not some country was selected and the prices ascertained as a basis for the rates levied in this bill. I assume that is so, from what the Senator has just said to us. His argument is that the country which produces at the lowest cost will do the most exporting, and I think that is a sound proposition; but for fear the Senator may claim that I am treating him unfairly again about this matter, I should like to have him confirm once more that position. Is it the statement of the Senator that the Finance Committee selected the country exporting at the lowest price and from the prices in that country fixed the rates under this bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will examine the Reynolds report, which, of course, was before the committee at all times, and will take the earthenware schedule, for instance, he will find that that is being imported from England; that the earthenware carries a certain price; and that it has a certain designation in the trade. He will find that earthenware may be coming from France at a different price or from Czechoslovakia at still a different price, but I think upon a close investigation he will find that the article manufactured in one country differs from the article manufactured in another country. What is true of earthenware is true of chinaware. The articles made in different countries are not exactly the same. We may have an article in the United States comparable to each one of these, but, as a rule, they are not comparable with each other.

In making a designation we follow, for the most part, descriptions which have grown up through a hundred years and more of tariff legislation, modified from time to time to meet a new character of goods. We describe them carefully. We give upon the particular description a rate which we think will be a fair rate applied to that specifically named article.

Of course, we can not designate an article as coming from Germany, or from France, or China, or Japan, or Great Britain. We describe the article. It so happens that, in our descriptions, those that would come under one description are being imported from Germany, those coming under another description from Great Britain, those under still another description possibly from Japan or China, and we apply upon the particular article the rate which we think is proper.

Where it so happens, as I have already stated, that from some countries where the production cost is high the articles can not get in those countries necessarily have to suffer because of that description. It may be true, and undoubtedly is, that in the case of some lines of cutlery, in order to protect against the manufactures in one country, we will put the rate so high that comparable articles can not be imported from Great Britain, for instance, on account of the higher cost. The only rule we have followed is to take the particular article coming in, not only in the greatest quantity but coming in from a country which supplies that particular character of commodity, and put a duty upon it which will measure the difference, as I have suggested, between the cost of production or the selling price in the foreign country and the cost of production or the selling price in the United States.

You can not get a standard that is more specific than that. It has always been the basis of our tariffs. We have had to figure upon the foreign value heretofore, and while that foreign value may not be in exact relation to foreign cost, it is generally so close and so definite that we have regarded it through more than a century as being the safest standard. I can not make it clearer than that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think the Senator has done the best he could, and I am willing to accept his reply in that spirit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator state at this point how the tariff in the pending bill on earthenware compares with the tariff in existing law?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There has been no compilation of that kind of information. I am very sorry that the majority of the committee did not prepare just such a table covering the entire bill. The minority members of the committee have asked the Tariff Commission to prepare a table which will show just that. I think it is highly important, in the consideration of this bill, to have the various rates in front of us, in convenient form, for reference and for comparison.

I can answer the Senator's question as to this particular paragraph, paragraph 212. The bill now under consideration places the duty upon such articles as plain white, plain yellow, plain brown, plain red, or plain black, not painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, ornamented, or decorated in any manner, and manufactures in chief value of such ware not specially provided for, at 45 per cent ad valorem; and if painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, ornamented, or decorated in any manner the rate is 50 per cent ad valorem.

The rate in the present law is fixed in almost identical language as to description. I will read it, however, because there are some few changes in it, although I do not think it is changed in any essential particular. It is paragraph 79 of the act of 1913, and reads as follows:

79. Earthenware and crockery ware composed of a nonvitrified absorbent body, including white granite and semiporcelain earthenware, and cream-colored ware, and stoneware, including clock cases with or without movements, pill tiles, plaques, ornaments, toys, charms, vases, statues, statuettes, mugs, cups, steins, lamps, and all other articles composed wholly or in chief value of such ware; if plain white, plain yellow, plain brown, plain red, or plain black, not painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, ornamented, or decorated in any manner, and manufactures in chief value of such ware not specially provided for in this section, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Under the pending bill it is increased to 45 per cent ad valorem. The next clause is as follows:

if painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, or ornamented or decorated in any manner, and manufactures in chief value of such ware not specially provided for in this section, 40 per cent ad valorem.

That is the present law, and it is increased to 50 per cent under the pending bill. I believe that the description is identical, although I have had no opportunity to make a definite comparison.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The plain ware has gone up from 35 to 45 and the decorated ware from 40 to 50. Can the Senator state on what theory that advance has been made?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is what I hope to find out before I conclude the discussion of the subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I notice in the statistics of recent imports that the imports, instead of increasing at the present time, are falling off.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think the Senator is quite right about that, and he is correctly informed on the subject. That is my own information.

The Senator from North Dakota will observe that in this paragraph there are various classes of articles put in the same paragraph and under the same rate of duty. I will ask the Senator if he believes that the prices of all these articles in the foreign countries are the same.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, Mr. President, they would not be the same, but where there are ad valorem duties, necessarily, of course, you get the same ratio, no matter what the cost is.

As to the different countries, take, for instance, earthenware. Most of that comes from Great Britain and Holland. The chinaware which is imported into this country comes mostly from Germany, and it verifies what I stated to the Senator a short time ago, that where one country imports in any great quantity the other country ceases to be a competitor. So while Germany has been the great manufacturer of chinaware, Great Britain, which in times gone by furnished practically three-fourths of the chinaware used in the United States, is now exporting scarcely none of it. The rate of duty where it is ad valorem is, of course, according to its value, and where we could not get a description that would possibly cover everything, we followed the rule we were compelled to follow, of putting all the others in an ad valorem basket clause.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator understands all about the effect of an ad valorem tax, and the Senator recognizes that the higher the price of the article the greater the tax. In this schedule there is included decorated ware of every description if it is made out of earth. The Senator knows that such ware comes to this country from the different countries which I have named. He knows that the prices of those shipments will vary from a small percentage to a very high percentage.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly we must realize that, but how would the Senator meet it? Here is an article of decorated chinaware which may contain a little leaf. Another may contain a large gold band, and it may be profuse in decoration. We can not put any line of demarcation between the thousands of classes. One may cost ten times as much as the other. All we can do is to give the ad valorem duty that we think will be right, and if the one costs ten times as much as the other, of course the duty will be ten times as much. That is the rule which was followed in the Underwood tariff law, and it is followed in this proposed law. It is the only rule which can be applied. The only difference between the two lies in the difference in the rates.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I realize the difficulty which anyone would have in putting a tariff upon earthenware, but the point which I was trying to test was the principle which actuated the Finance Committee in fixing these schedules. The Senator from North Dakota has dwelt upon the difficulty and was perfectly justified in doing that, but does that relieve the situation? Does that throw any light upon the preparation of the bill?

The Senator stated in his remarks day before yesterday that the majority members of the Finance Committee undertook to fix a tariff based upon the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. He also stated that they ascertained the cost of production abroad from the prices at which those articles were sold. It now develops that under the same rates are included a variety of articles coming from different countries, of different costs, of different prices, and we find here one blanket rate for them all. I have dwelt upon this for the purpose of getting light upon the basis upon which the bill is founded. Instead of getting much light from the discussion here, it seems to me that the atmosphere is becoming more dense.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. With pleasure.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would like to ask the Senator how he would levy a rate of duty upon decorated chinaware. I am not asking what rate he would put upon it, but if he were to levy a rate of duty, how would he base that levy? If he would take any other system than that which is in the Underwood law and that which is in the present bill, what method would he adopt?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sorry that in the deliberations of the majority of the Finance Committee I was not invited to participate in fixing the rates under the bill. It seems to me it comes rather late now, after the bill has been presented to the Senate, to call upon me as a minority member of the Finance Committee to give my views upon the subject.

However, I agree that the Senator and his colleagues in the committee were in much trouble over this matter, and I am willing to accord them the view that they did the best they could from their point of view. What I am trying to get at, however, is the point of view. I am not impugning the motives of anyone. I am willing to accord them the belief that they have done the best they knew how, but I am very anxious and I think the country is anxious to know the view of the majority members of the committee. It seems to me now, when the Senator from North Dakota is calling attention to the very serious difficulties under which he labored, that he got far afield from his general proposition that the bill was framed upon the basis of the difference of cost in production in the United States and the cost abroad.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why does the Senator say that in reference to the decorated chinaware? Suppose we come to the conclusion that it costs to manufacture and put upon the market the undecorated chinaware, say, 40 per cent more in the United States than it does in Germany. Suppose we come to the conclusion that as to the decorated chinaware it costs on the average about 50 per cent more, because of the higher cost of American labor, the higher expense for raw materials, and so forth, to manufacture decorated chinaware in this country over and above what it costs in Germany. Then if we have in that instance selected 50 per cent to be the tariff rate, we have measured the difference, have we not?

We could not base it properly upon any other theory. Of course, we could base it upon the weight, or something else, but that would not be fair. There is only one method of levying duties of that kind and that is the ad valorem method. We can not make it a specific duty. I have stated that I think the ad valorem duty which we have given approximately measures the difference between the foreign cost and the American cost.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator has assumed that the American cost is a fixed and known quantity, and I think that is what he must assume in the preparation of a bill of this sort. He must ascertain the American cost if he attempts in any degree to found the bill upon the principle which he has announced.

But there is included in this one paragraph all grades of plain and decorated earthenware. The cost in this country being fixed, the cost in the foreign country not being the same, varying to an extreme extent in many cases, then it does seem to me that the Senator can no longer say that they had fixed the rate for the purpose of equalizing the difference in cost between this country and the foreign country.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. There has never been a bill, apparently, formulated in the history of this country that has not had foreign valuations as a basis. Naturally there will be fluctuations in prices in foreign countries and in this country. But the bills have been formulated, as is this bill, on the theory that prices in the United States will be relatively permanent and therefore we can take the American value and on that basis measure the difference in the cost of construction or production between what we produce in this country and what is produced of like character in a foreign country. Values may be shifted, yet there is enough of permanency about it to establish fairly the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, and by that yardstick measure the duty to be levied on that particular item.

Now, the foreign valuation has been the rule in the formulation of all tariff measures, whether they were protective or otherwise. What amendment does the Senator propose to this paragraph, and if he is not going to propose an amendment to it, why debate it? What is the point, will the Senator permit me to ask him? Does he propose some substitute for this system; and if so, what is it? How would he change this method of ascertaining the valuation abroad and, from the protective standpoint, if he can imagine himself over on that side of the proposition for a while, how else would he go about it to find the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am very glad to answer the Senator, and in my answer I want to call to the attention of the Senator from Indiana some very fundamental principles which ought to govern all legislation.

In the construction of any statute by a court, what does the court do? It first finds out what the situation was before the law was passed. It ascertains the evil which existed, and then it tries to get from the statute the remedy which was proposed. I submit that on this very paragraph the burden is upon the Senator from Indiana, as a member of the majority of the Finance Committee, to tell us what the evil is under the existing law. Why should the existing law be changed? Then it is for him to bring forward a certain and definite remedy for any evil, if such is found.

Look into the trade regarding this particular item or this paragraph upon earthenware. We do not find the American market being swamped with earthenware from foreign countries. We find articles of decorated earthenware from England, from France, from Japan, from Germany, selling in the American market at higher prices than the domestic articles.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator really wants to know why the duty is placed in the bill, perhaps I could call his attention to a few reasons. But I do not want to take the Senator's time, because I know he is anxious to speak.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I hope to correct the Senator. I am anxious to have all the light upon the bill that I possibly can. If the Senator from Utah can give us any light, I am more than willing and anxious to yield to him.

Mr. SMOOT. I am sure that any light we may be able to give as to this schedule or upon any other schedule will not be satisfactory to the Senator, but I am going to say to the Senator that this is what the Tariff Commission found as to the difference in the making of china between wages in this country and those abroad:

The average labor cost per unit of product in the American vitreous china potteries was very much greater than in American earthenware potteries, owing to the slower processes of manufacture and the difficulty in firing and in manipulating the material in all stages. The American vitreous china labor cost was 73.3 per cent higher than in American earthenware—

This comparison shows the reason for difference in the rate imposed on the two classes of this article—

182.3 per cent higher than in Austrian china, and 314 per cent higher than in German china potteries.

Does the Senator think that the rates we have placed in this bill now afford a protection more than equal to the difference between the cost of labor in producing these goods in the respective countries? The testimony showed beyond a question of doubt that the difference in the labor costs alone between this country and Germany was 314 per cent. Some protection has got to be given or else the industry can not live in America.

The average wage per full-time week of jiggermen (typical skilled workingmen) was $23.87 in American vitreous china potteries, $6.65 in German, and $6.37 in Austrian china potteries.

I could go on and give the Senator the percentages involved in those figures, but they run all the way from 183 per cent to over 400 per cent. I am sure the Senator knows that the only way to meet that difference is by a protective tariff, for it can not be met in any other way. The plan of imposing the duties proposed in this bill is exactly the same as it was in the Payne-Aldrich bill, in the Underwood-Simmons bill, and in every other bill which has been framed from the time our first tariff law was put upon the statute books.

I repeat, the situation can not be met in any other way unless we should enact a tariff for revenue only law, such as Germany has. Germany imposes a duty on earthenware and chinaware, but it is a specific duty and not an ad valorem duty, as German duties are nearly all specific. In other words, a set of imported china which in this country will cost $300 comes in on an ad valorem rate. That same set, if made in this country or any other country and exported to Germany, would pay so much per pound, and that duty at so much per pound would apply to a $300 set of china as it would if it were the commonest set of china selling for only $10. The $300 set of china would not pay nearly as much as would the ordinary $10 set, because the $10 set would weigh more than would the $300 set.

We are not going to frame any kind of a tariff like that in this country, and I do not believe the Senator would ever vote for such a tariff. I think if he had been called in when the majority of the committee were fixing the tariff rates he would have been one of the Senators who if such a proposition as that had been made would have said, "No; it can not be."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico permit me to ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know what is the matter with the present rate under the existing law?

Mr. SMOOT. The present rate is not high enough to protect the American industry under conditions existing in the world to-day. That is the reason for the proposed new rate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have been looking at the figures as to our imports of earthenware, and find that they are at a rate now of 10 cents per capita a year; that is, for 100,000,000 people we are only importing about $12,000,000 of earthenware a year. The American people are certainly consuming a great deal more than that, and where are they getting it? They must be getting it from American factories.

Mr. SMOOT. I will frankly say, Mr. President, that these particular rates were put into this bill because of the very fact that the committee saw invoices of these goods coming from Austria and from Germany, which made it apparent that even the rates in the bill will not be protective.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not a fact, however, that our imports of earthenware are falling off?

Mr. SMOOT. No; they are not falling off, nor will they fall off from now on.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me read the figures to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I say they will not fall off from now on.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I say that they have been falling off. The last figures which I have been able to get are for the eight months ending with February last, and the figures for the eight months ending with February of this year show imports of $760,000 less than for the eight months ending with February of last year.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not the total of the different classifications.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is all that I have been able to find.

Mr. SMOOT. That is only one particular item; but if the Senator will examine the figures as to all the other classifications, then he will see that there has not been such a falling off as he has indicated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The publication before me says that the imports of decorated and ornamented, both of which are in one paragraph, are approximately the same for this year as last year, there being a slight falling off, and that the imports of the other kind, meaning the plain, have fallen off about the same amount, $500,000. So that the last statistics we have show that the imports of earthenware are actually falling off, and that for a whole year the imports only amounted to 10 cents per capita for the people of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to proceed with the bill, rather than to indulge in general discussion, until we reach some particular schedule which it is desired to discuss. Then, we will put figures into the RECORD, and I am hopeful when that time comes we can have Senators here to listen to what we have to say. That is one reason why so far I have not undertaken to discuss a single solitary schedule of the bill. I have spoken upon the administrative features of the measure, and that is all; but when we reach the schedules I am perfectly willing, so far as I can do so, to give any information to the Senate as to the reason actuating the committee in fixing the rates found in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was very much interested in one statement made by the Senator from Utah, because it was so wholly inconsistent with all the facts, as I have understood them in connection with the making of this bill and the fixing of its rates. The Senator stated, as I understood him, that the rates in this bill were based upon the difference between the labor and material costs in this country and those abroad. Does the Senator say that is the basis upon which the committee have fixed these rates?

Mr. SMOOT. That is only one of the elements that enter into the rates as they have been fixed, but it is a very material element.

Mr. SIMMONS. Did the Senator's committee make any serious effort to ascertain the present difference between the labor cost here and the labor cost abroad or the present difference between material costs here and similar costs abroad?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there was hardly a witness who appeared before the committee who did not testify as to the difference between the wage scales of this country and those abroad. I think the Senator attended a good many of the meetings where that happended. I think he was present when this very schedule was under consideration, and when the labor representative who had just come from Germany testified before the committee as to the scale of wages paid in that country.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, Mr. President, there was considerable testimony before the committee as to the low wages paid in Germany and Japan, and probably in some other countries, but there was before the committee no testimony of any consequence at all as to the production costs of the various items that are in this bill in other countries as compared with the production costs in this country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator to wait for a moment. The outcry which has led to the rates which have been fixed in this bill has been to the effect that labor in Germany and in Japan and in China were paid very much less than it is here. Everybody knows, Mr. President, that labor does not constitute the whole of the production cost; everybody knows that the efficiency of labor has as much to do with that cost as has the daily wage paid, and the testimony before the committee on this point related entirely and exclusively to the wages paid and not to the wage cost of production.

I undertake to say that there is not a duty in this bill that is imposed upon a finding based upon any adequate testimony as to the difference between the production costs here and abroad.

So far as wages are concerned, they may be low relatively in some countries as compared with wages in the United States; but I make the assertion here and now—and the statistics will abundantly corroborate and support the statement—that the relative cost of labor in Germany, in China, and in Japan to-day is greater than it was before the war, greater than it was when the Payne-Aldrich bill was framed, and greater than it was when the Underwood bill was framed. While wages now may be low relatively, they are not so low as they were at the time those bills were framed and enacted.

However, Mr. President, material costs in countries like Germany and others of our European competitors, which have to import practically all of their essential raw materials from other countries, are enormously higher, relatively, than their material costs were before the war. Yet the committee in all of its deliberations made no effort in the examination of witnesses to get the definite facts upon which they might ascertain with any degree of certainty the difference in the production costs, either of labor or of material, as compared with those costs in this country.

I assert that there is not a particle of foundation for the contention that the rates in this bill were based, or were intended to be based, upon the difference between labor costs or material costs here and abroad. The rates in the bill are fixed upon an entirely different principle, and the bill itself shows that they were ascertained and were fixed upon a different principle.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply repeat that the rates are based upon not one reason but several reasons, and among those reasons is the difference between the wage scale of this country and the wage scales of foreign lands.

The Senator undertakes to inform us that labor is not the only element entering into the cost of making goods. That is a remarkable statement to make. I did not know that there was a soul living on the earth who even thought that it was. But, Mr. President, if the rates that we have in this bill were based only upon labor they would be double and treble what they are, because I say now, taking this bill schedule by schedule, and taking the labor cost of producing cotton goods or any other commodity—laces or silks, or anything that is made upon a power-driven machine—England and Germany and all other countries have the same kind of machines, run by the same kind of power, and one person handles the same number of machines in each country, and the machines run at the same number of revolutions, and the warps are the same, and the filling is the same, and the shuttles run at the same speed, and they can make just as many yards in each of those countries as can be made in the United States upon each machine.

Mr. SIMMONS. And therefore, Mr. President, the English labor cost of cotton goods to-day is as high as the American cost.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can not take both sides of the question. He can not say that no rate is needed because of the fact that they do not produce in a foreign country cheaper than we do, and at the same time say that the efficiency of the labor and the ultimate unit value of the labor is higher in the United States than in any other country. It will not work. The Senator must take one horn or the other of the dilemma.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do take one horn of the dilemma. When I referred to the efficiency of labor I was speaking with reference to Japan, China, and Germany, where the committee have said that there was a great difference.

The Senator is speaking now, however, about the production in an Anglo-Saxon country, where during the war the wages of labor rose as high as they were in America, and where, by reason of the determination of the labor of Great Britain to maintain their war prices and standards, just as we have had the same determination on the part of labor in this country, they have been enabled, through their unions and their organizations, to maintain their war prices at as high a level as our own laborers have been able to maintain their war prices, and have been just as effective in their resistance to reductions of those prices as our laborers have been; and to-day the laborers in the great cotton factories of Great Britain are commanding just as high a scale of wages as is paid in the factories of this country. I have not understood that that has been seriously questioned in the committee, but I have understood that in the committee, in the case of Germany and Japan, they have said that there was a vast difference; and I was simply answering the condition that confronted me growing out of my connection and experience and observation with reference to the hearings in this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is not going to get out from this discussion by referring simply to England. The Senator from Utah mentioned Germany particularly. When the Senator from North Carolina says that the wage scale in England or in Germany during the war was the same as the wage scale in this country, I want him to consider the matter well and make an investigation, and I think he will correct that statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say "Germany." I said "Great Britain."

Mr. SMOOT. I will say, then, in England at any time during the war, or to-day, at this very minute. Why, Mr. President, what is England doing against Germany? Is she undertaking to protect her industries against the invasion of Germany and Austria and the Balkan States and Japan by a small duty? No, Mr. President. England says that certain of the goods of those countries shall be embargoed.

Does the Senator know how many of these safeguarding of industry acts have been passed in England since the armistice was signed? Does he know what goods they cover, and does he know that there is not any question of rates, but it is a question of Germany not being permitted to ship the goods into England? Why, England has gone so far as to say that all her key industries, so designated by her legislators, shall be protected not by a rate, but by an embargo.

Never in the history of this world were conditions so unsettled as they are to-day; and I frankly stated here upon the floor of the Senate last Monday that I did not know whether the rates that are carried in this bill would fully protect the industries of this country or not. That is why I wanted to give to the President the power to increase the rates, or, if they are too high, to decrease them. I hope it will not be long before conditions in the world will become normal again. They are far, far from it to-day.

Mr. President, I am not asking for extra-high protection. I want a rate of protection that at least will give American laboring men and American industries a chance to live against their foreign competitors.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield further.

Mr. SMOOT. I trust the Senator will pardon me for taking the time that I did.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am very glad to get light on this bill from any source.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that if we can only get down to the items, and Senators want light upon each item, I think it will be given at the time. I apologize to the Senator for being led off by a statement which was made by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there is only one statement that the Senator has made to which I desire to reply. The Senator says that he wants only adequate protection against our competitors, especially in the European markets, for he was discussing the European markets.

Mr. SMOOT. The German markets.

Mr. SIMMONS. The German markets, the English markets, all the European markets, were under discussion by the Senator. He wants a tariff rate high enough to protect the domestic manufacturer of this country against the products of Europe. He thinks that at this time the rates of the present law are not sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that in the year 1921, under the rates of the present law, which are not half as high as the rates in the bill that we are asked to pass, the total importations from all countries in Europe were less than the total importations from Europe during the first year of the Payne-Aldrich Act; they were less than the importations from Europe during the second year of the Payne-Aldrich Act; they were $136,000,000 less than the imports from Europe during the third year of the Payne-Aldrich Act; and they were a round hundred million dollars less from all the countries of Europe last year under the rates of the present act than they were during the last year of the Payne-Aldrich Act. I am speaking now of calendar years.

In that condition, Mr. President, I say, first, that there is no foundation for the statement of the Senator from Utah that this market place to-day, under the rates of the existing law, is being flooded with European products. There is no foundation for his statement that this market place needs twice the rates of the present law in order to protect itself against European importations; and the conclusive evidence of that is contained in the facts with reference to importations that I have just related.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate any longer, but what I said was on the basis of the daily statements issued by the United States Treasury, and I think I can depend upon those statements as to the amount of duty that we collect. I do not think any goods come into the country, if they are dutiable, but that the Treasury knows about them, and I do not think there is a cent of duty ever paid but that it is reported; and it is upon those figures that I make my statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the figures upon which I make my statement are contained in the monthly summary of imports and exports of domestic and foreign merchandise by countries, issued by the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, in Secretary Hoover's Department of Commerce, and I want to read that statement.

In the calendar year 1920 the imports from all Europe were $1,227,000,000—very high—but in the calendar year 1921 the imports from all Europe had fallen to $764,000,000. During the first year of the Payne-Aldrich Act, according to this official document, imports from all Europe were $790,000,000; the second year, $770,000,000; the third year, $900,000,000; the fourth year, $864,000,000. Each year under the Payne-Aldrich Act, according to this official document, the imports from all the countries of Europe were more than they were during the year 1921, under the rates of the present law.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator meant the Underwood Act instead of the Payne-Aldrich Act.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; was not the Payne-Aldrich Act in effect in 1910?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. And in 1911?

Mr. SMOOT. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. And in 1912 and 1913. Those were the figures that I read, covering the entire four years of the life of the Payne-Aldrich Act; and I say that in each calendar year the imports from Europe are shown by these figures to have been greater than they were in the last calendar year, 1921, from all the countries of Europe.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if we undertook to base our judgment upon the amount of business that was done in the United States in 1921, and to make rates upon that basis, we would be far afield. Never in the history of the United States has there been such a time of depression, where overstocks have been so great, where merchants were compelled to so great an extent to dispose of all the goods that it was possible to dispose of, and buy none in many, many cases. That is shown in the returns from the Treasury Department. That is why, I will say to the Senator, at the close of business last night there had been received by the Treasury of the United States during this fiscal year up to the present day, compared with the last fiscal year, over $1,000,000,000 less revenue to the Government.

That is why the figures quoted by the Senator here have no reference whatever to the amount of goods which may come into this country when there is a demand for them.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMOOT. In just a moment I will yield. In the figures the Senator quotes, he also does not take into consideration the question as to whether the goods came in free or whether they came in dutiable. His figures took into consideration all goods, whether they came in free or whether they came in dutiable. The United States never objects, and nobody would ever think of objecting, to allowing goods which are upon the free list to come into the United States. What difference would it make if there were a billion dollars more of such imports? There would be no revenue to the Government, no protection whatever to the interests which are demanding protection. But up to April 26, 1922, there was collected a revenue of $277,780,775.36 on dutiable goods. For the year preceding, or for the fiscal year 1921, as compared with 1922, the figures, under the Underwood law, were $252,872,000. The rates applied were exactly the same, because it was under the Underwood law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sure the Senator does not want that statement to remain as he has just stated it.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I want it to remain.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The emergency tariff law went into effect on the 27th of May, 1921, putting wool upon the dutiable list, and increasing the duty upon sugar and a number of other items. So the Senator is not quite accurate in his statement that these goods came in under the same law.

Mr. SMOOT. The emergency tariff bill, as far as sugar is concerned, did affect this figure, and I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it. But, Mr. President, it should be remembered that the first figure I spoke of, the very highest, obtained at a time when business in this country was as low as it ever was in its history, and I trust, aye, I hope, Mr. President, that the bottom has been reached and that there will be a revival of business from now on.

As far as manufactured goods are concerned, that must be, because of the fact that the shelves are all bare. The merchants have sold until their stocks are just as low as they possibly can have them and at the same time maintain their trade and furnish what is absolutely necessary. They have no surplus now to sell as they had in 1921 and 1920. So that all the goods which are used in this country from now on must either be produced by American labor and American institutions or they must be imported into this country.

The bill we have presented to the Senate has in view the production of a great majority of those goods in this country, and, as far as the results which will follow from that bill are concerned, I have no apology to make, and I believe with all my soul that the American people will accept the policy that has been adopted.

I know that if the rates are too high and there should be an embargo the American people would object to it. They would not approve of the action; but under existing conditions in the world to-day the only fear I have is that some of the rates are just low enough to allow the countries of the world producing more cheaply than we to jump the hurdle. I hope not, Mr. President, and I hope that there will be a fair amount of importations into this country, but that the great bulk of the goods used by the American people will be made by American laboring men.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, instead of confining himself to the issue which had been made between him and myself, the Senator drifts off into other fields. I do not purpose to permit him in that way to escape the results of the figures applied to the issue which I made with him.

The Senator contended that the European imports were so great under the present law that they threatened the markets of this country. I joined issue with him upon that question. I asserted that they were not any greater during the last calendar year, under the present law, than they were during the four years of the operation of the high rates of the Payne-Aldrich law. I asserted, on the contrary, that they were materially less than they were during any year during the life of the Payne-Aldrich Act.

If my statement of those facts is correct, then there is no foundation upon which to rest the contention of the Senator from Utah that, so far as importations from European countries are concerned, they are more threatening now, under the proposed rates, than they were under the Payne-Aldrich rates. If they are no greater under the rates of the pending bill than they were under the Payne-Aldrich rates, then this market is not in danger of being flooded by reason of the lower rates.

Then the fact that the importations have been less under these lower rates than under the higher rates of the Payne-Aldrich law is conclusive evidence that there is no need at this time for an increase in those rates. It is conclusive proof that importations from Europe, at least—and we are talking about Europe only in this controversy—are not a menace to the American market.

The Senator from Utah, seeing the overwhelming force of the figures I presented, taken from the official records of this Government, certified to this Congress and to the country as correct, sought to shift the controversy to another battle ground; but he shall not do it. His only reply to my figures and to my argument was that the prices of to-day were higher than the prices of former times.

Mr. SMOOT. I never made such a statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator did say, if I understood him correctly, that this situation was accounted for by reason of facts connected with prices.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I never made such a statement as that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I concede that when you are comparing the imports of the present year with the imports of 1920 or 1919 or 1918, or during the pre-war period, when prices were at their peak, then the drop in importations could be largely accounted for, measured in dollars by the fall in prices. Undoubtedly that would be true. But the slump came in 1921. It began in the fall of 1920, and it came with its full force in 1921. We had imports for that year, measured in dollars, of only $764,000,000, and it is those imports, the imports of 1921, after the slump and after the fall in prices, which I compared with the imports under the Payne-Aldrich Act.

The Senator seeks, as I understood him, to escape the force of that by the suggestion of the differences in prices. Mr. President, when you measure imports of one period with those of another for the purpose of comparison, prices do become important. If the prices of the present time in this comparison are higher than they were during the 4 years of the Payne-Aldrich Act, then, measured in dollars in both periods, the amount of the imports of 1921, under present rates, would be enormously less than those during the operation of the Payne-Aldrich Act, because prices to-day are probably from 40 to 50 per cent higher than they were during the life of the Payne-Aldrich Act.

If you measure imports of to-day in dollars and cents—they are only $764,000,000—and if you make allowance for the increase in prices, you will see that the present importations, expressed in dollars, are very much less than they were during the operation of the Payne-Aldrich Act, likewise expressed in dollars.

In other words, the unit of a certain commodity at this time would sell, we will say, for 40 per cent more than it would during the Payne-Aldrich period. So a dollar would buy a smaller quantity of goods to-day than it would during the operation of the Payne-Aldrich Act. Therefore, that does not break the force of the comparison which I made, but even accentuates, to the extent of 40 per cent, the force of the contention I made, and the significance of the figures I gave.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator built up a straw man and then proceeded to demolish him, because I never said one word about the prices of the goods affecting the volume of importation, nor did I say one word about the prices in 1911, 1912, 1913, when the Payne-Aldrich bill was in force. The Senator's statement was that the higher the price of the goods the more in volume will be the amount; that if the same amount of goods are imported, the higher the price the greater will be the amount in dollars and cents.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the less amount of goods a dollar would buy.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes, of course; but that is not what I said. I said the higher the price of the goods, if the amount of importations come into the country, then the greater will be the value of the importations. No one can deny that. In the fiscal year 1921, up to the 26th day of the present month, the duty collected was $252,000,000. The prices began to decline and have declined rapidly during that time. I agree with the Senator that perhaps they are 25 or 30 per cent less. Notwithstanding the reduction in prices, the importations were greater for this year up to this very moment as compared to the year before. That is all I said.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not talking about a comparison of imports for 1920 and 1921. I am comparing the imports of 1921 with the imports of 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913 under the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. SMOOT. But I answered the Senator's statement that the rates in the present law were high enough, and that there were no importations to speak of under it and that there were not going to be. I showed the importations not only were increasing in volume but the prices have been decreasing, showing there are a great deal more goods imported than there were before.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am sure that all will recognize that I have been very generous in yielding. However, I am anxious now to proceed. Before returning to the line of my previous discussion, I wish to call attention to what the Senator from Utah has just presented to us.

He told us that during the corresponding period of 1921 the customs revenue was $252,000,000, and that in 1922 the customs revenue was $277,000,000. He therefore insists that this is conclusive proof that the country is being flooded with foreign goods. One trouble with the figures is that the 1922 receipts were after the emergency tariff law went into effect, and a number of articles were made dutiable beginning with May 27, 1921, which were not dutiable during the earlier months of 1921, and which are brought into comparison.

If the Senator wants to take such temporary figures as that, I call attention to a statement upon the same page of the report from which the Senator read and upon the same line.

There we find that during April, 1921, the revenue receipts were $34,933,000. During the month of April, 1922, the revenue receipts have fallen off to $29,578,000, a reduction this part of the month of April of this year as compared with last year of $5,500,000. Of course, the Senator merely overlooked that in reading from the report and taking the annual report for last year for a period of months previous to the passage of the emergency tariff law.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the Senator from Utah did not overlook it at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, I thought perhaps he had. I thought if he had not overlooked it he certainly would have given us the benefit of that information.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but the Senator would not want to base any kind of rate upon one particular month's importation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; and I would not want to do it on any particular period of three months.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor would I; but it is pretty safe to take it upon the basis of a year.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But the Senator from Utah dwelt upon the difference of the cost in labor in Germany and in the United States. I do not know what percentage his figures would finally disclose. At any rate, there is an enormous difference, and it is in the daily wage. I agree with the Senator that there is and has been that difference, but I desire to call attention to this fact.

When the Senator talks about a flood of goods coming in from Germany, I call attention to the fact that in 1910 we imported from Germany $169,000,000 worth of goods. During the whole year 1921, the third year after the armistice, we imported from Germany only $96,000,000 worth of goods, less than one-half the amount we imported from Germany in 1914 and almost one-half the amount we imported from Germany in 1910. At some future date I expect to discuss in a consecutive way the situation in Germany, but for the purpose of the discussion now I think it is important to make a few very salient statements.

We are now three and one-half years from the armistice. The total production in Germany to-day is only about 50 per cent of what it was prior to the war. That means that Germany has been unable to gather together the essentials which are necessary to increase her production. It is true that her man power is cheap and that the wage earners are being subsidized. The Government has been selling bread for less than it costs. It has been practically giving rent without cost. It is true that there is very little unemployment in Germany to-day, brought about, however, by the fact that upon the public utilities, supported by Government taxation, there are about four men running upon the railroads of Germany to-day where one was doing it prior to the war, and they are hauling one-half the amount of freight.

It is impossible for Germany to get the necessary materials together. Her coal mines are necessarily restricted in output, and so with various other conditions there. The Senator from Utah talks about this country being flooded with imports from poor and distressed Germany. I say if that is the basis upon which the majority of the Finance Committee founded the bill, it is a foundation of sand and will not bear the pressure of the condemnation of the people of the country.

Mr. President, I have been trying to find out from what country prices were obtained which were used as the basis in ascertaining the difference in cost of production here and abroad. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has not yet told us, but I assume that he indorses what was said by the Senator from Utah, that Germany was the one great country picked out, and that everything there is so much cheaper and so much more greatly depressed that they used the prices from Germany as the basis of the bill. If that be so, I would remind the Senator that those prices have vastly changed. They have changed even since the bill came into the Senate.

I read from a document prepared by the Federal Reserve Board, which came from the New York office, 15 Broad Street, of the Federal Reserve Board, received by wireless, stating the wholesale price index of the Frankfurter Zeitung for April 3, 1922. According to this index, there has been an increase of 20.7 per cent in the general level of wholesale prices in Germany during the month of March, as compared with an increase of 23.6 per cent during February. There we have the whole index of prices during the month of February in Germany increasing 23.6 per cent and in March 20.7 per cent. Is that the basis? Is the bill founded upon that situation?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator know how the German mark fluctuated in price during that time?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, yes; I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, did not the mark fall more than the increase in the regulated prices?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It did not. I will tell the Senator that the truth is the mark has risen in that time.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the figures here, and I do not know. I merely asked the Senator; I thought perhaps he had looked it up. I have not looked it up of late, and I simply asked the Senator whether there has been a change in the value of the mark.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I must confess the Senator's statement is rather a surprise to me, because it is usually the case that when the Senator from Utah arises and speaks it is like opening a new page of an encyclopedia.

I can say to the Senator that the price of the mark has not fallen in that time. The great depreciation in the price of the mark was last fall, about October or November. During this period of time the gold exchange price of the mark has been around 0.33 of a cent, and is now about 0.34 or 0.35 of a cent. I think in the last day or two it has gone up, probably to 0.36 of a cent, but the price of the mark during the period to which I have referred has ranged from about 0.33 to 0.40 of a cent or under.

Now, Mr. President, if all that we have heard here is to be accepted as the foundation for the bill, if we are to take prices in Germany, with labor as estimated as low as the Senator from Utah has stated, if other prices translated into gold values are so low, and if that is the point from which competition is expected, then I say that the bill has failed to meet the situation. If the factors advanced here by the two distinguished Senators are to be accepted as the foundation of the bill and if it is to be expected that the amount of goods from Germany is going to continue to flow into this country and that that flow will be unlimited in amount, then the rates in the pending bill are far too low to protect the American producer.

I wish to say to Senators on the other side of the Chamber that they need not fear any great influx of goods from Germany. As I have stated, with all their ingenuity, with all the natural characteristics of the German citizens to work and produce, they are to-day, three and a half years after the armistice, producing only about one-half what they produced prior to the World War. We have been importing from Germany for the last two years less than half what we were importing prior to the war. Year before last the imports were only $45,000,000; last year they were only $90,000,000. In the one case there was imported one-fourth of what was imported prior to the war, and in the other case only one-half what was being imported prior to the war.

What are we doing in the matter of exports to Germany? In 1910 we exported to Germany $249,000,000 worth of goods; in 1914 we exported $344,000,000 worth; in 1919, immediately following the war, we exported only $8,818,000 worth. During 1920 we exported to Germany $202,000,000 worth of goods, and we received from Germany only $45,000,000 worth of goods. In 1921 we received from Germany, as I have said, $90,000,000 worth of goods, and we sold to Germany $381,000,000 worth of goods.

I will ask how the American exporter is going to be paid for his goods? This country is exporting to Germany to-day more goods than ever in her commercial history, and how can we be paid unless we receive some commodities from Germany in exchange?

We are sending to Germany to-day foodstuffs; we are also sending her manufactured products to a greater extent than ever before; and yet Germany, struggling as she is, was unable under the existing tariff law to export to this country last year one-half of what she exported to us prior to the World War. Does that look as though this country is going to be flooded with goods from Germany? We are trying to build up a tariff wall here which will shut out those meager importations, amounting to only one-half of what they were before the war. When we are selling to Germany at least one-third more than we sold to her prior to the war, are we going to build up this tariff wall and absolutely prevent the exportation of our surplus goods to Germany? That is what this bill means. It was intended to do just that thing. It was intended, Mr. President, not to bring about a competitive condition but, as I shall show later, it was intended, in practical effect, to place an embargo upon importations, to destroy the market abroad for exports from the United States.

I want some of the Senators who come from manufacturing States to realize what this bill means to their States and to their constituencies. In 1920 we exported of manufacturing materials 103,000,000,000 pounds; in 1921 we exported 66,000,000,000 pounds, or 35 per cent less than in the previous year, and the percentage of income was reduced by 49 per cent. We exported in 1920 of manufactures 32,474,000,000 pounds, and last year, 1921, we exported but 23,699,000,000 pounds. We received one-half less for our exports of manufactures last year than we received for the previous year.

The United States has grown to be a great exporter of manufactured products. I want Senators who come from manufacturing States to realize that those who support this bill are not building up a tariff wall here for the purpose only of preventing exports of farm products, but I hope that they will also realize that they are paralyzing the industrial centers of the country as well.

Mr. President, I think we have ascertained that the prices accepted by the majority of the Finance Committee as a basis for this bill were German prices.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator from New Mexico kindly indicate from what authority he quotes the figures which he is giving?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sure the Senator from New Jersey has received the document from which I am quoting. The story as to how these figures were arrived at is very interesting. The document from which I am now reading was published by the National City Bank, of New York, which is very near the Senator's home. I believe everybody will recognize that it is at least one of the leading financial institutions of this country. That institution has a statistician, whose name I do not just now recall, but I will tell the Senator what he has done.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to have the date of the publication.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The date of the publication is March, 1922.

The amount of exports is often given only in value, not in pounds, but the statistician by very careful and, I assume, very arduous labor has reduced to pounds as many of these exported articles as possible. He says in this article he was able to reduce to pounds only about 75 per cent of our exports, and so the figures which are given—and I am glad the Senator from New Jersey made the inquiry—only represent 75 per cent of the exports. The document is very interesting.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, am I wrong in thinking that the statistician who compiled the figures is Mr. O. P. Austin?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Massachusetts is quite right; it is Mr. Austin; and I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts regards him very highly as a statistician.

Mr. LODGE. He is a very good man.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. He is the man who compiled these figures. I may state that the same document contains the imports for the same period of time, divided in the same way. It sets forth the foodstuffs which were imported and exported; it sets forth the various manufacturing materials which were imported and exported, and also the finished manufactured articles. It gives all those figures in pounds and it adds them up. I will now give the totals.

In 1920 of foodstuffs, manufacturing materials, and manufactures we exported 164,748,000,000 pounds, or, rather, that is estimated to be 75 per cent of our exports in 1920. In 1921 we exported 128,143,000,000 pounds of these combined commodities, including foodstuffs, manufacturing materials, and manufactured products. Of that total the finished manufactured products last year amounted to 23,699,000,000 pounds, and the manufacturing materials amounted to 66,893,000,000 pounds, making the total of those two items alone 90,000,000,000 pounds out of the 128,000,000,000 pounds of all commodities, showing, Mr. President, that the export trade of this country in manufacturing materials and finished manufactured products is much greater than the exports of foodstuffs or farm products.

I hope that the manufacturers of this country will realize what this bill means and will appreciate that whenever this tariff wall is built up their export trade is gone. I hope the laboring men in the manufacturing centers of the country will realize what this bill means. It means more unemployment; it means that only a sufficient quantity of goods will be manufactured in this country for domestic purposes; that the export trade will be destroyed; that ninety-odd billion pounds of manufactured goods and materials must be kept at home. I hope the laborers to whom the Senator from Utah made such an appeal awhile ago will realize this situation and not listen longer to the old stock argument that the tariff is made for the benefit of the laboring man. Mr. President, on item after item, covering hundreds of items in this bill, there is imposed a duty upon importation of over 100 per cent of the entire cost of the foreign article.

The labor that enters into the cost of many of those items is small. It is really, in many cases, an unimportant factor, and yet Senators talk about labor. There is no one in all this land who is more sympathetic with those who toil than am I. I am willing to go any length for them; but under the guise of protecting the laboring men of this country I am unwilling to deceive the American people and extort money from them.

Mr. President, I have here several other questions which I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota, but it is now 5.30, and I am sure that the great quantity of light which the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Utah are able to shed upon this subject can not be dispensed this evening; so, if it is compatible with the wishes of the Senator from North Dakota, I shall be glad to defer further discussion until to-morrow.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the tables to which I have referred, compiled by Mr. Austin, showing for the years 1920 and 1921, respectively, the imports into and the exports from the United States, by weight and value, of foodstuffs, manufacturing materials, and manufactures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Weights and value of United States foreign trade, 1920 and 1921.

Showing relative decline in quantities and values in 1921 when compared with 1920, in all important articles in which quantities can be stated.

IMPORTS.

	Million pounds.		Per cent of increase or decrease.	Million dollars.		Per cent of increase or decrease.
	1920	1921		1920	1921
Foodstuffs:
Sugar	8,036	5,967	−26	1,015	237	−76
Coffee	1,297	1,341	+3	253	143	−43
Cocoa	344	305	−11	54	23	−57
Tea	90	77	−14	24	14	−41
Fruits and nuts	4,344	4,689	+8	72	56	−22
Meats	153	59	−61	21	7	−66
Fish	301	304	+1	35	29	−17
Eggs	29	18	−37	7	3	−57
Milk	24	9	−62	3	1	−66
Butter	37	19	−48	19	7	−63
Cheese	16	27	+68	6	9	+50
Wheat	2,148	1,398	−35	75	36	−52
Flour	160	192	+20	9	8	−11
Rice	143	84	−41	14	3	−78
Spices	61	64	+4	12	5	−58
Molasses	1,921	936	−51	5	2	−60
Tapioca	105	55	−47	6	2	−66
Vegetables	716	304	−57	32	8	−75
Oil cake	229	88	−61	4	2	−50
Cattle	332	162	−51	27	6	−77
All other [1]	869	257	−70	57	19	−66
Total	21,385	16,355	−23	1,750	620	−64
Manufacturing materials:
Cotton	300	139	−54	139	33	−76
Wool	260	321	+23	127	61	−51
Silk	30	45	+50	285	259	−9
Fibers	909	548	−40	80	34	−57
Hides and skins	510	348	−32	244	68	−72
Rubber	603	427	−29	249	76	−69
Gums	142	82	−42	52	23	−55
Soda nitrate	2,961	826	−72	63	18	−71
Fertilizers	2,499	696	−72	51	12	−76
Flaxseed	1,378	684	−50	75	20	−73
Tobacco	82	53	−35	82	54	−34
Copra	248	224	−10	19	10	−47
Wood pulp	1,812	1,394	−23	89	39	−55
China clay	724	328	−55	4	2	−50
Aluminum	40	31	−22	12	7	−41
Iron ore	2,852	707	−75	5	1	−80
Copper ore	116	103	−12	22	14	−36
Tin ore	67	31	−54	19	6	−68
Coal	2,554	2,531	−1	7	7	0
Petroleum	36,552	43,272	+18	55	67	+16
All other [1]	2,633	1,605	−39	128	59	−53
Total	57,372	54,395	−5	1,808	870	−51
Manufactures:
Cotton cloth	36	21	−41	52	29	−44
Cotton yarn	94	49	−47	29	6	−80
Wool cloth	8	7	−12	20	14	−30
Wool yarn	4	6	+50	8	7	−12
Silk fabrics	3	4	+33	36	24	−31
Silk yarn	3	2	−33	13	6	−54
Fiber fabrics	11	8	−27	26	11	−57
Burlaps	569	472	−16	89	41	−53
Jute bags	51	65	+27	8	4	−50
Paper, printing	1,490	1,585	+9	69	79	+14
Creosote oil	129	232	+80	4	5	+25
Pulpboard	86	39	−55	3	1	−66
Calcium carbide	83	85	+2	3	3	0
Coconut oil	216	190	−14	33	15	−54
Palm oil	42	23	−45	5	2	−60
Soya-bean oil	112	16	−85	13	1	−92
Copper, pigs, etc	369	248	−33	68	31	−54
Tin, pigs, etc	126	54	−57	74	17	−77
Iron, pigs, etc	416	99	−76	13	2	−84
Cigars, etc	6	2	−66	17	6	−64
All other [1]	1,205	1,466	+21	71	41	−42
Total	5,030	4,673	−7	654	345	−47
Grand total [1]	83,787	75,423	−10	4,212	1,835	−56

EXPORTS.

Foodstuffs:
Wheat and flour	16,979	20,098	+18	822	551	−32
Corn and meal	1,164	7,382	+534	34	96	+182
Oats and meal	478	204	−57	16	5	−68
Rice	393	600	+52	37	21	−43
Rye	3,192	1,669	−47	122	44	−63
Barley	854	1,238	+44	27	21	−22
Fruits and nuts	571	702	+22	49	46	−6
Meats	1,061	796	−24	259	139	−46
Lard and tallow	780	1,116	+43	179	140	−21
Butter	18	8	−55	10	3	−70
Cheese	16	12	−27	5	3	−40
Milk	414	299	−28	65	38	−41
Eggs	27	34	+25	14	11	−21
Fish	118	86	−27	19	10	−47
Sugar	924	934	+1	95	49	−48

[1] For which weight can be stated.

Weights and value of United States foreign trade, etc.—Continued.

EXPORTS—continued.

	Million pounds.		Per cent of increase or decrease.	Million dollars.		Per cent of increase or decrease.
	1920	1921		1920	1921
Foodstuffs—Continued.
Cottonseed oil	185	253	+36	35	24	−31
Oil cake	590	1,207	+104	18	25	+38
Vegetables	420	340	−19	21	11	−47
Cattle	72	167	+131	11	12	+8
Hay	141	116	−17	2	1	−50
All other [1]	356	290	−18	21	13	−38
Total	28,753	37,551	+30	1,861	1,263	−32
Manufacturing material:
Cotton, raw	3,179	3,339	+5	1,136	534	−52
Tobacco	468	515	+10	245	205	−16
Hides and skins	17	30	+76	6	4	−33
Iron ore	2,570	986	−61	6	2	−66
Iron pigs	486	63	−87	10	1	−90
Coal	87,584	55,592	−36	350	168	−52
Coke	1,839	613	−66	10	3	−70
Petroleum, raw	2,360	2,604	+10	29	20	−31
Paraffin	375	226	−39	33	11	−66
Fertilizers	2,396	1,643	−31	10	7	−30
Asphaltum	103	90	−12	1	1	0
Aluminum	9	2	−76	3	1	−66
Lead	39	53	+35	3	2	−33
Zinc	228	8	−96	19	1	−94
Sulphur	1,001	641	−35	9	5	−44
Soda ash	167	35	−79	5	1	−80
Soda, caustic	224	50	−77	11	2	−81
Rosin	326	280	−14	19	5	−73
Turpentine	66	65	−1	15	6	−60
Hops	26	18	−30	17	6	−52
All other [1]	58	40	−31	15	6	−60
Total material	103,521	66,893	−35	1,952	991	−49
Manufactures:
Automobiles	515	115	−77	212	43	−79
Locomotives	257	152	−40	54	34	−37
Cotton cloth	202	133	−34	238	72	−69
Cotton yarn	24	14	−41	20	6	−70
Wool cloth	9	2	−77	24	4	−83
Binder twine	55	59	+7	8	8	.....
Sole leather	22	14	−36	12	5	−59
Steel rails	1,350	921	−31	36	18	−50
Bars and billets	2,266	488	−78	75	16	−79
Nails	245	75	−70	16	5	−70
Sheets and plates	2,756	1,339	−51	115	51	−55
Pipes, iron	791	882	+11	53	56	+5
Wire	718	222	−69	41	12	−70
Tin plate	507	241	−52	40	17	−57
Copper	624	629	+1	127	85	−33
Petroleum, manufactured	19,327	16,982	−12	520	364	−30
Spirits	221	44	−80	20	3	−85
Tobacco, manufactured	57	35	−39	41	20	−51
Paper	247	100	−59	27	10	−62
Starch	148	258	+74	9	6	−33
All other [1]	2,133	994	−53	119	64	−46
Total	32,474	23,699	−27	1,807	899	−50
Grand total [1]	164,748	128,143	−22	5,620	3,153	−43

[1] For which weight can be stated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico seems possessed with the determination that he will ascertain the method by which we levied our duty according to what he hopes he has established, and so he has declared again and again that we have made the basis of our ad valorem duties the lowest cost-price country in the world. We have done nothing of the kind, Mr. President. If a line of goods come from Japan, of course, we must make our estimate upon the price of those goods in Japan and the price of similar articles, or articles which they displace, in the United States. If a line of goods come from Germany, we must, of course, take the German price for that particular line of goods as the basis of our tariff. If a line of goods come from Great Britain, or Holland, or France, we must take the prices in Great Britain, Holland, or France. We are not guided by the highest price country or the lowest price country, but we are guided simply by the price of the article in the country from which it is exported. That is the only rule that we possibly could follow in either imposing duties for revenue only or imposing duties for both revenue and protection.

The Senator has made complaint about the balance of trade between the United States and Germany. So far as agricultural and meat products are concerned, Germany does not produce enough for her people. She has to import; and if the Senator will look over the list of the articles that make up the mighty balance of trade against Germany, he will find that they are all agricultural or meat products, agricultural products, of course, including cotton, which is the greatest product, and including tobacco, which is of considerable importance.

Germany sells her goods where she can sell to the best advantage. She buys where she can buy to the best advantage. She buys American agricultural products because she can buy them as cheaply in the United States as she can get them from any other country; and if the Senator will look over the trade of the United States with the world from 1918 to 1919—I have not the 1920 figures, and the 1921 list has not yet been published—he will find that in the case of our trade with Germany, taking only those things which run into the millions, our exports of beef were nearly $8,000,000 in 1918; our exports of hog products were $17,370,000; hams and shoulders, $2,000,000; lard, nearly $14,000,000; milk, about $2,000,000; illuminating oils, nearly $2,000,000; naphtha and other light products of distillation, nearly $2,000,000; tobacco, about $1,057,000; and so on. If, however, the Senator will look over the manufactured articles which Germany purchased from the United States, he will see that they are merely a bagatelle in each case. They amount almost to nothing. The real contest between this country and Germany will be a contest upon manufactured articles.

In 1921, as was stated by the Senator from North Carolina, there was a falling off of imports into the United States from all countries. There was a falling off equally of the things which were produced in the United States in about the same proportion. The hard times in this country made the conditions such that we could not purchase articles either from abroad or at home, and both suffered in relatively the same proportion, so that whether or not there was a decrease in the importations of 1921 as compared with the importations of 1920 seems to me to be of very little concern. It was not a question of tariffs; it was a question of condition of trade and inability to purchase.

We shall probably be selling to Germany a great many agricultural products, because we raise an abundance, and we are compelled very often to sell for very meager profits, and sometimes even at a loss, but the fact that we sell a great many of those agricultural products does not mean that we ought in return to surrender the market of the United States for the manufactured products of any country. We wish to keep both in operation, and as profitably as possible to manufacturer, to labor, and to the ultimate consumer, who is both the laborer and the manufacturer.

Mr. President, I understand that it is desired to have an executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, April 29, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 28 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

A. R. Noble to be collector of customs, customs collection district No. 19, with headquarters at Mobile, Ala.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Paul Bernard Malone to be brigadier general.

John Kramer Miller to be colonel, Adjutant General's Department.

John Edwin Woodward to be colonel, Adjutant General's Department.

William Kelly, jr., to be colonel, Adjutant General's Department.

Alfred James Booth to be lieutenant colonel, Adjutant General's Department.

William Vaulx Carter to be major, Adjutant General's Department.

James Alexander Ulio to be major, Adjutant General's Department.

Michael Joseph O'Brien to be major, Adjutant General's Department.

John Nicholas Smith, jr., to be major, Adjutant General's Department.

Rene Eugene Fraile to be captain, Adjutant General's Department.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

IN THE MARINE CORPS.

To be captain.

Thomas R. Shearer.

To be first lieutenants.

William H. Hollingsworth.
Norman E. True.

To be second lieutenants.

Wallace C. Harding.
William W. Davies.
Everett H. Clark.
Augustus W. Cockrell.
Paul F. Jones.
Delbert D. Spangler.
James M. Smith.
Lewis A. Hohn.
Bayard L. Bell.
Vernon E. Megee.
Joseph D. Humphrey.
Orin H. Wheeler.
William H. Doyle.
Harold S. Levis.
Ernest E. Linsert.
Thomas L. Cagle.
James G. Hopper.
Edwin A. Pollock.
John R. Streett.
Cornelius J. Eldridge.
Randolph McC. Pate.
Dudley W. Davis.
Robert S. A. Gladden.
Franklin C. Hall.
John D. Christian.
Beverley S. Roberts.
Lucian C. Whitaker.
William O. Brice.
Francis M. Wulbern.

POSTMASTERS.

DELAWARE.

John S. Dobson, Millsboro.

IOWA.

James V. Frew, Hiteman.

MAINE.

Ralph R. Mathews, Berwick.
Everard J. Gove, Biddeford.
Willard E. Day, Monmouth.
George H. Rounds, Naples.
George O. Carr, Norridgewock.
Osmond S. Waite, North Jay.
Will C. Heldreth, York Beach.

MICHIGAN.

Floyd B. Gates, Mesick.

MINNESOTA.

Patrick W. Moran, Olivia.

NEW YORK.

John A. Rapelye, Flushing.
Henry C. Windeknecht, Rensselaer.
Joseph W. Kratoville, Riverhead.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Edward F. Hamilton, Cavalier.

OREGON.

Ora S. Banister, Paisley.
Hilliard Campbell, Walhalla.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Wharton M. Oswalt, Clarence.
Margaret Pilson, Morton.
Lucille B. Fillinger, Ralston.

TEXAS.

William B. McCrary, Cushing.
George A. Young, Hallettsville.
Roy B. Nichols, Houston.
William A. Crawford, Pampa.
John W. White, Uvalde.

VIRGINIA.

Robert Irby, Appomattox.
David R. Jones, Cambria.
Mary P. Moon, Cartersville.
Claiborne W. Beattie, Chilhowie.
Le Roy Jester, Chincoteague Island.
Wilbur H. Palmer, Greenville.
Frank P. Landon, Hopewell.
Edward M. Blake, Kilmarnock.
William P. Nye, Radford.
Laurie D. Marshall, Thaxton.

WASHINGTON.

Bert L. McCarty, Battle Ground.
Walter W. Shore, Farmington.
Rees B. Williams, Ilwaco.

WISCONSIN.

Joseph Kuchenmeister, Almena.
Stanleigh K. Gaveney, Arcadia.
Frank E. Shults, Baraboo.
Leslie H. Thayer, Birchwood.
John A. Mathys, Casco.
Oliver R. Weinandy, Cochrane.
Henry J. Altschwager, Columbus.
Nels O. Neprud, Coon Valley.
Reginald E. Caves, Dalton.
Ella Barber, Marathon.
Henry A. Elmer, Maribel.
John B. Thelen, National Home.
John E. Wehrman, Prescott.
Alvin E. Hafer, Roberts.
Wilbur S. Wurm, Shullsburg.
Helen Pickett, Spencer.
William R. Homermiller, Tomah.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 28, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou in whom we live and have our being, we come with a common prayer, feeling the sentiments of gratitude and praise toward the Father of us all. How we bless Thee that we are in the counsels of Thy great heart. Let us welcome Thy providences, and may they bring us to duty with noble strength. Forgive, rebuke, and chasten us. If hasty, impulsive, or too apprehensive, restrain us; if weakened in spirit, strengthen us by grace divine. In all things make us strong in faith, clear in vision, and immovable in our allegiance to every great and vital interest of our beloved country. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday was read and approved.

CONFERENCE REPORT—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the bill H. R. 10101, the District of Columbia bill, for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota submits a conference report on the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10101) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year 1923, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10101) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments numbered 1, 78, 79, 86, 101, 114, 115, 116, 142, 155, 163, 164, 175, 186, and 187, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. GLASS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 10240. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3401. An act to authorize the Bear Mountain Hudson River Bridge Co. to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River near the village of Peekskill, State of New York;

S. 3417. An act authorizing Independence County, Ark., to construct a bridge across the White River at or near Batesville, Ark.; and

S. 3316. An act to authorize the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in or about section 17, township 54 north, range 25 west, Itasca County, Minn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 10407. An act authorizing the counties of Jasper, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees:

S. 3417. An act authorizing Independence County, Ark., to construct a bridge across the White River at or near Batesville, Ark.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3401. An act to authorize the Bear Mountain Hudson River Bridge Co. to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River near the village of Peekskill, State of New York; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 4382) to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCNARY, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. SHEPPARD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in 8-point type a speech on "Ulysses S. Grant as a Soldier," delivered at McKeesport, Pa., on April 27, by my colleague, Hon. HENRY Z. OSBORNE, of California, the only veteran of the Civil War on the Union side sitting as a Member of this House, the only other Civil War veteran in the House being Major STEDMAN, who fought on the Confederate side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ULYSSES S. GRANT AS A SOLDIER.

[Address of Hon. HENRY Z. OSBORNE, of California, at a mass meeting at McKeesport, Pa., on the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of General Grant, April 27, 1922.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a speech on "Ulysses S. Grant as a soldier," delivered at McKeesport, Pa., on April 27 by my colleague, Hon. HENRY Z. OSBORNE, of California, the only veteran of the Civil War on the Union side sitting as a Member of the House. Major STEDMAN, the only other Civil War veteran in the House, fought on the Confederate side.

The address is as follows:

Mr. Chairman, comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, Sons of Veterans, soldiers of the Spanish War, soldiers of the great World War, ladies, and gentlemen: One hundred years ago to-day there was born at the small village of Point Pleasant, Ohio, within 200 miles of where we are now assembled, in a plain and modest American home, a boy child, who became one of the most notable characters in the history of our country, and without question America's greatest and most successful soldier. His life history reads like a romance, and as it is read by the youth of our country it becomes an inspiration to them, however humble may be their circumstances in life, to faithfully perform every duty as it may arise without fear of consequences. That was the keynote of Grant's great character—devotion to and faithful and energetic performance of duty under all circumstances. No danger deterred him, and although he hated war, when war was on he believed in fighting constantly, though to the best advantage, and bringing it to a close. He considered fighting to be the most humane way of waging war and thus shortening the struggle.

GRANT AS A BOY.

In studying the lives of great men it is always interesting to learn something about their boyhood—what indications may have been given of the future man. Grant's boyhood was much like that of any other healthy boy of that time. His father was a tanner, and also a farmer. Grant hated the tannery but was fond of horses. So most of his work was with the horses on the farm. He began hauling wood when 7 or 8 years of age, and from 11 to 17 did most of the ploughing on the farm. He attended the village school at Georgetown, Ohio, regularly, which had but one teacher of all grades. In his "Memoirs" Grant says:

I did not like to work, but I did as much of it, while young, as grown men can be hired to do in these days, and attended school at the same time.

Of his studies he says:

I never saw an algebra or other mathematical work higher than the arithmetic, in Georgetown, until after I was appointed to West Point. I then bought a work on algebra in Cincinnati, but, having no teacher, it was Greek to me.

Grant's boyhood adventures as related by himself were nearly all associated with horses, which shows his fondness for these noble animals. Illustrating the straightforwardness and simplicity of his character when a lad 8 or 9 years old, he desired to purchase a neighbor's horse. The owner wanted $25 for the animal and Grant's father had offered $20. He begged his father to permit him to make the purchase even at $25. The father agreed, but cautioned him as to the manner of making the purchase. Young Grant went to the owner and said:

Papa says I may offer you $20 for the colt, but if you won't take that I am to offer $22.50, and if you won't take that to give you $25.

Of course, he got the colt.

All the evidence is that Grant was an ordinary, honest, healthy, American boy, and but for the happy circumstance of his appointment as a cadet to West Point his great character and eminent soldierly qualities would have been lost to the country, and he would have lived and died after an honest but unknown and perhaps commonplace life.

AT WEST POINT AND IN THE MEXICAN WAR.

In 1839, at the age of 17, Grant was appointed to the Military Academy at West Point. He had but little enthusiasm for the appointment, partially because he did not believe that he could pass the entrance examinations, and partly because he had no taste for a military life. He was very good in mathematics, however, and, to his surprise, passed. During the four years' course his standing in his classes was about average—never at the head, and never at the foot, but pretty nearly the latter in one study, French. He was very good in Artillery, Infantry, and Cavalry tactics, and in conduct.

In the latter part of 1843, after graduating, Grant was appointed a second lieutenant in the Fourth Infantry, and reported for duty at Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis. It was here that he met Miss Julia Dent, sister of a classmate at West Point, to whom he was married after the close of the Mexican War, in 1848. In May, 1844, the Fourth Infantry was ordered to Louisiana. In 1845 Texas became a part of the United States, and the Mexican War followed.

Grant did not believe in the justice of the Mexican War. As a soldier, however, he fought with great gallantry, and in such a way as to gain the favorable mention of commanding officers in reports. Although in the Quartermaster Corps he managed frequently to get into the fighting. On one occasion he succeeded in getting a stray or abandoned mountain howitzer into the belfry of a church at the San Cosme Gate in the City of Mexico, with which he relieved a sorely-pressed body of American troops.

The various battles of the Mexican War, in nearly all of which Grant was engaged, made a deep impression upon his mind, as is shown in his "Memoirs." Forty years after, while an invalid at Mount MacGreggor, he describes them most minutely and interestingly. No doubt the lessons he learned then in practical warfare were of great use to him when he was fighting the greater battles of the Civil War. He entered the Mexican War as a brevet second lieutenant and came out as a full first lieutenant. He had great admiration for the soldierly qualities of Gen. Zachary Taylor, who was a plain mannered but vigorous and effective commander. He also admired Gen. Winfield Scott—but in spite of the latter's fondness for "the pomp, pride, and circumstance of glorious war." Grant never cared for these things.

FROM THE MEXICAN WAR TO THE CIVIL WAR.

Returning with his regiment from Mexico in 1848, Grant's first business was to marry Miss Julia Dent. For most of the succeeding four years he was stationed at Sacketts Harbor, N. Y. Then, in 1852, the Fourth Infantry, was ordered to our newly acquired territory on the Pacific coast, California having been admitted as a State in 1850. He left his wife and baby boy, Frederick Dent Grant, who afterwards became a major general, with the Dent family at St. Louis. The Fourth went by way of Panama, and had a distressing experience on the long journey, especially crossing the Isthmus, Grant as the quartermaster performing prodigious labor in meeting difficulties of transporting and provisioning the command, rendered more difficult by an attack of cholera.

Conditions were extremely crude on the Pacific coast at that early period. Grant was stationed at Fort Vancouver on the Columbia River near the present city of Portland, and at Fort Humboldt in northern California. Severed from his family and in a new and undeveloped country, these were two unhappy years for Captain Grant, and in 1854, as the result of a difference with his commander, who at that time was known as "the martinet of the Army," he resigned and returned to the East.

From 1854 to 1861 Grant lived successively near St. Louis and at Galena, Ill. He first tried farming near the Dent home, and put 140 acres in grain and potatoes. The name of the leased farm was Hardscrabble, which appears to have been appropriate. The crops were small, and the brave soldier was made helpless by an attack of fever and ague. Then he tried the real estate business in St. Louis, but his education and temperament were not adjusted to that occupation. For lack of political influence he was refused appointment as county engineer. His circumstances were now at their lowest ebb, and he was reduced to the extremity of asking his father's assistance to an opportunity to work. The best that could be done was a place as clerk in the little store of his younger brothers at Galena, at $800 per year. While this was a small salary, he was not a very valuable clerk. He could not drive a good bargain or stimulate trade. He had become despondent, silent, and was careless of his personal appearance.

All these untoward conditions and heartbreaking experiences undoubtedly had a profound effect upon Grant's mind and character, and may have had a beneficial and refining effect upon his career, upon the theory that "Blessed are the uses of adversity."

THE BREAKING OUT OF THE WAR.

The attack upon Fort Sumter on the 14th of April, 1861, marked a tremendous change in the life of Ulysses S. Grant. The patriotism of the people was suddenly set in motion like a mighty tidal wave. Galena was like every other community in the Northern States. It had a militia company, armed with flintlock muskets and imperfectly drilled. The company at once commenced to drill, but its captain made rather a mess of it. He called on Captain Grant, the quiet clerk, to show his men how the "regulars" did it. Gen. Charles King in his book, "The True Ulysses S. Grant," says of this episode:

The instant that shy, silent, undoubtedly slouchy store clerk took the sword and his station in their front he straightened up like a young pine, his voice rang out full, firm, and clear. With the ease and assurance of old habit he explained in quick, terse words the movement to be executed and gave the requisite commands. That night in Galena "Cap" Grant was the most-talked-of man in town.

A few nights later he was called on to preside at the first war meeting, at which a company was enlisted from among the young men. Grant declined the captaincy of the company, and in his "Memoirs" adds:

I never went into our leather store after that meeting to put up a package or do other business.

He drilled the company, went with them to Springfield. On this occasion he first met the great war governor of Illinois, Richard Yates. Governor Yates's son, of the same name, who was a small boy then and who has since been governor of Illinois himself and is now a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives, recently told me of this meeting as related to him by his father. Grant was about to return to Galena by an evening train, somewhat discouraged at the prospect of getting back into the Army. The governor was standing at the door of the hotel, and as Grant was passing addressed him as "Captain," and said that he understood that he (Grant) was about to leave the city. He replied that he was.

The governor said that he would be glad if he would remain overnight and call at the executive office the next morning. Grant complied, and the governor asked him to go into the adjutant general's office and render such assistance as he could in mustering in troops. From this moment Grant's career in the war was assured and always in command. In this emergency he knew exactly what to do, and in a short time mustered in several regiments and assisted their officers in drilling some of them. About this time, or to be exact, May 24, 1861, Grant wrote a letter to The Adjutant General of the Army at Washington, tendering his services and making this modest statement:

I would say, in view of my present age and length of service, I feel myself competent to command a regiment if the President, in his judgment, should see fit to intrust one to me.

Grant never received a reply to this letter. After the war it was found in The Adjutant General's office, not regularly filed but in some out-of-the-way place.

Governor Yates, however, appointed Grant colonel of the Twenty-first Illinois Infantry, and shortly afterwards recommended him for brigadier general, to which rank he was appointed by President Lincoln.

GRANT'S WESTERN CAMPAIGNS.

In the summer and falls months of 1861, under command of General Fremont, Grant was operating in southern and southeastern Missouri. Neither the North nor South then knew much about war, and in Missouri they were milling about with no very definite object in view. Grant, while still a colonel, was ordered to move against Col. Thomas Harris at Florida, Mo. In his Memoirs, Grant says that—

As we approached the brow of the hill, from which it was expected we could see Harris's camp and possibly find his men ready to meet us—

He felt considerable trepidation, but did not have the moral courage to stop, and kept right on. Harris, however, had evacuated and was nowhere in sight—

it occurred to me at once that Harris had been as afraid of me as I had been of him. This was a view that I never forgot afterwards. From that event to the close of the war I never experienced trepidation upon confronting an enemy; though I always felt more or less anxiety, I never forgot that he had as much reason to fear my forces as I had his.

Grant's first battle in the Civil War was at Belmont, Mo., opposite Columbus, Ky. The movement was in the nature of a reconnoissance in force, and, after accomplishing the objects in view, the troops were withdrawn by steamers. The Union losses in this battle were 485 in killed, wounded, and missing. For lack of experienced staff officers, Grant did most of the staff work himself, riding from one command to another to give orders and see that they were properly carried out. So engrossed was he in this work that while his troops were being embarked at the close of the battle he became detached, and, riding alone past a cornfield filled with rebel soldiers, the last steamer was backing out as he reached the river. A plank was run out, and he ran his horse down the steep river bank and over the single plank to the deck of the steamer.

Maj. Gen. H. W. Halleck succeeded General Fremont in command at St. Louis, in November, 1861, and Grant's command was at Cairo. Early in January Grant submitted to Halleck a plan for the capture of Fort Henry, on the Tennessee. Halleck refused his permission, declaring that the plan was preposterous. With the cooperation of Flag Officer Foote, in command of the little fleet of gunboats at Cairo, in the latter part of January, he renewed his suggestion to General Halleck, stating that, "if permitted, I could take and hold Fort Henry." On the 1st of February he received instructions, and on the 2d the expedition started. On the 6th of February Fort Henry fell into his hands, with its Confederate commander, General Tighlman, and his staff, stores, and ammunition. There were but 90 prisoners, Tighlman having sent most of his force to Fort Donelson before the surrender. Fort Donelson was but a few miles south of Fort Henry, and on another river, the Cumberland, and was a much more formidable fortification.

Grant moved with the greatest rapidity in marching his army across to Fort Donelson, and in reinforcing his numbers and getting the gunboat fleet into the Cumberland from the Tennessee.

By February 15 he had Fort Donelson thoroughly invested, with the gunboats on the river, and about 20,000 men along a front of about 3 miles, the three divisions being under command of Gens. C. F. Smith, McClernand, and Wallace. The enemy made a gallant effort to break through, but without success. Before daylight, on February 16, General Grant received a communication from Brig. Gen. S. B. Buckner, in command of the Confederates, proposing the appointment of commissioners to arrange terms of capitulation, and to this General Grant made immediate reply in the following terms:

Gen. S. B. BUCKNER,
Confederate Army.

SIR: Yours of this date proposing armistice and appointing commissioners to settle terms of capitulation is just received. No terms except an unconditional and immediate surrender can be accepted. I propose to move immediately upon your works.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
U. S. GRANT,
Brigadier General.

General Buckner demurred no further, immediately accepted the terms, and surrendered about 15,000 men. This success of General Grant electrified the North and he became at once the object of the Nation's attention. Up to this time, in the first year of the war, the real successes of the Union arms had been few, and the reverses many. Probably at this time very few people in the United States had heard the name Grant, and when there flashed from the West news of the really great victory every lover of the Union was encouraged and the curiosity to learn something about him was universal. He was immediately promoted by President Lincoln to the grade of major general of volunteers. General Halleck, alone in command at St. Louis, still did not believe in General Grant notwithstanding his outstanding victory. Halleck wired to General Hunter, with headquarters in Kansas, congratulating him upon sending reinforcements to assist in securing the fall of Fort Donelson, and also telegraphed to Washington that the victory was due to Gen. C. F. Smith, whom he recommended for immediate promotion. He also issued a similar order thanking Flag Officer Foote and incidentally General Grant and the forces under their command for the victories on the Tennessee and the Cumberland.

Gen. C. F. Smith was one of the general officers serving under General Grant at this time, and Grant admired him very greatly. He had been his instructor at West Point, and there was a strong personal friendship between them. Halleck's feeling toward Grant is illustrated by an order which he issued on March 4, two weeks after the capture of Donelson in the following terms, regarding an expedition into Tennessee and Mississippi:

You will place Maj. Gen. C. F. Smith in command of the expedition and remain yourself at Fort Henry. Why do you not obey my orders to report strength and positions of your command?

Halleck reported to Washington that Grant had gone to Nashville beyond the limits of his command without his authority and that Grant's army—was more demoralized by victory than the army at Bull Run had been by defeat.

General McClellan on this information ordered that Grant should be relieved from duty and even authorized his arrest. In his Memoirs Grant says:

Thus in less than two weeks after the victory at Donelson the two leading generals in the Army were in correspondence as to what disposition should be made of me, and in less than three weeks I was virtually in arrest and without a command.

On the 13th of March Grant was restored to command, and Halleck wrote to him:

Instead of relieving you I wish you as soon as your new army is in the field to assume immediate command and lead it to new victories.

Immediately commenced the concentration of the various divisions of the Army, which resulted in the battle of Shiloh on April 6 and 7, 1862. This was the greatest battle of the war up to this time. It has always been a disputed point whether the Union Army was surprised by the bringing on of this battle in the immediate presence of the Confederate troops of Albert Sidney Johnson. Whether it was a surprise or not, the Confederates had the undoubted advantage all day of April 6, and at night the Federal forces were pushed back pretty well toward the river, and the losses had been very great. Grant, however, was all the time confident of victory, and on the following day opened the battle with a stiff offensive at many points, forcing the Confederates back. He had a theory in which he had great confidence, which was that the army which took the initiative in the fight had the advantage. That was the policy he pursued at Donelson, and during the battle at Shiloh he recounted the experience at Donelson to General Sherman, and said to Sherman that the same tactics would win at Shiloh. So concerned was the Confederate general, Albert Sidney Johnson, that he led a charge to retake ground, and was shot in the leg and soon died. This undoubtedly confused the Confederate forces, although General Beauregard immediately took command. Before night they had been forced back, and retreated as rapidly as possible to the neighborhood of Corinth, Miss. Thus while the battle of Shiloh was not a complete success for the Union arms it is probable but for Grant's brilliant generalship there would have been a great disaster to the Union arms.

SIEGE OF VICKSBURG.

Notwithstanding the great success that attended General Grant's final efforts in bringing the war to a close, attended by a great many battles in Virginia, it is probable that his fame as a soldier will rest more upon his conduct of the investment or siege of Vicksburg than any other campaign in his career. The difficulties were very great. The winter of 1862 and 1863 was a very rainy one, and the country through which his armies passed were water-soaked and the roads in fearful condition. The expedition went for the most part by steamer from Memphis and landed on the Mississippi side of the river above Vicksburg. Several attempts were made to invest Vicksburg from the north, but they were rendered nugatory as much by natural conditions of swamp and water as by the Confederate defense. After these several failures, Grant conceived the idea of running the gauntlet of the Confederate batteries on the high grounds of Vicksburg with gunboats protected with cotton bales and sandbags and carrying supplies below the city, and by taking his Army overland on the Louisiana or west side of the river to a considerable distance below Vicksburg, then crossing the river to the east side with his army and attacking Vicksburg from the south instead of the north. This was what most soldiers would and did call a desperate venture, but it was successfully carried out. The exertions of the army were almost incredible. The run of the batteries by Admiral Porter's fleet was accomplished with a loss of but one of the gunboats. The ferrying of the army across the Mississippi at Bruinsburg, from the Louisiana to the Mississippi side, which commenced April 30, 1863, was a difficult movement. Once on the east side of the river there were all manner of obstacles to be overcome, several rivers and bayous of considerable size had to be crossed in the face of a courageous and determined enemy. The roads were miserable, and the difficulty of keeping up supplies was so great that the supplies were really not kept up. In 21 days the army had but 5 days' provisions, and whatever else they had had to be supplied from the country through which they were passing. Several severe battles were fought, the most serious of which was that at Champion Hills, which lasted four hours and in which the Union loss was 410 killed, 1,844 wounded, and 187 missing.

In executing this movement Grant also captured the capital city of Mississippi, Jackson, which was being defended by Gen. Joseph Johnston. Jackson was not held, however, and was probably taken in order to discourage Gen. Joe Johnston from attacking Grant on the flank. He immediately turned his army toward Vicksburg, and in a very short time, May 19, had that great fortification invested—just 20 days after crossing the river. Then commenced a siege which lasted until July 4, when the Confederate general, Pemberton, surrendered the fortifications and his entire command. Pemberton endeavored to obtain better terms, but Grant insisted upon his usual terms of "unconditional surrender." Grant did say, however, to Pemberton that—men who have fought with so much endurance and courage as those now in Vicksburg will always challenge the respect of an adversary, and I can assure you you will be treated with all the respect due to prisoners of war.

Grant permitted all the prisoners to be paroled and took great care that when the paroled prisoners left the city they should be treated with all consideration. He issued the following order:

Paroled prisoners will be sent out of here to-morrow. They will be authorized to cross at the railroad bridge, and move from there to Edwards Ferry, and on by way of Raymond. Instruct the commands to be orderly and quiet as these prisoners pass, to make no offensive remarks, and not to harbor any who fall out of ranks after they have passed.

Without ostentation, Grant entered Vicksburg at the head of his army on July 4, 1863. There were 31,600 prisoners, 172 cannon, and 60,000 muskets.

All professional soldiers regard the Vicksburg campaign as one which all soldiers should study. General Sherman, who was very close to Grant, the most so of any of his associated generals, was so worried over Grant's plan of campaign that he took occasion to caution Grant in regard to its dangers. He did not believe it could be successful. Grant, however, did not change his mind, and Sherman went forward with his part in the campaign with vigor and perfect loyalty. Evidently Halleck was also sure that it would not be successful and had impressed President Lincoln with his views. This is quite certain from the fact of the congratulatory dispatch which President Lincoln sent to Grant after the surrender. This dispatch was as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, July 13, 1863.

To Major General GRANT.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I do not remember that you and I ever met personally. I write this now as a grateful acknowledgment for the almost inestimable service you have done the country. I wish to say a word further. When you first reached the vicinity of Vicksburg, I thought you should do what you finally did—march the troops across the neck, run the batteries with the transports, and thus go below; and I never had any faith, except a general hope that you knew better than I that the Yazoo Pass expedition and the like could succeed. When you got below and took Port Gibson, Grand Gulf, and vicinity, I thought you should go down the river and join General Banks; and when you turned northward, east of the Big Black, I feared it was a mistake. I now wish to make a personal acknowledgment that you were right and I was wrong.

Yours very truly, A. LINCOLN.

THE CHATTANOOGA CAMPAIGN.

The successful ending of the brilliant Vicksburg campaign, coming as it did simultaneously with the great Union victory at Gettysburg, marked the turning point of the war. That does not mean that the hardest fighting was over. Far from it. But the preponderating power of the North with the vast improvement in its quality of military leadership in Grant, Sherman, Meade, Thomas, and Sheridan thenceforth made itself constantly felt.

Grant was ordered to meet Secretary Stanton at Louisville in October, and on the 17th was placed in command of the military division of the Mississippi. Rosecranz was in a bad way at Chattanooga after the battle of Chickamauga and was upon the point of retreating from Chattanooga, which would have been a great disaster to the Union cause. Grant's first act was to relieve Rosecrans and put Thomas in command of the Army of the Cumberland, at the same time ordering Thomas to hold Chattanooga at all hazards. Thomas promptly replied: "We will hold the town 'till we starve." There was a severe shortage of food, and starvation or surrender seemed inevitable. Grant went to the front and by the 24th succeeded in opening up what was called "the cracker line" and relieved the starving Army.

Then ensued that wonderful campaign about Chattanooga. Grant brought in reenforcements from every direction. Halleck by this time had lost his distrust of Grant and sent in the commands of Hooker and Howard from Virginia, and Sherman came in from Memphis. The campaign culminated in the taking of Missionary Ridge, one of the most picturesque charges of the Civil War, and the Battle of Chattanooga. Grant's handling of the bad situation that he found at Chattanooga was most skillful. Before he entered into the final move he had many of the ablest generals of the war under his immediate command and supporting him, among them Sherman, Thomas, Sheridan, and Hooker. Bragg and Longstreet were in chief command of the Confederates. The battle occurred November 25, 1863. Burnside, who had been badly pressed at Knoxville for some time, was relieved.

On December 8, 1863, Grant received the following congratulatory telegram from President Lincoln:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 8, 1863—10.2 a. m.

Maj. Gen. U. S. GRANT:

Understanding that your lodgment at Knoxville and Chattanooga is now secure, I wish to tender you, and all under your command, my more than thanks, my profoundest gratitude for the skill, courage, and perseverance with which you and they, over so great difficulties, have effected that important object. God bless you all.

A. LINCOLN,
President of the United States.

GRANT GOES TO WASHINGTON.

Grant's headquarters during the winter of 1863–64 were at Nashville. On March 3, 1864, he was ordered to Washington. Congress had restored the grade of lieutenant general on February 26. President Lincoln sent his nomination to the Senate March 1, and it was confirmed the next day. On Grant's arrival at Washington he modestly registered at the Willard Hotel, "U. S. Grant and son, Galena, Ill." On March 9 he went to the White House, and President Lincoln in the presence of his Cabinet presented his commission as lieutenant general in these words:

General Grant, the Nation's appreciation of what you have done, and its reliance upon you for what remains to be done in the existing great struggle, are now presented, with this commission constituting you lieutenant general in the Army of the United States. With this high honor devolves upon you also a corresponding responsibility. As the country herein trusts you, so, under God, it will sustain you. I scarcely need to add that with what I here speak for the Nation goes my own hearty personal concurrence.

To which General Grant replied:

Mr. President, I accept the commission, with gratitude for the high honor conferred. With the aid of the noble armies that have fought in so many fields for our common country, it will be my earnest endeavor not to disappoint your expectations. I feel the full weight of the responsibilities now devolving on me, and I know that if they are met it will be due to those armies and, above all, to the favor of that Providence which leads both nations and men.

Then commenced that marvelous campaign of 1864, the bloodiest and most bitterly contested in our national history. Volumes have been written in description of the many terrible battles and in extolling or criticizing the military skill employed. The limitations of an address will not permit us to recount these battles in detail—the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor—which battles, though in themselves not distinct victories for the Union arms, were such a strain upon the Confederacy as to greatly contribute to the termination of the war within a few months. Grant's theory was to keep the enemy constantly engaged, first at one point and then at another, and never permit him any rest. To carry out this plan required that the Union armies should be kept up with full forces at all times.

From the time that Grant became lieutenant general in 1864 he was not only conducting the campaign of the Army of the Potomac, through its immediate commander, Maj. Gen. G. G. Meade, but he was giving close attention to the campaign in the West—that of General Thomas in eastern Tennessee—which resulted in the battle and victory at Franklin, the most sanguinary battle of the war considering the number of troops engaged, and in which more general officers lost their lives than were lost in all the World War.

Seven Confederate generals were successively killed in gallantly leading charges against the Union line that extended across a narrow neck of land between two rivers, among them the impetuous Pat Cleburne, of Mississippi. In anxiety to bring on immediate action against Hood, General Grant narrowly escaped doing Thomas a great injustice at this time, the conditions of the lack of cavalry, deluging rains, and a fearful sleet storm rendering it impossible for Thomas to move earlier. Fortunately Thomas was able to move and accomplish a great victory before being relieved by Grant, as was for a few days contemplated.

Sherman also was just starting out on his great "march to the sea," but Grant had unbounded faith in Sherman and gave him a free hand to do just what he pleased. Still he kept closely in touch with Sherman's operations.

THE APPOMATTOX CAMPAIGN.

The proper limitations of an address like this will not permit of even the briefest review of the great closing campaign of the war about Richmond. Grant had a clearly defined plan for compelling the evacuation of Richmond and for defeating or capturing Lee's army when he should attempt to retreat south and effect a junction with Johnston, in the Carolinas, who was being forced northward by Sherman. Phil Sheridan had, by Grant's direction, been placed in command of all the Cavalry and had already swept completely around and south of Lee's army. As Grant had planned, the Confederate government left Richmond April 2, 1865. Lee assembled his army at Amelia Courthouse preparatory to joining Johnston, with a view of crushing Sherman, and made a desperate attempt to carry out that plan. It might easily have been successful had the Federal Army been in command of a less capable and vigorous commander than Grant and his support by such generals as Sheridan. The latter, with his swift and powerful Cavalry, got south of Lee and forced his army to stop in the neighborhood of Appomattox. The situation was such that Lee was surrounded and must either be annihilated in battle or surrender. His army had but little food, most of his supply trains from the south having been destroyed or captured by Grant's troops.

At 5 p. m. of April 7 Grant sent Lee the following note, shifting from his own shoulders the further responsibility of bloodshed:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
5 p. m., April 7, 1865.

Gen. R. E. LEE,
Commanding Confederate States Army.

The results of the last week must convince you of the hopelessness of further resistance on the part of the army of northern Virginia in this struggle. I feel that it is so, and regard it as my duty to shift from myself the responsibility of any further effusion of blood by asking of you the surrender of that portion of the Confederate States Army known as the army of northern Virginia.

Lee replied the same evening, asking the terms of surrender.

Further letters were exchanged, and on April 9 the two great leaders, with members of their respective staffs, met at the McLean House at Appomattox and completed the arrangements for the surrender.

General Grant will, in my opinion, go down to posterity not alone because of his military successes but also because of his nobility as a man as displayed in his farsighted and generous treatment of General Lee and the armies of the South in the final capitulations; also because of the stand which he took against the wishes of President Andrew Johnson to have General Lee and other military leaders of the South tried for treason. I have frequently observed in speeches made in Congress by southern men that this feature of General Grant's character has apparently made a profound impression upon the South which grows as time advances.

The final result of the negotiations between General Lee and General Grant was contained in the following terms presented by General Grant:

The officers to give their individual paroles not to take up arms against the United States until properly exchanged, and each company or regimental commander to give a like parole for the men of his command. The officers to retain their side arms, private horses, and baggage. This done, each officer and man will be allowed to return to his home, not to be disturbed by the United States authority so long as they observe their paroles and the laws in force where they may reside.

It is to be remembered that at this time his armies were in complete command of the situation, and he might have insisted, had he been so disposed, upon any terms, however humiliating.

In a speech made by the Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS of Texas in the House of Representatives, April 27, 1920, this distinguished southern man, son of a Confederate soldier, made the following comment:

These terms were made with Lincoln's approval. In addition to these terms, Grant instructed his commissioners designated to receive the surrender of Lee's army to permit the private soldiers to take away the horses to reestablish themselves on the farms, and directed that the hungry men being paroled should receive the rations which Lee requested for them.

During the whole of the negotiations, those who were present tell us, and so does General Grant himself, that Lee was compelled more than once to direct the attention of General Grant to the business which had called them together. On that occasion this rugged man of many battles demonstrated a tender deference and a profound respect and sympathy for General Lee which appeals to the gratitude and to the affectionate regard for Grant of every true southern man; and not only do I feel that gratitude as a southern man but, as a citizen of this Republic who has never felt estranged from it, I realize that General Grant's conduct on that occasion, and especially during the two fateful years which followed, more than anything else has made it possible for the hearts of the southern people to thrill, as now they do, with real vital love for the selfsame flag which waved in final victory that day over Appomattox's bloody fields. The facts permit not a shadow of doubt.

Subsequently President Andrew Johnson was undoubtedly pressed from many quarters to cause trials for treason to be instituted against Gen. Robert E. Lee and other Confederate generals. In the hearings before the Judiciary Committee, House of Representatives, on July 8, 1867, General Grant was called as a witness, and at that time it was divulged that General Grant had stood between the Confederate officers and this desire to bring them to such a trial. General Grant based his opposition to such trials upon the terms that he, representing the United States, had given in the quotation that I have read. In this hearing General Grant testified, among other things, to the following:

I frequently had to intercede for General Lee and other paroled officers on the ground that their parole, so long as they obeyed the laws of the United States, protected them from arrest and trial. The President at that time occupied exactly the reverse ground, viz, that they should be tried and punished. He wanted to know when the time would come that they should be punished. I told him not so long as they obeyed the laws and complied with the stipulation. That was the ground I took.

In reading General Grant's Memoirs I was struck by the fact that with characteristic modesty he makes no mention of this very notable incident, which I believe history will determine to have been one of the most noble displays of his great and generous character.

Thus ended the great War between the States. Men of the same race and blood fought against each other. No braver or more effective armies than those of Grant and Lee ever fought against each other in the whole history of the world, and combined I believe they would have constituted the most formidable armed force ever assembled.

Four years from the day that the humble tanner of Galena left his brothers' store to preside at the war meeting, on April 15, 1861, he found himself the acclaimed hero and conqueror, and in another four years he became President of the United States, and he presided over its destinies for eight years. Was there ever more of romance crowded into a single human life?

What constituted Grant's preeminence as a soldier? In what respect did he differ from other great generals of the war? I asked these questions quite recently of "Corporal" James Tanner, widely known and beloved in the Grand Army, one of the most notable men of the Civil War now living, and who, after having both feet carried away by a connon ball at the second Battle of Bull Run in 1862, celebrated his seventy-eighth birthday on the 4th of this month, at which I had the pleasure of being present. Corporal Tanner was a warm friend of Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Logan, and other great captains of the Civil War. Tanner informed me that he once asked the same question of General Sherman. The latter smiled and said:

If there were a dozen different plans of a prospective campaign or battle lying on the table, Sheridan and I would study and discuss them a long time. We would bring out their strong features and their weak ones, and probably be quite undecided as to which was preferable. Grant would come along, glance over the different plans, and without a moment's hesitation pick out one and say, "That is the best plan," and immediately proceed to carry it out, without giving a thought to the other plans.

Gen. Charles King, in his interesting book, "The True Ulysses S. Grant," says that one evening before the memorable march to the sea Sherman and Wilson were engaged in a confidential chat, and in speaking of Grant, in his characteristic frank way, Sherman suddenly burst forth as follows:

Wilson, I am a d——d sight smarter man than Grant; I know a great deal more about war, military history, strategy, and grand tactics than he does; I know more about organization, supply and administration, and about everything else than he does; but I'll tell you where he beats me and where he beats the world. He don't care a damn for what the enemy does out of his sight, but it scares me like hell.

Adding further:

He issues his orders and does his level best to carry them out without much reference to what is going on about him, and so far experience seems to have fully justified him.

My own judgment is that Grant's supremacy as a general was due to a rare intuitive knowledge of the military strength or weakness of the situation, upon which knowledge he acted quickly and with absolute confidence. He was not vacillating, but ready to "fight it out on this line if it took all summer." He was invariably aggressive, always anticipating the enemy in attack, as he believed the striking of the first blow to be most important. This he did at Donelson and on the second day at Shiloh.

I do not think that he was indifferent to what "the enemy was doing out of his sight," but that on the other hand he had a pretty shrewd idea of what the enemy was trying to do and that his own movements were frequently for producing a psychological effect upon his opponent. That is shown in his almost invariable practice to strike first, begin the attack, and to that extent disconcert the enemy at the beginning of the battle. He even planned upon what he knew of the personal characteristics of his opponents. General Buckner, after the surrender at Donelson, said to Grant, the two having attended West Point three years with each other, that if he—Buckner—had been in command Grant would not have got up to Donelson as easy as he did.

I told him—

Said Grant in his "Memoirs"— that if he had been in command I should not have tried in the way I did.

Floyd had been in command, and Grant had little respect for his military sagacity and took a course that he would not have entered upon with Buckner in command.

On July 23, 1885, this great man passed away at Mount McGregor, N. Y. His name and his deeds have passed into history. Without question he stands as the first representative of American military genius. Accompanied by his military successes and abilities were those magnificent traits of character—nobility and integrity of soul that will ever make him in the minds of the American people not only their greatest soldier but one of their noblest citizens. The fact that to-day the North and the South are united in one common country not only by physical and political bonds but by those still more powerful bonds of brotherhood in national ideals in no small degree may be attributed to the moderation and kindness that marked his course toward the revered Lee and his soldiers at Appomattox. The spirit of war and of reprisals was abroad in the land, and it took bold courage to withstand the more radical counsels that at the time were most powerful. The military genius and exalted character of Lee and Jackson had no greater admirer than General Grant. To-day there are none living but are glad that the broad spirit of humanity, brotherhood, and high statesmanship was the controlling motive of the last notable accomplishment of Ulysses S. Grant as a soldier at the field of Appomattox.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on the order of business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there have been numerous inquiries as to the business for the balance of the week. I desire to say I do not now anticipate that we shall take up any important legislation other than the so-called blue sky law. If we conclude the consideration of that measure this evening, I shall ask unanimous consent to adjourn until Monday. If, however, we should not conclude to-day, I think we may also consider to-morrow the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. When will the river and harbor bill be permitted to come before the House for consideration?

Mr. MONDELL. As soon as gentlemen most interested shall all of them at one time be ready to have it considered. Quite a number of gentlemen interested in that bill expect to be away from the city part of next week, and out of deference to their wishes the bill will not be considered next week, but I hope it may be considered early the following week, providing the gentleman from Delaware may find it convenient to be here. He is here most all the time.

Mr. LAYTON. Well, I do not think the gentleman ought to make that remark about me, because I am always here.

Mr. MONDELL. I just remarked that the gentleman is always here.

Mr. LAYTON. I would like to ask this question: Are the gentlemen who expect to be away next week members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee?

Mr. MONDELL. I think some of them are, and other gentlemen are interested in the bill.

Mr. LAYTON. That may be true. As a matter of fact, I think I speak for the Rivers and Harbors Committee when I say that they have been ready to report and willing to report and anxious to report their bill for some time, and we can not understand why in the midst of piffling stuff transacted by the House a report on a bill by a standing committee can not be considered.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to my friend the floor leader is not always in a position to say all that he knows with regard to the desires of gentlemen relative to legislation. Nothing has been lost and nothing will be lost on river and harbor improvement by the delay so far as there has been any delay in the consideration of the measure. We are all anxious to have the bill passed, and we hope that it may be brought up week after next, but I do not think it would be convenient for quite a number of gentlemen interested to have it brought up next week.

Mr. GARNER. It is not the intention, then, of the organization in the House or in the Senate to defeat a bill at this session of Congress, as I understand it?

Mr. MONDELL. It is not. Of course, I am speaking now for the House. But I have no intimation but that the Senate expects to pass the bill promptly.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I understand, then, from the statement of the floor leader, that so far as he is concerned there will be no opposition on the part of the House leadership toward the bringing up of this bill within the next two weeks?

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all. On the contrary, personally I have been anxious to have the bill considered at the earliest possible date.

On Tuesday of next week, Mr. Speaker, we expect to take up the so-called naval bill, sometimes referred to as the "naval scrapping" bill, and following that, Calendar Wednesday will be consumed, in all probability, by the Committee on Printing; Thursday we will take up a bill authorizing the increase of the bonded indebtedness of the Philippine Islands. At present those two bills are the only two measures on the calendar for next week. In addition, however, there will be several conference reports from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman from Wyoming if I understand him to assure us that the Liberian bill will not be considered next week?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it will be considered next week.

"BLUE SKY" LEGISLATION.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10598.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Has general debate been completed on the bill?

Mr. DENISON. It has; and now we are ready for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10598, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10598) to prevent the use of the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce for transporting and for promoting or procuring the sale of securities contrary to the laws of the States, and for other purposes, and providing penalties for the violation thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful after the passage of this act for any person at any place in any State, Territory, or District of the United States to deposit in, or cause to be deposited in, or to be carried or delivered by the United States mails, or to deposit with, or cause to be deposited with, or to be carried, transported, or delivered by any railroad company, express company, or other agency of interstate commerce any security or securities for sale or delivery to any person in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States in which it is at that time unlawful to sell, offer for sale, tender for sale or delivery to such person, or solicit from such person, subscriptions to or orders for, such security or securities.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois about the phraseology in lines 12 and 14. It says it shall be unlawful for any person to deposit, and in line 12, "or to be carried or delivered by the United States mails." Should not that be "cause to be carried or delivered by the United States mails"?

Mr. DENISON. In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will state that our intention was that the words "to be carried" follow and are connected with the word "cause" in line 11, reading: "or cause to be deposited with, or to be carried, transported, or delivered by."

Mr. WALSH. But there is a comma in between them. That relates back to the words to the effect that it shall be unlawful for any person.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. DENISON. In other words, ought not the word "or" in line 12 be eliminated as soon as the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is adopted? Would not the elimination of the word "or" simplify the language?

Mr. WALSH. I think you ought to put the word "cause" in there in both places. It would clarify the language, having it read "or cause to be deposited in or cause to be carried or delivered by the United States mails or deposited with, or cause to be deposited with, or cause to be carried, transported, or delivered."

Mr. DENISON. Well, the gentleman from Massachusetts has the idea of the committee exactly. It is just a mere question of punctuation, I think. If the gentleman from Massachusetts thinks that that would clarify it and better carry out the purpose, I think the committee would have no objection to that amendment if he wishes to offer it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WALSH. In line 12, after the first word "or," insert the word "cause," and in line 14, after the first word "or," insert the word "cause."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 12, after the first word "or," insert the word "cause," and in line 14 after the first word "or," insert the word "cause."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful after the passage of this act for any person at any place in any State, Territory, or District of the United States to deposit in, or cause to be deposited in, or to be carried or delivered by the United States mails, or to deposit with, or cause to be deposited with, or to be carried, transmitted, transported, or delivered by any railroad company, express company, telegraph company, telephone company, or other agency of interstate commerce, any letter, message, postal card, circular, or pamphlet intended (1) to tender for sale or delivery, directly or indirectly, any security or securities; or intended (2) to solicit subscriptions to or orders for such security or securities; or intended (3) to procure advertisement for sale of such security or securities in a newspaper or other publication, when in either case such letter, message, postal card, circular, or pamphlet is addressed, sent, directed, or consigned to any person at any place in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States in which it is at that time unlawful to sell, offer for sale, tender for sale or delivery to such person, or solicit from such person subscriptions to or orders for such security or securities.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] desires to offer a bill and report. For that purpose, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10598 and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONFERENCE REPORT—AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ANDERSON, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

"BLUE SKY" LEGISLATION.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10598.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10598, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The title was read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the same amendments as those which were adopted in the previous section to line 25, after the first word "or" insert "cause," on page 2, and on page 3, in line 2, after the first word "or," insert the word "cause."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 25, after the first word "or" insert the word "cause," and on page 3, line 2, after the first word "or" insert the word "cause."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, that presents the same language, and the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois who introduced this bill why it is that in the concluding paragraph of this section they omit the provision that it shall be a violation to procure advertisements for the sale of such security in a newspaper or other publication in a State in which at that time it is unlawful to procure advertisements for sale of such security?

Beginning on line 15 it refers back to the numbered phrases "in which at that time it is unlawful to sell, offer for sale, tender for sale, or delivery to such person, or solicit from such person subscriptions to or orders for such security or securities." Now, you omit the language "in which it is at that time unlawful to procure advertisement for sale of such security or securities in a newspaper or other publication."

Mr. DENISON. The reason, Mr. Chairman, is that the committee did not think it was necessary to put that in, and then we were not aware of any State that had a law of that kind.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman understand that while the State prohibits the sale of these wild-cat securities and the securing of supscriptions for them they permit them to advertise just the same?

Mr. DENISON. None of the States prohibits the selling of securities in that phraseology. I will say to the gentleman that the laws of the States simply prohibit the sale of all securities, except such as may be exempted under the provisions of their acts, until certain provisions of the laws shall have been complied with. Those provisions generally consist of filing certain information with the respective secretaries of state or other officials under the State statutes and procuring permission from them to sell the securities within the States. I am not aware of any State law which prohibits the advertising in newspapers of any class of securities.

Mr. WALSH. Then it would seem to me that if there should be some States—and I am quite sure there are—that not only prohibit the sale of these worthless securities, that not only prohibit the soliciting of subscriptions for them but also prohibit advertising them for sale in the newspapers published in the States—if there be such laws prohibiting such advertisements in newspapers published in the State, why should not a national law be enacted toward cooperating with the States to prevent that, just the same as it is enacted cooperating with them to prevent the sale and soliciting of subscriptions?

Mr. DENISON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think if the gentleman from Massachusetts will just pause to think for a moment he will see that that would not be necessary, because if the State law prohibited the publication of such advertisement in that State there would be no need for the Federal law to prohibit it.

Mr. WALSH. If the State law prohibits the sale, why should we pass a Federal statute?

Mr. DENISON. This bill is to prevent the violation of the State law within the State by persons living outside of the State and who are unwilling to go into the State.

Mr. WALSH. That is not all that this act is for.

Mr. DENISON. This bill does not prohibit any act which the State itself can punish for. This bill is intended to prohibit violation of State laws from without the State by means of the Federal agencies.

Mr. WALSH. How can your State law punish anybody for using the United States mails for carrying a worthless stock from the northeast corner of the State to the southwest corner?

Mr. DENISON. They can not; neither does this act.

Mr. WALSH. They can not?

Mr. DENISON. No. This act applies only to interstate commerce and not to intrastate commerce, so that this act is intended to prevent the procuring of advertisements in one State by a person in another State where the person could not sell the stock lawfully.

Mr. LONDON. The mailing of a letter within the State will not constitute a crime?

Mr. DENISON. No. To the States, according to the theory of this legislation, must be left the protection of their own citizens from the commission of offenses within their own territory, and the Federal Government ought to limit its activity to prohibiting the violation of State laws by means of the agencies of interstate commerce, which are Federal agencies.

Mr. WALSH. I have a strong suspicion that I have not made myself entirely clear to the gentleman from Illinois. I would like just to read this section with a hop, skip, and jump, if I may, so that the gentleman will see what I have in mind:

That it shall be unlawful * * * for any person * * * to deposit in * * * the United States mails * * * any letter * * * intended——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH (continuing reading):

any letter * * * intended (1) to tender for sale * * * any security or securities; (2) to solicit subscriptions to or orders for such securities; or intended (3) to procure advertisement for sale of such security or securities in a newspaper or other publication * * * at any place in which it is at that time unlawful to sell * * * or solicit from such person subscriptions for such security.

You leave out there the words—in which it is at that time unlawful to procure advertisements for sale in a newspaper or other publication.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I would state for the benefit of the gentleman from Massachusetts that so far as I am informed—and I have made a pretty careful study of this matter—there are no State laws which prohibit the advertisement of these securities. But the thing we are trying to get at, after all, and to prevent, after all, in this act is the sale of securities. We do not care so much about the details as that we are trying to prevent the sale of securities. We make it unlawful for a person in one State to send a circular or letter or prospectus to another person or to solicit advertisements in that State of a stock which it is unlawful to sell in that State. If we make it unlawful to send from one State to another a letter soliciting the advertisement, I think we will accomplish all that we can accomplish in this act. That has been considered very carefully by the securities officials of all these various States, and it is their judgment that this will accomplish the purpose we are seeking to accomplish.

Mr. WALSH. If it is unlawful under the law of New York, for instance, to sell these worthless securities this act will close the United States mails to a resident of the State of Pennsylvania who desires to send a letter to one of the New York newspapers to have an advertisement put in such paper relative to the sale of such worthless securities?

Mr. DENISON. That is the idea exactly. I think that will accomplish the purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should move to strike out this whole section, which is the gist of the bill, if I did not think that would come up on the final argument and vote.

I wish to say just a word about this bill. A former chancellor of my State, a most strict and severe man, said to me one day that the legislative crime of the century was the multiplication of crimes; and this is one of those cases. If a man is trying to sell a stock or any securities that it happens to be unlawful to sell in another State—for instance, in the State of New York—although the man, say, in South Carolina does not know anything about the laws of New York, if he sends a letter addressed to a man in the State of New York concerning that stock it renders him liable to a fine of $2,000 or to imprisonment for not more than two years, and for a second offense to a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, and he is to be tried in a United States court, either in South Carolina or New York.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If I am wrong; yes.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman think a man in Pennsylvania ought to violate the New York law any more than a man in New York?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. He ought not to violate it if he knows anything about it; but a man in Pennsylvania or South Carolina is not charged with knowledge of the laws of the State of New York. That is one objection.

The second objection is that the United States courts are now overwhelmed with cases arising under the bootlegging laws, where there is the taking of something substantial from one State into another, and their dockets are so overcrowded that they do not see any possibility of trying those cases for years, and they might not be able to try a man within 10 years on an indictment for such a case as this.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am making points, and I will be glad to yield if the gentleman can contradict that point or anything that I have said about it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to ask the gentleman a question about his argument on that point.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to ask what right a man has, when he is a resident of another State, to do business in the State of New York except in conformity with the laws of that State? What real right has a man who is not a resident of a State to do business in that State except in conformity with its laws?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think I have a right to write a letter if I tell the truth.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What right does a citizen of Pennsylvania have to do business in New York except in compliance with the laws of the State of New York?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am not saying that this law is unconstitutional. We have had a great many things held constitutional. I am saying that this bill is improvident and that it is tyrannical, because a man can not know all that is going on in another State all the while. None of us can know all the laws of the different States.

One thing more. This interference with business does not always work out in the best way. These "blue sky laws" give State commissioners the right to say "amen," to say "O. K." to one set of securities and to say "You can not deal in them" as to another set of securities. That was the principle adopted by the Paris Bourse. If a security is admitted upon the Paris Bourse it is in a way guaranteed as being the right sort. We do not do that on the New York Stock Exchange or the Chicago Stock Exchange. It is simply a statement that it is a fair security to be dealt in. The result of it was that when the Memphis, El Paso & Pacific Railway Co., whose line ran only across the State of Texas, put $4,000,000 of bonds on the Paris Bourse with fraudulent statements that they were guaranteed by the United States, and that they were backed by land, when the State of Texas had revoked the grant of land, and when that certification was secured by bribing the chief officers of the Paris Bourse with commissions on those securities, the result was that it nearly overthrew the French Government. And when the Panama Canal securities were put on the Paris Bourse in just the same way, it did overthrow two or three administrations of the French Government. We can not trust the business of this country to the certification of any commission to say "You shall or shall not deal in such a security," because the commission can not know about it, and it is not fair to tell people who do know about it that they must go all over the United States—in some small ventures of theirs, we will say oil wells, or whatever the venture may be—and get a permit from each and every State at the cost of paying attorneys, arranging and getting evidence, and all that sort of expense in 48 States, before they can sell any of their stock. I say it is tyrannical and unjust.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I should like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for an additional five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee. I will not take the whole five minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does not the gentleman from New Jersey think that if we enact this law a man will have a greater security and feel much more secure when he buys securities than he now does?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not.

Mr. McKENZIE. In other words, will it not put the stamp of approval upon them?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not think so. I do not think the stamp of approval of a State board, after a while, when they get to dealing with this business, will amount to very much. I do not think it ought to be asked for anyhow. If a man has property, whether it is shares in a mine that he owns himself or shares of stock that he has bought, he has a right to dispose of it if he tells no lies. Remember, I am not talking constitutional law. I am talking good sense. In this country we are not yet satisfied to become the subjects of police regulation as to all our transactions, whether they be stocks, tangible property, or otherwise. We are not ready to submit ourselves to commissions of all the various States, and when a State happens to pass a law of that sort we are not ready to say that all the powers of the United States shall be used to prevent a man from even sending a letter into such a State, when he has the right to send a letter by mail.

I have spoken on this section. I do not move to strike it out, though it is the gist of the bill, for I foresee that when you get to the particulars you will run into a great many discussions as to those particulars. I object to the principle which multiplies crimes which never can be punished, first, because the United States courts have no time to take care of them; second, because it is an oppression to take a man into those courts; third, because grand juries will not indict a man outside of the State and say that he is certainly to be charged with knowledge of the laws of another State; fourth, because it is a scheme of police regulation such as is foreign to the genius of American institutions, and which I never will stand for.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any of the following classes of securities:

(a) Any security issued or guaranteed by the United States or any Territory or insular possession thereof, or by the District of Columbia, or by any State or political subdivision or agency thereof.

(b) Any security issued or guaranteed by any foreign Government with which the United States is at the time of the sale or offer for sale thereof maintaining diplomatic relations, or by any State, Province, or political subdivision thereof having the power of taxation or assessment.

(c) Any security issued by a national bank or by any Federal land bank or joint-stock land bank or national farm loan association under the provisions of the Federal farm loan act of July 17, 1916, or by the War Finance Corporation, or by any corporation created or acting as an instrumentality of the Government of the United States pursuant to authority granted by the Congress of the United States: Provided, That such corporation shall be subject to supervision or regulation by the Government of the United States.

(d) Any security issued or guaranteed either as to principal, interest, or dividend by a corporation owning or operating a railroad or any other public service utility: Provided, That such corporation is subject to regulation or supervision either as to its rates and charges or as to the issue of its own securities by a public commission, board, or officer of the Government of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or insular possession thereof, or of the District of Columbia, or of the Dominion of Canada or any Province thereof; also equipment trust certificates or equipment notes or bonds based on chattel mortgages, leases, or agreements for conditional sale of cars, motive power, or other rolling stock mortgaged, leased, or sold to or furnished for the use of or upon a railroad or other public-service utility corporation, or equipment trust certificates, or equipment notes or bonds where the ownership or title of such equipment is pledged or retained in accordance with the provisions of the laws of the United States, or of any State, or of the Dominion of Canada, to secure the payment of such equipment trust certificates, bonds, or notes; also bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness issued by a holding corporation and secured by collateral consisting of any securities hereinabove in this clause 4 described: Provided, That the collateral securities equal in par value the par value of the bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness so secured. If any portion of the collateral securities consists of stock of no par value, then for the purpose of this subdivision such stock shall be deemed to have a par value equal to the price at which such stock was authorized to be issued by the public commission having supervision of the issue of such stock.

(e) Any security issued by a corporation organized exclusively for educational, benevolent, fraternal, charitable, or reformatory purposes, and not for pecuniary profit.

(f) Securities issued, outstanding, distributed, and fully listed upon any organized stock exchange having an established meeting place in a city of over 500,000 population according to the last preceding United States census and providing facilities for the use of its members in the purchase and sale of securities listed by such exchange, and securities senior thereto or evidences of indebtedness guaranteed by companies the common capital stock of which is so listed: Provided, That actual transactions on such organized exchange have occurred during each of the preceding 20 years in the purchase and sale of United States bonds or other bonds of any of the classes exempted herein from the provisions of this act: And provided further, That such stock exchange requires financial statements to be submitted at the time of such listing and annually thereafter.

(g) Any security issued by a State bank, trust company, or savings institution incorporated under the laws of and subject to the examination, supervision, and control of any State or of the United States or of any insular possession thereof.

(h) Any bonds or notes secured by a first-mortgage lien on real estate or leasehold situated in the United States, when the entire mortgage, together with all the bonds or notes secured thereby, are sold or offered for sale to a single purchaser or at a single sale. Also, any bonds or notes secured by first-mortgage lien upon agricultural lands improved with farm buildings and used and valuable principally for agricultural purposes or upon city or village real estate or leaseholds in the United States improved with buildings used principally to produce income through rental: Provided, That the par value of such bonds and notes does not exceed 60 per cent of the then fair value of the property so mortgaged to secure the same.

(i) Negotiable promissory notes or commercial paper: Provided, That such issue of notes or commercial paper mature in no more than 12 months from date of issue and shall be issued within three months after the date of sale.

(j) Securities issued by a corporation, firm, trust, partnership, or association owning a property, business, or industry which has been in continuous operation not less than 5 years, and which has shown during a period of not less than 3 years nor more than 10 years prior to the close of its last fiscal year preceding the offering of such securities, average annual net earnings, after deducting all prior charges, including the charges upon prior securities not to be retired out of the proceeds of sale, as follows:

(1) In the case of interest-bearing securities not less than one and one-half times the annual interest charge thereon and upon all other outstanding interest-bearing obligations of equal rank.

(2) In the case of preferred stock, not less than one and one-half times the annual dividend on such preferred stock and on all other outstanding stock of equal rank.

(3) In the case of common stock not less than 6 per cent upon all outstanding common stock of equal rank, together with the amount of common stock then offered for sale by the issuer, reckoned upon the price at which such stock is then offered for sale or sold: Provided, That such corporation, firm, trust, partnership, or association, after application of the proceeds of the sale of such securities to the business of the issuer, has assets taken at their fair value (not including patents, copyrights, secret processes, and formulæ, good will, trademarks, trade brands, franchises, and other like intangible property), as follows, namely:

(a) In the case of evidences of indebtedness, assets equal to or exceeding 125 per cent of the par value of such evidences of indebtedness, and all other obligations of equal or prior rank outstanding and not to be retired out of the proceeds of the sale of such securities.

(b) In the case of preferred stock, assets of a value equal to or exceeding 125 per cent of the par value of the aggregate amount of all outstanding preferred stock of equal rank and the stock then offered for sale, after the deduction from such assets of all indebtedness which will be existing and all stock of senior rank which will be outstanding after the application of the proceeds of the preferred stock offered for sale.

(c) In the case of common stock, assets of a value equal to or exceeding 100 per cent of the aggregate of all outstanding common stock of equal rank and the stock then offered for sale, reckoned at the price at which such stock is offered for sale or sold, after the deduction from such assets of all indebtedness which will be existing and all stock of senior rank which will be outstanding after the application of the proceeds of the common stock offered for sale.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 24, strike out all of lines 24 and 25, and on page 6, strike out lines 1 to 13, inclusive.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered on the old theory that sauce that is good for the goose is good for the gander. As I understand the provision of this paragraph that I move to strike out, it would exempt securities that are listed upon the stock exchange in cities having a population of over 500,000 people. Now, there is no test made as to the issue of stock; the stock is not required to qualify. It is only required that it be listed on the stock exchange of the larger cities. In other words, if, for instance, it happens to be listed on the stock exchange of the city of Baltimore, so far as this bill shows, it does not come under the provisions of this act, but if it happens to be listed on the stock exchange in Denver or Salt Lake City, or some city of less than 500,000, irrespective of the stringent requirement of those stock exchanges, it comes under the provisions of this act.

Now, by what logic is the stock listed on the larger stock exchanges excluded? If the issue were to qualify—that is, whether the stock is qualified stock—there might be some argument, but to have population alone as the only test seems to me entirely unfair. I am reliably informed that, for instance in my own State, it is estimated that of the stocks sent into that State probably two-thirds come from Chicago, New York, and Boston. And yet for that large percentage of stocks coming into that State from these places the provisions of this act do not apply. There is no supervision made of them, so far as this act is concerned.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman read this subdivision as applying to stocks which shall be issued after the passage of this act?

Mr. COLTON. No; I am not saying that, but if they happen to be listed in Baltimore or other large cities, they do not come under the provisions of this act. If the Baltimore exchange has been selling Government bonds for 20 years, they do not come under the provisions of this act, whereas if the stocks are listed in the capital of my own State, that has just as rigid regulations, as I am reliably informed, as the stock exchanges in the larger cities, they come under the provisions of this act. It seems to me an unjust discrimination in favor of the larger cities against the smaller cities. I grant you if there were some qualifying test as to the issue there would be nothing to my argument, but if the restrictions are as strict and as rigid in the smaller cities as they are in the larger cities, why should the smaller cities come under the provisions of the act and the larger cities be excluded? I am making my argument simply on that proposition. I am in sympathy with the purpose generally of this bill, but I see no consistent reason why it should not be applied to all stocks in other cities in the United States. What is good for Denver or Salt Lake is good for New York, Chicago, and Boston. Our people are just as honest and are seeking to do just as legitimate business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. COLTON. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLTON. In my State we have a stock exchange, and we pride ourselves that it is honest; it is operated by men who are trying to do a legitimate business, and they feel that if they are required to come under the provisions of this act that the stock exchanges of other cities in the Nation ought to come under its provisions.

Further, our blue-sky commission—the Public Securities Commission—will have no way of regulating in any way from one-half to two-thirds of the stock that comes into the State, because they come from the stock exchanges of the large cities.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman's amendment would eliminate this section?

Mr. COLTON. Yes; and let everybody come in under the law on equal terms.

Mr. BURTNESS. Is not the situation practically this: The gentleman referred to the stock exchange of Denver; are not the stocks listed on the stock exchange of Denver, or a large per cent of them, also listed on the stock exchanges of New York and Chicago and Boston, so that those stocks sold in Denver would be exempt from the provision of the law? While if the gentleman's amendment carried, none of those stocks would be exempt?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has again expired.

Mr. BURTNESS. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Utah be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLTON. That is the very point that I am getting at. While I think the gentleman's statement, if I understand him, is true, we have no means at all, even in the future, of regulating this stock that comes into our States from these exchanges, from cities of over 500,000 population. While it is true that a part of our stock would not come under the provisions of the bill if it were listed on the exchanges of the large cities, it would be a minor part. The main point is that there is no way of regulating or at least bringing the stock that is sold upon the exchanges of the larger cities within the provisions of this act, unless this paragraph is stricken out.

Mr. BURTNESS. Of course, the purpose of this law is not to exempt certain cities but to exempt certain stocks that have recognized values, and the only way in which to draw the arbitrary line, I think, as it appeared to the committee, is to exempt certain stocks that are recognized generally throughout the country as having standard values, and it seems to me that the gentleman by his amendment may be jumping from the frying pan into the fire.

Mr. COLTON. No; I think not. It seems to me it is entirely practical, and the gentleman's question would indicate that he thinks it is not possible to qualify the issue of stock. The stock could be qualified, the issue could be qualified, without adopting as an arbitrary standard the size of the city in which the stock is listed.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. What is the necessity for this exemption? Any stock that is not fraudulent should be permitted to be sold. Why make an exception in favor of certain stocks enumerated in section 4?

Mr. COLTON. I do not think there ought to be an exception, and I think particularly that the size of the city ought not to determine the basis of the exception.

Mr. LONDON. Does it not look as though this law undertakes to punish petty larceny but permits grand larceny?

Mr. COLTON. That is the way it looks to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has again expired.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, under permission granted, I desire to insert as part of my remarks the following excerpt from the hearings on this bill held February 15, 16, 17, 18, and 20, 1922, at pages 85 and 86:

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman, throughout the history of this blue-sky legislation in the several States the fundamental stumblingblock has been the protection of the investing public against fraudulent securities upon the one hand, without imposing an undue burden on legitimate business on the other hand. The task has been to steer a course which will accomplish the one purpose without imposing an unnecessary burden as an incident of it. That is what we are up against right now in connection with this feature of the bill.

In the efforts of these gentlemen to accomplish that purpose I have no doubt they are just as anxious not to interfere with legitimate business as we are anxious that they shall not be permitted to do so if they did want to. They can not have any possible motive in wanting to interfere with legitimate business. Such laws in the end would be their own undoing and would pull the temple down on their own heads without having accomplished their purpose, because if they do amount to undue restrictions upon legitimate enterprise the laws will not last very long.

Now, in an effort to give free access to all the means of intercommunication it is very laudable for these gentlemen to say that securities that are recognized in the business world as having integrity and stability because they have been passed upon by institutions of recognized integrity shall be accepted as such. That is a fine effort, but in the application of it we must be careful not to put the seal of congressional approval upon an institution in Chicago, New York, or Boston which to-day may meet with our approval but which to-morrow may not.

This is permanent legislation. Though I understand the task will be difficult, I would rather see the Congress set up some standard of integrity in securities and have some tribunal, some administrative agency, determine the merit of any given security for the protection of the public than to premiumize the integrity of any exchange, I do not care whether it is located in Chicago or where it may be located. It is a dangerous thing for Congress to say now that because Chicago, New York, and Boston are transacting exchange business within the sphere of their activities honestly and upon a safe business basis we are going to put the permanent seal of our approval upon them and say that we know that they are going to continue to do that, and that consequently we will approve in advance what they do hereafter, and at the same time give governmental recognition to such enterprises while denying it to other concerns engaged in the same activities.

Judge Webster has very clearly and forcibly set forth my position.

Mr. SWEET. And who passes upon the question of whether or not a stock exchange outside of the Chicago Stock Exchange meets with these requirements?

Mr. DENISON. Nobody. The blue sky law itself does that. For instance, in Illinois, among other exemptions are the securities which are listed on the New York, Boston, and Chicago stock exchanges. And the Georgia blue sky law, I believe, also lists the same stock exchanges, and says that the stocks that are listed on those stock exchanges will be exempted from the provisions of the State law. Nobody passes upon anything; they just pick out those stock exchanges, and say, "We exempt stocks listed on those exchanges."

Now, inasmuch as these States, certain of them, have specifically recognized the national character of these three stock exchanges and the high standards of their listing, we thought that in the interest of not interfering with these well-known industrial securities—and that is all this provision applies to—we ought to exempt from the provisions of this act, so as to permit free their commerce between the States, so far as the National Government was concerned we ought to exempt such stocks as are listed upon these few stock exchanges that are national in their character and have such well-recognized standards for listing. It seems to me, that there ought not to be any misunderstanding, and I think that if the committee will study the provision of the bill as it was originally drawn they will see that it is not intended to discriminate against any stock exchange. It is simply a recognition of the high standard of these few really national stock exchanges.

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. DENISON, I follow your line of thought, I think, with perfect clearness. I have not any doubt at all that this provision of the bill was not designed for the purpose of conferring any special favor upon the enumerated exchanges, but I am not at all sure that it will not have the effect of conferring a distinct benefit upon them. If you say that the exchanges in Chicago, New York, and Boston have attained that distinction in that line of enterprise that the Government of the United States is willing to place the solemn approval of its law-making body upon them and to say that their securities shall have free currency throughout all parts of the Nation without further check, or let, or hindrance, do you not by implication say that other exchanges than those do not measure up to that high standard, and consequently their securities shall not have the same free access to commerce that the securities of the three enumerated ones have?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; it will do that.

Mr. WEBSTER. Well, is it fair to discriminate against the exchanges, even though that is not your purpose?

Mr. DENISON. Well, that is because of the essentially recognized fact that they have fixed the standards themselves and the others have not.

Mr. WEBSTER. You do not say that the standard of eligibility to the agencies of interstate shipment shall be the standards of these exchanges. You say that the stock must be actually listed there. You do not make the standard set up by these exchanges the standard by which some tribunal shall determine the goodness or the badness of a given security, but you say the actual fact of listing determines it. Does not that put a premium upon getting your stocks listed in these exchanges, so that they will have a preference?

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate fully the situation of my friend from Utah [Mr. COLTON]. He has been receiving communications, of course, from certain mining interests that feel that this bill might prejudice some of their rights or interests, but he is wholly mistaken. I want to state for him that he has been looking after the interests of the people of his district very carefully. I have consulted with him a number of times about this provision. I know he has been deeply concerned about it. There is nothing in the bill that will be prejudicial to any of the legitimate interests of his district or State.

Briefly, now, about this exemption. As I stated on the last day when this bill was under consideration, we have provided various exemptions in the bill, and what we are seeking to do by this legislation is to make the bill so drastic that we will catch the fraudulent promoter and yet make it so liberal that we will not injure anyone who is engaged in the sale of legitimate securities. Those are the two ideas and purposes we had to try to assemble and express in legislative form.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. To catch the crooked man and not to unduly interfere with or obstruct the man or company that has legitimate securities to market. I would like to make this statement first, and then I shall be glad to yield. The problem before us was to harmonize those two ideas. In sections 2 and 3 we have provided certain prohibitions and in sections 4 and 5 we have provided exemptions which will exempt various classes of securities and transactions which experience and study and observation have shown are reasonably free from fraud or serious loss.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. I appreciate what the gentleman has said, and I think he is perfectly honest; I know he is, in his contention; but is there any guaranty that all of the stock listed on these exchanges is not tainted with fraud?

Mr. DENISON. I will answer the question, but I want first to make a preliminary statement. We have provided in these various exemptions for the exemption of various classes of securities which experience has shown are free from fraud. There is a class of securities which, as I stated the other day, have already been issued or are outstanding and are distributed and in the hands of the public. Those securities are now in the hands of third persons, and the issuing companies are no longer concerned about them. They have sold them, they have gotten their money, and the securities are in the hands of third persons. In drafting this bill we wanted to provide an exemption for securities of that character already issued and outstanding about which the issuing companies are no longer particularly concerned. Millions, billions of dollars are invested in that class of securities; in fact, a large part of our wealth is daily invested in that class of securities, and there is trading in them to the extent of millions of dollars every day on the great markets of the country. We must provide an exemption that will exempt that class of security. In surveying the field and trying to arrive at appropriate language or standards for exempting that class of securities, the best that could be conceived and framed in legislative form is the exemption which is now under discussion. We have exempted the securities that are fully listed on a certain class of stock exchanges.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. As I said in a former discussion of this bill, I am in thorough sympathy with the purpose of the committee, but there is one thing that bothers me about the matter. What effect will this have upon the exploitation of the mineral resources of the United States? In asking that question I want to follow it by this statement: Everyone knows that whether it be oil or coal or copper or silver or lead or what not, for the most part all stocks are speculative in the beginning.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. Will this prevent speculative enterprises from being pursued?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all; in fact, the Illinois blue sky law, for instance, provides for the granting of permission to sell speculative stocks, but you have to plainly designate them as speculative, so that nobody will be defrauded.

Mr. LAYTON. In other words, here is what I am trying to get at: Here is an individual who thinks that he has discovered an outcropping of mineral wealth. He wants to determine whether he has gotten anything. He can not get any money except by the sale of stocks, sometimes as low as a cent a share—I have seen it sold as low as that. No rich man or banker will advance him the money, and the only way that he can get the money is to appeal to the speculative element that lies in people generally, and in that way he may be enabled to get together ten or fifteen thousand dollars and sink a shaft. Will this law prevent that development?

Mr. DENISON. I will say this in answer to the gentleman: Thirty-eight States have passed laws to protect their citizens against fraudulent securities. Now, we start with that assumption, and if you sell your stock, such as my friend from Delaware has just described, to anyone in those States, you have to go before the officials of those States and qualify them and get permission to sell them. You have to make a statement of your assets and liabilities and your method of doing business, and how much commission you are paying, and how much money realized from the sale of the stock is going into the enterprise, and make a showing to the State officials that your enterprise is free from fraud; and you ought to make that kind of a showing.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. And if you do not do it, you ought not to be permitted to impose your securities upon the people of the country. I yield.

Mr. LAYTON. Some of the most valuable mining properties of the United States did not have a dollar in the treasury when they began; it was purely speculative. They got money for exploration purposes by the issuing of stock on chance.

Mr. DENISON. I will say to the gentleman from Delaware there is no law in any State that I know of that prevents anybody who wants to gamble in stock from doing so, but there are laws which prevent promoters from selling their stocks and other securities to the people without disclosing to them the facts and full information showing that they are free from fraud. Everyone, it seems to me, who wishes to do business in a State ought to respect the fraudulent securities law of that State just the same as any other law. And I think that mining companies ought to do so the same as anyone else. Mining companies should be willing to comply with the laws of other States just as they have to do with respect to the laws of their own State.

Mr. COLTON. If the gentleman will yield again. Unfortunately, I was called out and I am not sure I heard the gentleman's explanation; but I want to be perfectly fair in this matter. As I understand your bill, this paragraph I have moved to strike out would exempt any stock from the provisions of the bill that is listed upon, say, the three national stock exchanges of the United States. Now, as I understand the gentleman, the only test is whether they are listed, irrespective of the merits of the stock at all?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. Now I will explain that to the gentleman. Those who are charged with the administration of the various State securities laws, and there are 39 of them, those securities officials have made a careful study of all the stock exchanges of the country and they know what the requirements are for the listing of securities; they have investigated that and they have found that certain stock exchanges have requirements for listing that are more rigid than the securities laws of most of the States. Take, for example, the New York Stock Exchange——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LAYTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes; this is a very important discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAYTON. Let me ask the gentleman a question, and I will not bother him any more. It is this: As far as that is concerned—the point that the gentleman just mentioned—they will not list anything on the New York Exchange until it has a value?

Mr. DENISON. Certainly.

Mr. LAYTON. An ascertained value.

Mr. DENISON. Certainly.

Mr. LAYTON. What are you going to do with the vast mineral wealth of the United States under such circumstances as that?

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman from Delaware has asked two or three times in regard to that, and I am going to come to that directly if I can. I was discussing this question of the stock exchanges. It has been found, I think, in reference to the New York Stock Exchange, that before a security can be listed on that exchange those offering it have to go before the governing board and make a showing that is as rigid and as exhaustive and as exacting as any of the "blue-sky" laws of any of the States; and because they have found that to be the case there are a number of the different States that exempt stocks which are listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. COLTON. Well, that is——

Mr. DENISON. Let me state this: In the preparation of this bill I have consulted with the National Association of Securities Commissioners of the country, members of securities commissions of all the 39 different States.

I have been governed largely by their judgment and their observation and their study of this matter. They know which stock exchanges they can afford to accept and which they can not. Now, there are a great number of stock exchanges that are trying to establish rigid requirements for listing, but this matter can only be settled, gentlemen of the committee, through a long course of years and experience. And besides, there are but a few stock exchanges that are national in character and scope. You take the New York Stock Exchange, for instance, and the stock that is fully listed on that exchange is sold every day in open market by actual sales and purchases, and the prices that the stocks bring are published in practically all the metropolitan newspapers in the United States, so that any person who reads the papers can look at his paper every morning and see what the market price is of stocks that are fully listed on the New York Stock Exchanges. There are other stock exchanges in the country that are only local in character. There is no trading on those exchanges that is of national scope, and so we have got to avoid exempting stock exchanges that are more or less local.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman answer the question I propounded to him? We know about the fact that the stock exchanges do not list anything unless at the time they are listed they have an ascertained value, but how about the chance for speculative exploitation? How does this bill affect those propositions?

Mr. DENISON. This is the way. These new enterprises that are just starting out and have no established value and have not been listed on any of the larger stock exchanges and are not otherwise exempted, the concerns that issue stocks under those circumstances must go before the securities officials of the State in which they wish to sell them and make the showing before those officials that the stock is free from fraud, and get permission to sell them.

Mr. LAYTON. In that State?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Then they will have to send it to 39 States?

Mr. DENISON. They will if they want to do business in 39 States.

Mr. LAYTON. In that way they never will get the money.

Mr. DENISON. Then they ought not to have the money.

Mr. LAYTON. In that case you would rob the American people of billions of wealth.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman from Delaware think the laws of the different States ought to be respected?

Mr. LAYTON. I am not talking about that.

Mr. DENISON. I am.

Mr. LAYTON. I am talking about the advisability of the passage of this measure so far as the exploitation of natural resources is concerned.

Mr. DENISON. This bill will not interfere in the least. It will stop the flotation of a lot of fraudulent and worthless securities that are put upon the public in the name and under the guise of developing the natural resources. That is what it will do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I agree with all of these gentlemen who have lauded the purposes of this proposed legislation, but I regret that after a somewhat careful examination of the bill I have come to the conclusion that it ought not to be enacted into law. The most important thing to the people of the United States is their personal liberty. The mail is the means of communication between men. It is a matter of right to everybody. It is as large a personal right as to carry on conversation with your neighbor.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Is it a personal right to send obscene matter through the mails?

Mr. STEENERSON. No, sir.

Mr. EVANS. Is it a personal right to commit, through the mails, a fraud that you could not commit outside?

Mr. STEENERSON. I am coming to that. The gentleman's questions show that he is laboring under the same confusion that the author of this bill and those who support it labor under. The object of this bill is to accomplish indirectly something that Congress can not accomplish directly. We have had this kind of legislation before Congress for the last 20 years that I have been a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It is a distinction between those things which can be done and those things which can not be done. I was a member of the subcommittee that examined the witnesses on the so-called Reed amendment when it passed the Post Office Committee. It was an act to exclude from the mails newspapers carrying liquor advertisements into dry States, and I might say that that act is evidently the model of this one. They have a great deal of language in common. That is the original proposition. I think no doubt that the act will be sustained, although it has never been before the Supreme Court. The only part that has been before the Supreme Court is the so-called Reed amendment, which applied the same doctrine to transportation in interstate commerce either by automobile or railroad, and was sustained as a matter of law. But there was at very nearly the same time another bill that was before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, which was debated a great deal, aimed at the newspaper called the Menace. In substance, that bill directed that the Postmaster General should be authorized to refuse permission to carry in the mail any publication that was issued by a person who had theretofore been guilty of transmitting scurrilous, obscene, or libelous matter through the mails. In other words, he was authorized to refuse the mails to that man in order to punish him for something he had done previously. However, after an exhaustive examination of the authorities, Judge Moon and I both agreed, as did the rest of the committee, to not report the bill. But it led to an inquiry that I think brought out the distinction between what can be done and what can not be done.

Now, the leading case on this subject of the power of Congress to exclude things from the mails is the case in re Jackson, Ninety-sixth United States—the lottery case. That was attacked because they said that Congress was there doing something by indirection which it could not do directly—precisely the point that I will speak of in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairmain, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. That lottery act was sustained on the ground that Congress could in this way by indirection prohibit the sale of lottery tickets, because lottery was a matter that was demoralizing to the people, just the same as intoxicating liquors are demoralizing to the people. And as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] lately suggested, they have, of course, always framed laws against carrying obscene matter in the mail and against carrying matter in furtherance of fraudulent schemes in the mail. Neither is the carrying of advertisements or proposals for the sale of intoxicants or matter injurious to morals or public health. The subject of the prohibited correspondence is for all that found in the bill perfectly honest and proper. Its only fault is that its sale has not been authorized in the State where the letter is to be delivered. Then, again, the proposed law is to apply to some mailers and not to others. If it is a book or a stock exchange, and so forth, it is exempt, but if it is a broker engaged in selling securities the law applies. If it is an individual not so engaged, he is exempt.

Exemption (c):

(c) In an isolated transaction in which any security is sold, offered for sale, subscription, or delivery, by the owner thereof, or by his representative for the owner's account, such sale or offer for sale, subscription, or delivery not being made in the course of repeated and successive transactions of a like character by such owner, or on his account by such representative, and such owner or representative not being the underwriter of such security.

But that is not this kind of legislation. The legislation against the sending of obscene matter through the mail, excluding it from the mail, and the legislation against fraud, is directly within the jurisdiction of Congress. That is not in this case. In this case there is no fraud claimed. You need not allege or prove any fraud, or even any intent to mail a letter for the commission of a fraud. All this law requires is that you prove that a man mailed the letter and that it contained a proposition to sell this stock, which was not licensed in the State. You may be as innocent of any knowledge of what is in that letter as a babe unborn, and yet you are condemned to prison. There may be no fraud at all in the transaction of selling the stock, perhaps, in that State. It is not required. There is no need to prove it. All you need to prove is that that State has prohibited it; that it is unlawful to sell that stock in that State. The stock or security may be perfectly good, but its sale has not been licensed in the State.

There is not an element of fraud in this whole bill. It is simply a naked proposition that because the State has forbidden the sale of this stock, therefore it is illegal to deposit in the mail a sealed letter—the most sacred of all communications, a sealed letter, which is just as sacred as your own home, and as your own pocket, as if it were in your own hand—it is stated in this bill that although there is no fraud or any intention to commit a fraud or to cheat anybody, still there is a crime.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. You have a law in Minnesota, for instance, which makes it unlawful to sell these stocks unless permission is given to sell them. All the citizens of your State who sell the stock must have permission to do so. Does the gentleman think that the man just outside the State line should be free to do so when your own citizens are not free to do so?

Mr. STEENERSON. I am not talking about that. I am talking about the matter of personal liberty, of the use of the mail. Upon what ground have you the right to deprive a man of the use of the mail by indirection? On the ground that it is a fraud on somebody? No. There is a close similarity between this and the Fitzgerald bill. It was provided in that bill that because a man had been in the habit theretofore of mailing improper matter, the Post Office Department had the right to forbid him the right to mail proper matter. If it is only an isolated matter of selling stock, a man may sell it, but if he is a broker who has habitually sold it he shall not use the mail. It is the prohibition of the right of a man to use the mail that I am talking about. You forbid one to use the mail and permit another to do so for the same communication.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What right has a man to use the mail except such right as is given him by the law of the land?

Mr. STEENERSON. He has the right under the Constitution to the equal protection of the law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes. But the mails are something created by law, and the same power that created them can lay restrictions on their use.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, it can in a certain degree. In the case of Burton v. United States, 202, page 344, the Supreme Court said if you prohibit the use of the mail in a case, it must be consistent with the rights of the people reserved in the Constitution; it must be consistent with the right of freedom. You have a right to write somebody and deposit your letter in the mail.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. In a moment. The basis of the distinction, Mr. Chairman, ought to be not that a man is a guilty person or that he follows a certain avocation, but that the kind of matter transmitted in the mail is demoralizing. You can not go to work and say that this man, because he has committed a crime somewhere else, is an outlaw and can not communicate by mail.

This whole question, as you will find if you want to consider it elaborately, was thrashed out from beginning to end in the Pujo money investigation, in what was called the "Money Devil" case. There Mr. Untermeyer filed a long brief claiming the right to exclude the New York Stock Exchange, because of its size, and a certain bank because of its size, from the use of the mail. So this bill permits certain stock exchanges and banks to use the mail and forbids it to others. The mail is denied to one and permitted to another. It is an arbitrary distinction.

Mr. EVANS. If I understand the gentleman, his claim is that this act, if passed, is unconstitutional?

Mr. STEENERSON. It certainly is; and it is not only unconstitutional, but it is unconstitutional in such a way that if it is administered before it is declared unconstitutional it will deprive the people of one of the most sacred rights that the people possess.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Would the crossing by a letter of a State line make the right any more sacred in a State? A man can not sell these stocks without being authorized by the blue-sky board. If he had the right to go over the State line and write a letter and sell the stock, he ought to have the same right to write it within the State.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am not talking about the right to sell stock. I am talking about the right to enjoy the use of the mail. To say that where one is habitually selling stock and another man has an isolated transaction the one can mail a letter and the other can not, that is an arbitrary distinction based upon no facts. It is simply because you do not like the man. Does anybody claim, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court that the power of Congress over the admissibility of mail matter is almost unlimited, does anybody claim or are you going to say that it is absolute; that because one man had red hair it will be a penitentiary offense for him to drop a letter in the mail, and that because another man is baldheaded he can do so? Are you going to make an arbitrary distinction because of the person? Incidentally I call attention to the fact that I have included myself in one of those classes. [Laughter.] The distinction must be based on the nature of the matter to be carried in the mail and not on the individual sender.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to have five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to read an extract from the work of Mr. Lindsay Rogers, of Baltimore, on the postal powers of Congress, in which he points this out, as follows:

Any legislation excluding from the mails must apply directly to the things mailed, not to the persons using the mails. This is a distinction which is evident in the decisions upholding the interstate commerce legislation and which underlies the argument that Congress may exclude commodities manufactured in whole or in part by children. The law would operate directly on these commodities, not on account of their inherent character—which would probably not be different from that of other commodities manufactured by adult labor—but because of the objectionable conditions of production. And by a parity of reasoning Congress could exclude from the mails matter relating to gambling transactions which might be forbidden under the police power of the State, although such matter, on its face, would be harmless. But it is an entirely different proposition absolutely to deny the use of the mails because certain persons have refused to comply with conditions beyond the power of Congress directly to impose which it thinks may result in regulating objectionable practices, although these may be entirely disassociated from the bulk of the matter which has been excluded.

And he refers to these cases that I have referred to, holding that the power of exclusion from the mails, although very extensive, is not unlimited, because it is limited by the constitutional provision that there shall be freedom of the press, that all men shall have the equal protection of the laws. Why, the carrying of first-class mail is a monopoly of the Government. No one else can carry a letter for pay, and if you say that a man's letter shall not be carried in the mail, that man is just about as isolated as if he were put in the penitentiary. This is a very serious matter, because you are trying to impose a penalty on a man, not because he has done anything wrong or attempted to do anything wrong or attempted to defraud anybody, but because you are trying by indirection to enforce the laws of a State. The jurisdiction of this blue-sky proposition is entirely within the power of the States, and Congress has by ample provision protected the mails from all sorts of abuses. We have the most strict and complete code on that subject that can be written. I am reminded that by a certain bill which we discussed here to extend the mail fraud laws recently my friend from Massachusetts sought even to include race-track news published in the papers, to exclude those papers. That is perfectly legitimate if you want to do it, but there is this limit, that when a man is trying to do no wrong, when he has not attempted to demoralize anybody or attempted to defraud anybody, you can not deprive that man of the use of the mail or of the equal protection of the law. He is a taxpayer in the United States and is entitled to the benefits of the Postal Service. The Postal Service existed before the Union was established, and everybody is entitled to that, because it is a public service, and you can not take it away from him unless you are doing it for the benefit of society, because of the injurious effect that otherwise would follow. In this case you have got to stand on your bill. To convict a man under this bill you need not allege or prove any fraud, or even intent to defraud.

You are proposing to make criminal something that has no element of fraud or wrongdoing in it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman make any distinction between a letter and a circular or newspaper?

Mr. STEENERSON. There is a distinction. I do not know that it is very vital in this part of my argument.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has been referring to a letter all the time. Does the gentleman mean to say that if I write a letter with reference to a matter which is against the law in the State of Minnesota, pertaining to the sale of fraudulent securities, or that if I write a postal card, Congress has no right to pass laws excluding such matter from the mails?

Mr. STEENERSON. I did not say anything of the kind. The gentleman drew an erroneous conclusion, because I emphasized the sacredness of a sealed letter. But that is only incidental to the argument that you are interfering with the most sacred personal rights of the people. It is as much or more within the power of Congress to exclude from the mails newspapers with advertisements or postal cards that are open. That is more within the right of exclusion from the mails.

Mr. WALSH. Then the gentleman does make a distinction between a letter and other classes of mail matter?

Mr. STEENERSON. I make a distinction to this extent, not on principle, but because of the serious consequences that will flow from interfering with personal liberty.

That statute has its sanction in the power of the United States by legislation to designate what may be carried in the mails and what must be excluded therefrom, such designation and exclusion to be, however, consistent with the rights of the people as reserved in the Constitution. (Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 732; in re Rapier, 743 U. S. 110; School of Magnetic Healing v. McNulty, 187 U. S. 94; Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497, 508.)

Take and read this bill and observe the distinction between who may use the mail for the purpose described and who may not and you will note that it is merely a difference of individuals or corporations. One may, the other may not, do the same thing.

This measure, if enacted into law, would violate the very cardinal principles of the Constitution.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], a member of the committee, in opposition to the motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have listened with some interest to the argument of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], and I find myself unable to agree with him either in his argument or his conclusion. He proceeds upon the theory that the right to send material in the mails is a right inherent in every citizen, and that he ought not to be restricted in that right unless it is because of something that the gentleman designates as a thing "demoralizing" to the general public. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that every citizen has a right to the unrestricted use of the mails. The right to establish post offices and post roads was given to Congress by the Constitution, and under that provision the mail system of this country was established. The same Congress that laid down the fundamental law for the regulation of the mail service, the same Congress that makes appropriations to carry on that service, has a right to make such reasonable restrictions in the use of the mails as in the wisdom of Congress is desirable.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman admits that the power of exclusion from the mails must be exercised so as to be consistent with the rights of the citizen as reserved in the Constitution?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I admit that. That is fundamental, and what might be called hornbook law. There is no question about that; but the question of what is consistent with the rights of the people is a question to be determined in the discretion of Congress so long as it is reasonable. There can be no question about that proposition.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the Supreme Court says that the power of Congress in that regard is limited.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The power of Congress is limited by the express language of the Constitution; but the express language of the Constitution gives Congress the right to legislate along proper and legitimate lines. It has been doing it and exercising it from the earliest days of the Republic. The other day I cited a great many authorities here—there were not many Members present at the time—but I cited statute after statute where similar laws have been passed and which were afterwards held constitutional. Congress has full and complete power to regulate the mails of the country, if that is the gentleman's question. Otherwise, why could they exclude circulars advertising lotteries? Why could they exclude circulars advertising lottery tickets or any information about them? Why could they exclude obscene literature? Why, if there is no power, can the Postmaster General by order, as I understand he can, exclude anarchistic literature from the mails or matter that is intended to produce dissension or excite rebellion among the people?

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. I do not think there is any question about the constitutional right of Congress to pass the measure, but I wish the gentleman, with his power of analysis and clarity of thought, to answer this question: Would not the passage of this bill years and years and years ago have deprived this country of the splendid development of its mineral resources? I want the gentleman to answer the question I propounded to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], who has not answered the question. The reason I am asking it is that I am somewhat familiar with the granting of charters. I have granted thousands of them. I am not going to say that all of them were good, but I will say that many were most excellent. As I said the other day, when I was secretary of state of the State of Delaware I granted a charter to the Tonopah Mining Co.; that stock was distributed all over the country to many speculative men and women. It was put on the market at 25 cents a share. It was a pure chance when the people who bought it did buy it. That has developed into a splendid corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. Now, let me finish this, and I will quit.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman from Delaware is troubled a good deal like myself; his terminal facilities are poor. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAYTON. That may be true. This corporation got their money and went forward with its exploitation, and it developed into one of the finest mining properties in the United States, and to-day is listed as such. It has developed millions of wealth.

Now, I am going to make a further statement—there have been hundreds of such corporations that have obtained money solely in that way, and could not have obtained money in any other way for development purposes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This particular section under discussion gave me more trouble than all the rest of the bill put together when before the committee. My first view was that it legitimatized the dealings of the large stock exchanges of the country. Because of my inherent desire not to do anything that might be designated as Wall Street legislation I rather shied at that section. But I investigated, and we took extensive testimony, looked into the thing, and I became convinced that it was all right.

Here is the reason: This excludes the securities of only three exchanges in the country, and they must be exchanges that for 20 years have been doing business. We made some investigation about these three big exchanges as to the rules and regulations, and we found they are more stringent than any blue-sky law of any State in the Union that I have looked at. Here is what this act does: It does not provide that the stock of the mining company to which the gentleman from Delaware referred can not come into Illinois, can not come into Iowa or Nebraska or Delaware, or any other State, but it does say that so far as that stock is concerned that must be left to the particular State to settle for itself. It does say, so far as the stocks listed by the three large stock exchanges are concerned, that such stocks can travel in interstate commerce so far as this act is concerned. That is all that it does. It does not exclude from any State or market any stock issued by any company; it does not make a single exception or restriction except such as the State itself has established by its laws.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; for a question.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman will admit that by reason of the stringency of the Stock Exchange of New York the Tonopah Mining Co. in its incipiency could not have been listed.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I presume that is true.

Mr. LAYTON. They could not get the money for the necessary exploration and do the work to demonstrate its value.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The mining company mentioned will be in no different condition after this law is enacted than it was before, because exactly the same conditions exist so far as the stocks of such mining companies are concerned.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman about a constitutional phase of this matter. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's bill and I expect to vote for it. As I understand it, it is to be an enforcement of the various laws of the various States with respect to the sale of securities in those States, and the law which the gentleman seeks to have passed is in itself uniform.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. In its uniform application to the principle, will it discriminate as between the rights of the citizens of the different States, because of the difference in State laws? If so, is not that a serious constitutional objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, that question has been considered many times by the Supreme Court of the United States, and that particular point has been directly passed upon. I call the gentleman's attention to a case in point, In re Rahrer (140 U. S. 561), which the gentleman will find cited in the RECORD of yesterday in my remarks. That point is raised there and it is held by the Supreme Court that the law is uniform, and that it does not delegate any powers of legislation to the States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON]. If his amendment shall prevail, the effect of it will be to wipe out the special privilege conferred upon certain stock exchanges in cities of 500,000 population and over. There is one fundamental objection to the paragraph of the bill that has not heretofore been mentioned that it seems to me ought to be recognized by the House. Under the bill as it reads we are conferring certain rights and privileges upon purely private organizations that ought not to be conferred upon any institution apart from the government of State or Nation. Two or three years ago we considered the bill providing for an embargo on dyestuffs. Gentlemen will remember that when that bill was brought into the House from the Committee on Ways and Means it contained a provision that certain dyestuffs could be imported into the country, notwithstanding the law, providing certain importers in this country recognized the desirability of importing the dyestuffs.

I was one of those on the floor that opposed that provision of the bill, as did others. We did so because it was turning over that which should be a sacred governmental function to private institutions in this country. When the matter was considered fully by the House, the House wiped out that provision of the bill, as gentlemen will remember. It seems to me that we have the same proposition here. You are turning over to a private institution or several of them a function that ought to be a function of government.

There is another objection which I have to the paragraph, and I merely mention it in passing. It has been said that these stock exchanges have been operated for 20 years, that they are operating as high-class business organizations. Granting that to be true, have we any assurance that next year, or 10 years from now, they will be operating in that way? We have not, and yet we propose to turn over to these private concerns that which ought to be alone the function of government.

Again, there is another reason why I oppose the paragraph. We are recognizing certain stock exchanges located in certain large centers which, if recognized, will be given, in my judgment, such a monopoly of business as will work to the great detriment of the outlying sections of the country. Yet these outlying sections furnish the very business with which the large exchanges will be given the privilege of handling.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. Reference has been made here to stock such as Tonopah by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON]. Is it not a fact that the only test is whether or not a stock of that kind or any other kind can get listed on one of these large exchanges? If so, it does not come within the provisions of this act at all.

Mr. FRENCH. Under the language of the pending bill the gentleman has stated the situation correctly. The stock might be sold in violation of every "blue sky" law in the country, save the law of the State where the particular stock exchange might be located.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this subdivision (f) and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reiterate what I have said before, that with the essential purposes of the bill I am in sympathy. I am in sympathy with any legislation that has for its purpose the protection of the people of the country against fraud in any way. My chief concern is whether in flying from one ill, however, we are not flying to others that we know not of. I believe that it is the sentiment of this House, the experience of this House, that if such a law as this had been on the statute books of the United States for the last 75 or 100 years you would have had very little of the development of the mineral resources of the country in such a way as would have made the wonderful difference between what we are and what we would have been. Nobody seems to be willing to look the proposition in the face. My friend from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] did not meet it, and my other friend from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] has not met it. What I am trying to get at is this. A purely prospective, honestly legitimate undertaking, a belief and faith in mineral resources in the ground, but which have not been proven, can not get upon any of these stock exchanges.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. In just a moment. That being the case, they can not get any money there.

In the next place, you can not go to the legitimate banking concerns and get money for purely speculative purposes. The consequence is that these various corporations are shut off by this bill. I want to say now that they have brought not only millions but billions in wealth into the pockets of the people of this country. Take the history of Goldfield; take the history of Nevada generally; take the history of all the mining States of this Union and you will find for the most part they used, what? They used the mails in sending out their circulars, believing that they had a good, legitimate proposition, but did not know it. They wanted the money in order to exploit it, to drive their shafts, their crosscuts, and so forth.

Mr. ROACH. Does the gentleman understand that this bill would prevent the sale of that character of stock?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes; and I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. ROACH. I do not so understand it.

Mr. LAYTON. I will show the gentleman how it will. According to the answer of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] he said you could go to the States and by a proper exposition you could get permission to sell the stock in that State; but, then, you would have to go to 39 other States, and in connection with those 39 States you would have to go by agents—you can not go by mail—and so it would cost more money to get capital stock for making the original explorations than would be necessary to carry on the work. These are the facts in the case. In my judgment exploitation and development would be arrested.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the motion made by the gentleman from Utah to strike out subdivision (f) should be adopted. I believe the entire section 4 should be stricken out, as well as the following section. Various States prohibit the sale or distribution of certain stocks within the limits of the State unless certain requirements of the State law have been complied with. In addition to those State laws we are to have a Federal law which is to make it a crime to use the mail or any interstate transportation agency for the evasion of these State laws.

So many stock transactions are exempted from the operations of the law that the law becomes useless. The transactions of stock exchanges of cities with a population of more than 500,000 are not to be subject to this law. These exchanges are legalized gambling institutions. The fact that they are large, the fact that they deal with enormous amounts, the fact they are powerful, does not change their character. They are essentially institutions to encourage gambling on a large scale, and they have been responsible for more wrecked homes, more suicides, more crimes, more bankruptcies, than all the petty gambling houses combined. You make an exception here in favor of a few stock exchanges. You are sanctioning them, you are surrounding them with the glory of a Federal law. The smaller exchanges are to come within the prohibition of the law, but a few big ones are to be held out as infallible. Their stocks are not within the contemplation of this law. Subdivision B of section 4 excepts from the provision of the law securities issued by a foreign government. Some of these foreign securities involve more risk, more hazard and speculation, than any "wildcat" stock that ever came from the oil fields of Oklahoma.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Or any "wildcat State."

Mr. LONDON. Or any "wildcat State." I do not see any object or reason for section 4. Why should any stock transaction be excepted from the operation of the law if the law is a good one, and if the Federal law is to fortify good and reasonable State laws, what is the necessity for section 4 and all these exceptions?

Mr. DENISON. Is the gentleman addressing that question to me?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I will state to the gentleman the reason for it. In our effort to prevent the flotation of fraudulent securities Congress does not and ought not to want to obstruct legitimate interstate business in legitimate securities.

Mr. LONDON. But let me say——

Mr. DENISON. Wait a minute. The gentleman asked the question. Now, in order to accomplish that purpose we are exempting from the provisions of this act those classes of securities which experience has shown are not the source of frauds. That is the answer.

Mr. LONDON. This law ratifies the existing State laws, does it not?

Mr. DENISON. This law will lend aid to the Federal Government for the enforcement of the laws of the respective States by forbidding the use of Federal agencies to violate State laws.

Mr. LONDON. State laws now existing or such as may hereafter be enacted?

Mr. DENISON. Exactly.

Mr. LONDON. Both?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There is no quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Fairchild	Kleczka	Rosenbloom
Ansorge	Faust	Knight	Rossdale
Anthony	Fenn	Kopp	Ryan
Appleby	Fess	Kreider	Sabath
Bacharach	Fields	Kunz	Sanders, Ind.
Barbour	Fish	Lehlbach	Sanders, N. Y.
Barkley	Fordney	Logan	Sears
Beedy	Frear	Longworth	Shelton
Begg	Free	Lyon	Shreve
Blakeney	Freeman	McArthur	Siegel
Bland, Va.	Funk	McFadden	Sinclair
Blanton	Gahn	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Slemp
Bond	Gallivan	McLaughlin, Pa.	Smith, Mich.
Brand	Gilbert	Madden	Smithwick
Britten	Glynn	Maloney	Snell
Brown, Tenn.	Goldsborough	Mann	Sproul
Burdick	Gould	Mansfield	Stafford
Burke	Graham, Pa.	Martin	Stephens
Burtness	Greene, Mass.	Mead	Stiness
Butler	Greene, Vt.	Merritt	Strong, Pa.
Campbell, Pa.	Griffin	Michaelson	Sullivan
Cantrill	Hardy, Tex.	Mills	Sweet
Carew	Harrison	Montague	Swing
Chandler, N. Y.	Haugen	Montoya	Tague
Clark, Fla.	Harrick	Moore, Ohio	Taylor, Ark.
Clarke, N. Y.	Hickey	Moore, Va.	Taylor, Colo.
Classon	Hill	Mudd	Taylor, N. J.
Cockran	Himes	Murphy	Tilson
Codd	Hooker	Nelson, John M.	Tinkham
Cole, Iowa	Hudspeth	Newton, Mo.	Treadway
Cole, Ohio	Hull	Nolan	Underhill
Collier	Husted	Olpp	Upshaw
Connell	Ireland	Osborne	Vare
Connolly, Pa.	James	Parker, N. J.	Voigt
Cooper, Ohio	Jeffers, Ala.	Perlman	Volk
Copley	Johnson, Miss.	Petersen	Walters
Crago	Johnson, S. Dak.	Porter	Ward, N. Y.
Crowther	Johnson, Wash.	Radcliffe	Watson
Cullen	Jones, Pa.	Rainey, Ala.	White, Me.
Darrow	Kahn	Rainey, Ill.	Williams
Deal	Kearns	Ransley	Wilson
Dempsey	Kelly, Pa.	Reavis	Woods, Va.
Dowell	Kendall	Reber	Wright
Drewry	Kennedy	Reece	Wurzbach
Driver	Kiess	Reed, N. Y.	Yates
Echols	Kindred	Riordan	Young
Edmonds	King	Rodenberg
Ellis	Kitchin	Rogers

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 10598, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called; that a quorum responded, and he presented therewith a list of the absentees for printing in the Journal and RECORD.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] is recognized.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, the question before the committee is an amendment which proposes to strike out paragraph (f), beginning on line 5 of this bill, and I shall direct my remarks, since there are only five minutes' debate remaining, I understand, directly to the question at issue.

It is a peculiar thing that gentlemen who are opposing this measure upon the ground that it is too drastic now propose to strike out parts of this section 4, the result of which will be to make the bill much more drastic. Here is the situation with reference to paragraph (f):

The committee was attempting to prevent, in so far as possible, the flotation of fraudulent stocks and securities without interfering any more than was absolutely necessary with the flotation of legitimate securities, and consequently in section 4 we set up a number of exemptions. What is the meaning of those exemptions? Simply this, that if any securities fall within the classes provided within these exemptions, those who desire to float those securities will not be required by the Federal statute to investigate the various State laws before they can use the agencies of interstate commerce. Under existing conditions there is no restriction whatever to any security which may seek refuge behind the agencies of interstate commerce in the evasion of State laws. These exemptions provided in the first few paragraphs will probably be accepted without question—Government bonds, and things of that sort—but when we come to the great body of industrials accepted as legitimate, the committee found, upon consultation and conference with the various State boards having these matters in hand, that these State boards themselves did not desire to be bothered with passing upon securities that flow freely in the legitimate market, and so we provided, as most of the State laws provide, that if certain securities meet certain tests they will not need to be submitted to the State boards.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOCH. In just a moment. My five minutes are nearly up. Now then, we thought this, that if we can find some agency which itself has a severe test with reference to these industrial securities, it would be better to accept that agency in the matter of this exemption than to build up an elaborate agency on the part of the Federal Government. It must be remembered that this is not, technically speaking, a Federal "blue-sky" law, but is rather a bill to make effective State "blue-sky" laws. Now then, here are three stock exchanges, the test of which is as rigid, or more rigid, according to the State commissions, than the test prescribed by the States themselves. Obviously it would be a mistake to permit any stock exchange, no matter how obscure, no matter what its history, no matter how unreliable it may be, no matter how easy its requirements may be, to have securities listed upon it to flow freely and have the benefit of this exemption. And so it was a difficult matter. And the committee does not pretend that the test here found is an absolutely perfect test. But it was the only practicable test suggested and urged by the State "blue-sky" commissions. And so in order to not unduly hamper business, we put in this paragraph (f). And yet the gentlemen who oppose this bill upon the ground that it would hamper business would, by striking out paragraph (f), compel every legitimate security now afloat in this country, no matter how long it may have been afloat, no matter how commonly accepted its reliability—would compel every one of those securities to submit to the requirements of all the 39 States. The result would be, that instead of making the laws less restrictive upon business they would vastly increase the restrictions upon business.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. I yield.

Mr. LAYTON. A a matter of fact, then, your judgment is that so far as securities are concerned that have been issued that question will be settled by the three stock exchanges? Is that so?

Mr. HOCH. Not at all. I will answer the gentleman. The whole argument of the gentleman has been in opposition to "blue-sky" legislation.

Mr. LAYTON. That is not my argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, may we have that amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. COLTON and Mr. RAKER asked for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is asked for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill by inserting less than a page taken from the hearings on this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ARENTZ: On page 9, after line 8, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"(d) Any security issued by a corporation owning a property, business, or industry within the State of its incorporation, the issuance and sale of said security having been investigated and approved by the said State."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I am in sympathy with the proposal of the committee to suppress the sale of fraudulent stock, but I do not wish to bring the consummation of this matter about by stifling the promotion of legitimate enterprises for the development of the natural resources of our country. For instance, if the owner of a small property wishes to do development work or raise money on his property he must either have an agent or go himself to the several States of the United States, at a cost of approximately $1,000 for a permit in each State. The chairman of the committee has stated that it will cost approximately $100, but I doubt that figure. It will cost $1,000 or more, for the following reasons:

A man owning this property, wishing to register his stock, I may say, must either go there in person or have an agent go there. He must spend from two months to six months in bringing the matter before the proper commissions of the States, paying the expenses during this time, and in many cases a representative of the State must go to the property, make an investigation, and report back to the commission; and I leave it to you, gentlemen, if it will not cost more than $1,000 to do this. It would mean, then, that for the 39 States it would cost approximately $39,000 for a man who wishes to raise possibly $15,000 or $20,000 for the development of a small property to bring this property to the point where a sufficient amount of ore would be developed or a well would be carried down to a sufficient depth to justify a man of larger means or a corporation in taking up the property and carrying it on. When it reaches this point this man or this corporation could place it in the hands of a dealer in stocks. On page 10, line 17, the bill provides as follows:

(e) To any bank, savings institution, trust company, insurance company, or to any corporation, or to any broker or dealer.

He is exempted provided that such broker or dealer is actually buying and selling securities as a business. From actual experience I know that it is just such a dealer who could do this. I could mention several big dealers in New York and Boston and dozens of such men who have the money and have the means to start out with a tremendous big advertising propaganda and bring before the people of the several States their proposition, sell them unlimited shares of fraudulent stock in a property of little, if any, merit; but the small man of small means who has a meritorious property, needing but a few thousand dollars to put his property on a producing basis, would not do this.

There are many such properties in my State of Nevada, properties containing nearly if not all minerals and metals utilized in every human endeavor.

We neither invite or desire fraudulent operators to operate either within our State or to handle shares of stock representing an interest in a Nevada property.

We desire, yes we demand, the right to bring our natural resources to the attention of all the people of the several States. I believe in the man of small means, the owners of small property, and I want him to raise money for his company just as easy as the man of wealth can.

I ask permission to insert in my remarks several letters that I have on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the letters referred to:

BOSTON & ELY CONSOLIDATED MINING CO.,
Ely, Nev., April 12, 1922.

Mr. S. S. ARENTZ,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I note frequent references made to the Denison blue sky bill now before Congress.

* * * * * * *

Those engaged in mining will cooperate with any measure which will prevent the unlimited sale of worthless stocks, worthless from their inception; the companies frequently being organized to acquire leases or options of doubtful value and those connected with same having no intention of spending one dollar in developing the properties thus acquired. These schemes are formed to reap easy money from the innocent. There is another side of this story. Every big mining district started from nothing but surface indications. The prospector found the vein, and in many cases developed commercial ore by hard work and many privations. He is now at the end of his tether and must look somewhere for some one either to furnish capital to provide him with means, machinery, and supplies, or to buy him out. This capital in ninety-nine times out of one hundred is furnished by people of small means, accepting stock for the money furnished, showing him or her to be a partner in the enterprise, a transaction which is legitimate, practical, and businesslike. In other words, they are willing to take a chance. Should the property and its neighbors prove successful, a consolidation takes place, making possible the enormous mining enterprises to which public attention is then directed. Every prominent mining district in the United States will bear evidence to the above.

If it is a fair question, Whose labor, perseverence, and cash was instrumental in forming or finding the nucleus of the many enormous successful mining companies whose management and standing compare with the best business institutions?

Since it is a well-known fact that the big mining companies will not advance a dollar in such an enterprise as described above, and this being the foundation of all of our big mining districts, to whom must the prospector look for aid?

The big mining companies with a big cash reserve will purchase for cash developed mines on a basis of net values in sight (after the little fellow has taken all the risk). What mode of procedure does Mr. DENISON suggest to advance a mining enterprise to the above stage excepting through the medium of a stock company?

After finding a man who is interested in mining, it is a rare case where one man will undertake to furnish, single-handed, the entire capital for a mining company.

Moreover, those engaged in the production of ore are the first to expose a mining fraud. They are the first to refuse cash or stock for the use of their names.

After 30 years' experience in mining in many parts of the world, my personal observations are that those who ostensibly mourn the public losses through the sale of stock will usually accept a position with or a commission from a company whose treasury was provided with cash from the sale of stock.

The hazards in mining are ample without having to combat measures which, in operation, would succeed in killing one of the cleanest of all industries—the production of mineral wealth.

Leave well enough alone. If protection of the public is what the Denison bill is aimed at, enforce the laws to be found in every State enacted for this purpose.

A law prohibiting or restricting the sale of stock in companies whose avowed intentions are clear and clean would very effectively terminate an industry which is the backbone of Nevada.

I have the honor to remain,

Respectfully yours, S. HERBERT WILLIAMS.

—

NEW YORK, April 10, 1922.

Hon. SAMUEL S. ARENTZ,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Permit me to draw your attention to the Denison bill which has been reported favorably by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

This bill was prepared and presented by a committee of the investment bankers of America, which of course means the investment dealers. None of the stock exchanges in the country were consulted, but the bill carries an exemption for organized exchanges as appears from subdivision 6 of section 4, to the effect that where transactions on an organized exchange have occurred during each of the preceding 20 years in the purchase and sale of United States bonds and other exempted bonds are exempted from the provisions of the act. In this manner the New York Stock Exchange is exempted but the New York Curb Exchange, which has only been in operation 12 years, is shut out and so are nearly all of the other exchanges. We contend that a legitimate company, which has been carefully examined by an exchange and listed in accordance with the prescribed listing requirements of such exchange, and especially if such exchange has listing requirements which contain the provisions usually adopted by the various bureaus and commissions in the several States having blue sky laws, that such listing should make it possible for the brokers or promoters of any legitimate enterprise to offer their stock anywhere. If this law goes into effect I do not see how it would be possible for a legitimate Nevada enterprise, having its stock listed either in San Francisco or upon the New York Curb Exchange, which is the great primary market for new securities, to avoid rendering itself subject to the penalties of this legislation.

I do not see why trading in stocks or dealing in securities should become a matter to be regulated as Interstate Commerce, nor do I see how the Congress can properly pass legislation such as the Denison bill which undertakes to ratify all of the various blue sky laws of the several States now in effect or any other laws or legislation which may be passed in the future. This legislation, in attempting to do away with fraud in the sale of securities, makes no distinction as to the legitimate enterprises, and it seems to shut out all mining development and industrial enterprises except those enumerated.

I have no doubt you have already heard from some of our constituents, but I take the liberty of drawing the matter to your attention because of my great interest in the New York Curb Exchange, and particularly because of my large investments in the State of Nevada.

With kindest regards, I am,

Very truly yours, FRANKLIN LEONARD, Jr.

—

[From the Silver State.]

THE DENISON PROPOSAL.

The Denison bill, now before Congress, appears to westerners familiar with the development of mines to parallel the thought of a man cutting off an entire leg to cure the aching of one small toe, for that is about what the Denison bill would do were it to become a law. In an effort to guard against the activities of fraudulent stock promoters, the authors of the Denison bill would likewise prevent sale of legitimate mining securities, even though the report they have succeeded in getting before Congress infers otherwise.

The principal objection against the Denison bill is that it would prohibit the activities of the man of small means in the development of mines. This in itself means practical abandonment of the mining industry, in this State at least, for it is well known that it is always the man with little or no capital who goes into the hills to prospect and find mines. It is only after he has done so that the man of means becomes interested. Certainly, wealthy men seldom, if ever, undertake prospecting trips. With incentive destroyed for the prospector, how are new mines to be found for development when those now being operated are stripped of valuable ores?

Only a very small proportion of mines are found with values in the "grass roots." The rest are developed by large expenditures of money, usually derived from the sale of stock. If a mining man should find what he believes will develop into a valuable mine, under the Denison bill he would have to comply with the laws of 42 States, or as many thereof as he desired to sell stock in. He would be liable under the law, and subject to fine of as much as $5,000 and imprisonment should he fail to so qualify his offering. He would also be liable if any of his literature should be distributed, or if a newspaper carrying his advertisement should go to a subscriber in such a State.

It has been estimated that an expenditure of $5,000 would be necessary to comply with the "blue-sky" laws of 42 States, to say nothing of the endless red tape involved. When it is realized that Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Nevada, Pennsylvania, and Washington are the only States without "blue-sky" laws and commissions, all with different sets of rules that must be complied with, and 42 sets of commissioners that must be interviewed personally or interminable correspondence carried on, then the magnitude of the task confronting the small mining operator before he can commerce to sell his stock can be seen. Also, where one State will require a complete engineer's report, costing a large sum, another will require something else, equally expensive, to say nothing of the fees collected to maintain the different State "blue-sky" commissions.

The committee report on the Denison bill cites that section 4 provides exemptions from inconveniences created by the bill. It does, but only for securities issued by banks, railroads, etc., and those regularly listed on stock exchanges in cities of 500,000 population or over. During the Divide boom in this State worthless stocks were listed on exchanges, only because a showing was made that the treasuries of the companies contained sufficient money to meet "requirements." But what of the prospector who knows he has a good property but is struggling at all times to keep enough money coming in from the sale of stock to keep the mine operating until on a production basis? To put such requirements before him would be only to have him give up in despair.

People should be protected from fraudulent stock promotions, but knowing how mines are developed in this State, it is easy to see great damage will be done if the Denison bill becomes a law in its present form. It seems unjust to kill an industry as important to Nevada as mining is for the sake of protecting unwary investors. It also seems possible that the end desired can be accomplished in a less drastic manner and in a way that will permit the small mine operator to secure at least a hearing.

A better way would be to pass one Federal law incorporating all good "blue-sky" provisions, abolishing all State commissions having to do with stock sales. Then it would be necessary to comply with only one law and meet requirements of only one set of administrative officers, and the expense might thus be reduced so that ordinary men could develop mines as well as those richer in worldly goods.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ] would nullify the entire act. The proposition he offers is that if a security is qualified for sale in any one State, it may thereby be qualified for sale in all the States. Of course, Congress can not adopt a proposition of that kind.

In the preparation of this bill that proposition was carefully considered. If that proposition were in the bill, then there may be some State that may have a very loose law, or a very loose official to administer the law, and all that any promoter would have to do in order to get absolute immunity all over the United States would be to go into that State and qualify his securities there. Then he would have immunity in all the States. Of course, I assume that after a moment's thought no Member of the House would seriously consider such a proposition as that.

Now, my friend from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ] a moment ago referred to a later exemption in the bill, which is included in the exempted transactions as distinguished from exempted securities. Later in the bill there are certain exempted transactions, and among them are the sales of stocks or securities to a banker or broker. That will be explained when we reach that provision in the bill, but for the present I will say that this legislation is not intended to protect bankers and brokers from fraudulent securities. Their business is to judge of the value of securities, and they are hardly ever imposed upon. What we are trying to do by this legislation is to protect the average man and woman who has not the ability to judge of the value of securities or the facilities for making an investigation to ascertain their value.

We are trying to protect the average citizen from the impositions of these crooked promoters, and therefore we have exempted sales to brokers who are engaged in the business of selling and buying securities, and have exempted sales to bankers and others who are in a position, by reason of the character of their business, to judge of the value of such things.

Mr. ARENTZ. Surely the gentleman does not mean to say that these dealers in stocks that he mentioned are in the least philanthropic.

Mr. DENISON. I think the gentleman misunderstands. We do not exempt sales by them. We exempt sales to them. Whenever they want to sell any securities they have to qualify them the same as anyone else.

Mr. ARENTZ. They can underwrite 500,000 or 1,000,000 shares of stock and sell them as they please.

Mr. WINSLOW. Oh, no; that is incorrect.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman will read the bill, I think he will find that he is mistaken.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the wording of this amendment. This is the exempted class that the gentleman from Nevada is suggesting:

(k) Any security issued by a corporation owning a property, business, or industry within the State of its incorporation, the issue and sale of said securities having been investigated and approved by the said State.

You will notice that it is any security issued by a corporation which owns any property. It does not need to be a security issued on that property, but if the corporation owns any property—a mule or an acre of land or anything else—and also issues some securities, those securities can go anywhere, irrespective of any law to the contrary. Certainly the House does not want any proposition like that.

Mr. ARENTZ. I have such respect for the gentleman from Illinois that I thought he might perfect the amendment if he saw any mistakes in it.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to get some information on this bill. It seems to me we are going to a great length in supplying brains to the people of the country. This bill would seem to indicate that we have reached the height of our inventive genius and that there is nothing to be done in the future. It would appear to me that it would put chains upon progress. I do not suppose that the telegraph would be in existence to-day if this legislation had been in existence at the time of the development of the telegraph system, because the people at that time said that Samuel Morse was crazy. I do not suppose we would have had the automobile developed. I believe people said that Mr. Ford was crazy about his machine.

Mr. ANDREWS. He proved that in court.

Mr. MACGREGOR. So there are many things in this country which have come to be almost indispensable which were considered to be crazy ideas by the people of their time. They could not get any capital except by going out and putting stock on the market upon a highly speculative basis, convincing people that they had great possibilities and causing them to put their money in concerns which the general run of people would say were foolish.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOCH. The great State of New York has a blue-sky law. Is the gentleman in sympathy with it?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I am not saying anything about whether I am in sympathy with it or not. I am simply talking about this bill. I want to see what ideas the committee have upon this subject, upon the question as to whether we have in this age reached the limit, whether there is nothing further to be accomplished, whether the inventors of the future are to be hampered in bringing into common use in this country things that will be of great benefit to the people.

That is the proposition I want to have elucidated. This seems to be paternalism going wild.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Page 9, after line 8, insert:

(k) Any security that is legally authorized to be sold or offered for sale within three or more States each having a duly enacted law or laws for the regulation of the sale or disposition of stocks, bonds, or securities therein.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill specifically exempts from its provisions certain classes of stocks and bonds, and then there is a general exemption of those stocks and bonds that may be listed on the stock exchanges of Chicago, New York, and Boston. Otherwise it becomes necessary in dealing in stocks and bonds through the United States mails for the company offering them for sale to go into the several States and qualify under the laws of those several States, we will say 40 separate States. This would be a long and expensive procedure, possibly costing as much as $1,000 to qualify in each of the 40 States. I am not wishing to weaken the provisions of this measure. In the main I am in full sympathy with the objects of the legislation, but I do not believe that we desire to say to anyone "you can not sell your stock unless you go to one of three cities in the United States and list your stock with that stock exchange." In other words, that is one way in which they could qualify. This amendment provides another way. They could go into three States that have duly enacted legislation for the regulation of the sale of stocks and bonds in those States and qualify in three separate States and thus qualify in all. While one State might enact very loose legislation or have an officer who was very lax in the performance of his duty, we can not reasonably suppose that all the States are going to do that. I believe this would be sufficiently restrictive in its operations if we provided that when they have qualified under the laws of three States then they should have access to the mails. It is one way of getting beyond the necessity of going into one of three cities in the United States now and forevermore, unless the law is amended, before they can operate through the mails.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few observations in a general way. This bill is reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, one of the greatest, most capable, and hard-working committees of the House. The rule prescribing the jurisdiction of this committee is as follows:

To commerce, life-saving service, and lighthouses, other than appropriations for life-saving service and lighthouses; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

First, I wish to compliment this great committee in extending its jurisdiction from time to time, so that now it has jurisdiction of every conceivable sort of legislation. In this Congress I recall now four bills which this committee has had considered in the House but one of which had anything to do with interstate or foreign commerce. The first bill reported by this committee—and I wish to say handled it very ably—was the soldiers' legislation. This class of legislation even members of this committee admit has no relation to the purpose for which the committee was organized. Second was the baby bill. Think of it, gentlemen, the Interstate Commerce Committee reported the baby bill. [Laughter.]

The third bill the committee had considered was the railroad refunding bill, and that had some relation to interstate commerce. Now, then, you have another bill pending on the calendar, but not yet considered, regulating divorces in the Panama Canal Zone, also reported by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the author of the bill now under consideration. The committee has taken over the jurisdiction of babies, their prenatal and postnatal care, and now you undertake to tell people when and how they can become divorced.

The fourth bill to be considered from your committee and now before the House undertakes to regulate the mails. This bill has 99 per cent to do with the mails, and that provision as to "other agencies of interstate commerce" was put in there to bamboozle the parliamentary clerk in order that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee might have jurisdiction of this legislation.

Now, I happen to be a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I did not know that this bill was pending before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee until some time after the hearings were had. After I learned that this bill was to come up I sent for the hearings, consisting of two volumes. If I misstate anything I wish the members of the committee to correct me.

Now, as I stated before, this bill has 99 per cent to do with the mails—a bill that ought to have been considered and reported out by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. You are undertaking to tell the people what securities can be marketed through the mails or what information can be sent out through the mails without first getting consent of the various States where the securities are to be marketed. Other agencies of interstate commerce are mentioned, but what other agencies of interstate commerce do you use to carry information to the people except the mails? It is almost exclusively a bill to regulate the mail. The hearings on this bill show that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce did not call before it any official of the Post Office Department, although the Post Office Department will have to administer the law. That department has been administering the fraud and lottery sections ever since they have been passed—30 or 40 years ago. They did not call before that committee anybody from the Treasury Department for assistance to write into the bill what securities should or should not be under the ban of the Federal Government. Although this is a bill intending to regulate interstate commerce, they did not have before it any member or any official of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks to continue for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The only persons that did appear before this committee on the provisions of this bill were the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the author of the bill, Mr. DENISON, who is also a member of that committee, and certain representatives of the National Bankers' Association and Association of Investment Bankers and a few others along that line. It appears in the hearings that the gentleman from Illinois spent several weeks in Chicago conferring with the bankers there. I do not know whether he conferred with the newspaper men there also, and because of such conference they succeeded in excluding newspapers from this bill. They prohibit letters, circulars, telephone messages, and telegraph messages, and everything of that sort except the newspapers. You can do all the advertising you want to in the newspapers, but you can not send the information by letter, circular, or pamphlet.

Now, coming to the bill as a whole: Although in general debate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] and the gentleman from Kentucky, the ranking Democratic member of the committee, repeatedly referred to the bill as preventing fraud, fraudulent schemes, or bogus schemes, you can read the bill as carefully as you please and you will not find the word "fraud" in it. If all you seek to do is to keep fraudulent schemes out of the mails, we have a statute covering that, placed on the statute books 30 or 40 years ago. If anything is fraudulent, under section 215 of the Criminal Code not only can the person be prosecuted for placing it in the mails but the Postmaster General has the power to deny the use of the mails to persons engaged in such schemes and prevent the delivery of any mail addressed to the company or person engaged in such fraudulent schemes.

He even has the power to prevent the payment of postal money orders to the concerns or persons or corporations or associations that have had the ban placed upon them by the Postmaster General. So this bill is not a bill to prevent fraud in the mails. It is not a bill to keep bogus schemes out of the mails. If this bill had been before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which is familiar with the Criminal Code, I doubt that it ever would have been reported out. Of course it is popular here. Gentlemen get up and mention blue sky, saying that they are against blue sky, and everybody is for the bill. A kind of mania seizes the House, just as when you have up some question involving in any way prohibition. The drys all vote one way and the wets all vote the other way, as soon as the word is passed along, without understanding what really is comprehended in the legislation at all. I wish the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee would limit its activities to subjects with which its members are familiar and over which it has jurisdiction. The people have been clamoring for the last year and a half for relief from high freight rates. [Applause.] You have not done a thing to relieve them, not a thing. The woolgrowers of the country, the farmers of the country, have been demanding legislation from this committee on the truth-in-fabric bill, and you are not doing a thing. Do you intend to do anything?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I for one—and I say this not because of any hostility to the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, because they are all my friends—I for one would like to have a little information from this committee why certain bills before it are not considered. There is a bill pending on the calendar here, reported by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the author of which is Mr. SWEET, of my own State, a similar bill having passed the Senate, which if enacted into law will tend to decrease the valuation of railroads and thus decrease the freight rates. That bill is pending on the calendar and was placed on the calendar before this blue sky bill was placed there. I ask the gentlemen who compose that Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—and they need not answer, because to answer might be embarrassing, but I give them the question to have them ponder over it—have you gone to the Committee on Rules and asked for a rule to consider the Sweet bill which is now pending on the calendar of the House? A similar bill has passed the Senate. It is upon the Speaker's desk. All you have to do is to get to the Committee on Rules and ask for a rule to consider that bill. You have other bills pending before your committee. The people have been writing to me about this truth-in-fabric bill. The National Association of Wool Growers has been sending me copies of letters from various members of the committee; the substance of those answers is, "We are so busy." Of course you are busy, but with what kind of business are you busy? You are busy with business that you have no business to consider under the rules of the House.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. Regarding the truth-in-fabric bill, the objection I have heard to the passage of that bill is that it would take too much time and so many clerks to put the tags on the cloth. I wonder if this committee has ever considered the infinitesimally small amount of work required to do that as compared with what is required to put stamps on perfumes and toilet articles and things of that kind.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The question answers itself. Then this Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee comes before you with a report and says that this bill has the approval of the Post Office Department, and cites you to a letter printed in the back part of the report. Read that letter carefully. The Post Office Department does not approve this legislation. The Post Office Department has never asked for this legislation, and has no intention of asking for it. The Post Office Department knows, as everyone knows who is familiar with the postal laws, that so far as preventing fraudulent and bogus schemes from going through the mail is concerned, we have now all the laws that we need, and almost daily the Post Office Department or the Postmaster General issues fraud orders or district attorneys around over the country are instructed to bring prosecutions against men who are conducting fraudulent schemes. What are you doing with this bill? You are not preventing frauds. You are simply permitting 48 States of the Union to engage in making postal regulations——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Except as to about 50 exceptions which you have placed in the bill. You say to the States, we will let you make postal regulations except as to 50 different exceptions that are in the bill. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Can the gentleman draw any distinction between the provisions of this bill, subsection (f), section 4, which gives to the New York Stock Exchange control, and the truth-in-fabric bill, where the New York Stock Exchange is against the matter? Is there something peculiar there?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I know there is something very peculiar. The woolgrowers, the farmers, the consumers of wool, are for this truth-in-fabric bill. Every honest manufacturer is for it. The only persons against the truth-in-fabric bill are the dishonest manufacturers of wool. You hear much about "a farm bloc," a "New England bloc," and other influential blocs. I want to suggest that there is "a ragpickers' bloc," with apparently tremendous influence, somewhere in the country that is preventing this truth-in-fabric bill from coming out, thus protecting the dishonest manufacturers of shoddy and robbing the people of hundreds of millions of dollars more than the blue-sky sharks ever dreamed of. I insist that this great committee should quit wasting its time with bills over which it has no jurisdiction and get busy and report out bills touching transportation and truth in fabric for the relief and protection of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If it were not for the humor of the situation I would not take the time of the members of this committee to make reply to the remarks of an ill-advised speaker. When the gentleman arose and started off with his attack upon the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, a member of the said committee sitting by my side and I in the same breath said, "Give him time and he will wind up with the truth-in-fabric bill." We knew what he was gunning for when he started to attack the work of the committee. It is not, of course, to be expected that, as chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I shall go down the line and answer seriatim a lot of disjointed, disconnected suggestions that have been flippantly made by a man coming here with an ax to grind. The story about the reference of bills to our committee is not a matter of complaint against the committee. Bills are referred to us, and we are working people, soldiers, and we do our duty as it is meted out. That is why we have tackled this bill. It did not confer any great pleasure to the members of the committee to go fussing along with this blue sky law, which was urged upon us as much as by anybody else by many from the gentleman's own State. All the States in the Union which have blue sky legislation came to us and set forth their views. They had been through all this business of inquiry, they had been the ones who, in the first instance, had looked into the needs of these blue sky laws, and they were satisfied that they needed Federal aid. The bill was referred to us as an interstate commerce proposition. It may be—I do not know—that too many bills on various subjects have been referred to that committee, but I do know that the practice is that anything affecting commerce, interstate commerce, does go there, and until the House or somebody other than the members of the committee have said to the contrary, we are going to tackle those bills that come to us in regular order.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I gave the gentleman his time and let him go on, but I will yield.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I will extend the gentleman's time.

Mr. WINSLOW. Thank you.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I concede this bill came to the gentleman's committee without his asking for it, but the other bills have also come to his committee, and who determines the order in which they shall be considered and reported on the floor of the House?

Mr. WINSLOW. Automatically the committee.

Mr. RAMSEYER. And the committee reported out this bill instead of the transportation bill and the truth-in-fabric bill.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. And it is not for a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to determine.

Mr. WINSLOW. Not yet. Now, it will be a pleasant duty and opportunity to stand here and answer these various suggestions that have been made by my friend from Iowa. But, of course, you do not want to hear it, and for obvious reasons I do not want to indulge in it myself; but he has made a specific reference to a Veterans' Bureau bill bearing the name of a colleague of his from Iowa and wants to know why the committee has not tackled that. Why have not we tackled it? Because, in our judgment, we thought best to tackle the ones we have tackled and take care of them. If it were not, my friends, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET], whose name is on that bill, were a candidate for a high political office at the present time, and if it were not that any careless or flippant suggestion of mine in connection with that bill bearing his name might help his campaign or hurt it, I would answer the question. But as matters stand I do not propose to do so; but I do wish to submit, gentlemen, that there is no veterans' legislation which has been neglected. It is time for us to understand, and as long as I have the opportunity I will put it out now, that the mere stamp of veteran legislation on a printed paper does not by any means prove the merit of what is printed on that paper [applause] any more than it is a proof that the veterans themselves or the Veterans' Bureau or any considerable number of people believe in what that legislation may be intended to bring about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. May I have five minutes additional?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINSLOW. We come to the railroads——

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Gladly.

Mr. MORGAN. I take it from the gentleman's statement that it is a measure of protection to the public of the country and in response to a public demand that this legislation be enacted into law. That is the gentleman's statement—that there is a public demand and a measure of protection.

Mr. WINSLOW. I did not mean to say that, and if I did I shall have to apologize and retract it; but I can tell the gentleman what I meant to say, and what I think I did say, was that it was at the behest of the commissioners of the various States, who represented the public of their States. Your committee would have been equally considerate of a request and behest of a larger per cent of the population of the country if they desired to protect the citizens of the United States through consideration of the truth in fabrics bill.

It is not germane, it does not bear on my undertaking to make a reply to the previous speaker; it does not bear upon this bill; but I will tell you what I will subscribe to. If the gentleman will give me any information, backed up by facts, that the great proportion of the people of this country care about the truth in fabrics bill as of primary legislative importance, I will join the gentleman in aiding to bring the bill before the committee for as early consideration as possible.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I accept the proposition and will furnish the gentleman with the desired information.

Mr. WINSLOW. It will be thankfully received.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, I am making no defense of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I am making no cry in the way of praise or any other suggestion of adulation, but I do express the hope that you will not allow the appeal of a Member, whose head is sore—maybe because some pet of his has been ignored or who may feel a little yellow in spirit because some bill he wants taken up by his committee has been otherwise assigned—to affect your minds in considering the merits of the bill now before us.

We are here because we are designated by the Speaker to attend to this matter, and we want the bill to have its just due. We are not carried away with a notion that we will not live and survive if the bill is not carried. But the bill is here before you, and we want to have it considered on its merits. Let us take care of the gentleman's other worries when they may be brought up later in a regular and orderly manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS]. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 4, line 13, to strike out the words "shall be" and insert the word "is."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 4, line 13, strike out the words "shall be" and insert in lieu thereof the word "is."

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I think that makes a proper correction, and I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment which I wish to offer. On page 5, line 20, after the word "commission," insert the words "board or officer."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 5, line 20, after the word "commission," insert the words "board or officer."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the provisions of this act shall not apply when such security is transported in connection with, or when such letter, message, postal card, circular, or pamphlet relates exclusively to securities sold or offered for sale, subscription, or delivery in, any of the following transactions:

(a) At any judicial, executor's, administrator's, guardian's, or conservator's sale, or at any sale by a receiver or trustee in insolvency or bankruptcy, or at a public sale by auction held at an advertised time and place.

(b) By or for the account of a pledge holder or mortgagee selling or offering for sale or delivery, in the ordinary course of business, to liquidate a bona fide debt, a security pledged in good faith as security for such debt.

(c) In an isolated transaction in which any security is sold, offered for sale, subscription, or delivery, by the owner thereof, or by his representative for the owner's account, such sale or offer for sale, subscription, or delivery not being made in the course of repeated and successive transactions of a like character by such owner, or on his account by such representative, and such owner or representative not being the underwriter of such security.

(d) The distribution by a corporation of capital stock, bonds, or other securities to its stockholders or other security holders as stock dividend or other distribution out of earnings or surplus; or the issue of securities to the security holders or other creditors of a corporation in the process of a bona fide reorganization of such corporation made in good faith either in exchange for the securities of such security holders or claims of such creditors or partly for cash and partly in exchange for the securities or claims of such security holders or creditors; or the issue of increased capital stock of a corporation sold or distributed by it entirely among its own stockholders.

(e) To any bank, savings institution, trust company, insurance company, or to any corporation, or to any broker or dealer: Provided, That such broker or dealer is actually engaged in buying and selling securities as a business.

(f) The transfer or exchange by or on account of one corporation to another corporation of their own securities in connection with a proposed consolidation or merger of such corporations.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. On page 9, line 22, strike out all of subsection (c) of section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROACH: Page 9, line 22, strike out all of subsection (c).

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am inclined to believe that this legislation is desirable and good legislation. I believe the adoption of this amendment would make it even better than it is now proposed. I appreciate the fact that perhaps there are isolated cases which probably should not come within the general purview of this law. Upon the other hand, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that unless we do adopt this amendment we are enacting legislation here that will excuse the violation of this law in many, many instances over the country unless violation of the law is repeated from time to time or is a series of violations of the law. Now, there is a question in my mind whether we should enact legislation of this character or not. It will be recalled when this bill was up under general debate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], in answer to an interrogation by myself, practically admitted that in these isolated cases, such as, for example, where a citizen of one State had been imposed upon by having had sold to him or her, as the case may be, a block of fraudulent stock, that there was nothing in this law as it is written that would prevent that person thus imposed upon from passing that fraudulent stock on to a citizen of some other State.

If this amendment is adopted, such a situation as that will not be allowed or permitted under the law as it will then be written. While the adoption of this amendment may, as I have said, work a hardship in some few instances, I believe that the administrative officers charged with the duty of the execution of this law can be depended on to exercise good judgment in those cases rather than to permit what to my mind would be a fatal omission in this law by leaving the bill in its present form, which permits a violation of this law in isolated instances.

Take it in my own State, and we have a "blue-sky" law there which prevents and declares fraudulent an offense against our law to deal in and sell certain fraudulent stocks. Now, this law is intended as an aid to that law, by saying to the citizens of other States that you can not transmit any mail to the citizens of Missouri that contains fraudulent stock, or attempt to sell them fraudulent stock by mail. This law now under consideration says that unless they commit a series of offenses of that kind, that unless that transaction upon our part is a repeated transaction, they are not guilty of a violation of any law at all. I do not like that provision of this bill a little bit, because of all the numerous instances in which State laws were violated, when the $500,000 worth of fraudulent and spurious stock was sold over this country, which has been referred to, I have no doubt that in many of those cases they were such as would be termed "isolated cases" within the meaning of this law. In other words, some of the most grossly fraudulent transactions that I ever heard of in my life were what we would call "isolated cases" under the meaning of this law. For instance, I have in mind one particular instance in which fraudulent stock was sold through the mails to an old widow over in Missouri, sold to her by a citizen of an eastern State, and transmitted through the mails, by which she was defrauded out of her property. And that sort of a transaction would not come within the provisions of this law. Surely in the wisdom of Congress some means can be found by which a situation of that kind can be corrected in this bill. I believe the adoption of my amendment will correct just exactly that sort of a situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and, in doing so, I want to read this statement to the gentleman from a high official of the State of Missouri, the State of which my friend has just spoken. I want to read a paragraph from a letter I received from the securities commissioner, charged with the administration of the "blue-sky" law of the State of Missouri, in reference to this bill. He has considered it with all of its provisions, and he says among other things:

> With reference to the actual bill under discussion, it is my opinion that it is splendidly constructed and plainly shows that it is the work and fruitful labor of the mature and reflective effort of sincere public officials and patriotic business and financial experts.

That is the view taken by the gentleman who has charge of the enforcement and administration of the "blue-sky" law of the State of Missouri.

Now, with reference to the proposed amendment——

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. DENISON. I am sorry I can not, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa. I have not the time.

Mr. RAMSEYER. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. DENISON. It is dated March 20, 1922.

Mr. ROACH. Allow me to inquire of the gentleman if the chairman of the commission in Missouri had anything to say in reference to this particular section I am seeking to strike out of this bill?

Mr. DENISON. He did not discuss that particular provision. He had the whole bill before him.

Mr. ROACH. Was that particular provision discussed with the gentleman?

Mr. DENISON. I have not seen him at all. I read from his letter, which was written after he had seen a copy of the bill—the bill which is now pending before the House.

Now, in the provisions of this law we do not want to inflict any injustice or injury upon any individuals. Frequently men have securities of their own—that is, they own them themselves—and want to sell them or offer them for sale to some one in another State. This exemption——

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DENISON. In a moment. This exemption exempts isolated transactions, where the owner of a security himself wants to sell it or offers it for sale. Surely that is a proper exemption in a bill of this kind, because the purpose of this legislation is to prevent the flotation of fraudulent stocks or other securities that are placed out in series through the United States mails to the different States. You must exempt such isolated individual transaction where a person wants to dispose of a security which he himself owns.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. Does not the gentleman admit that if he is the owner of a block of stock that by the laws of the State of Missouri has been declared to be fraudulent it would be an offense against the State laws to sell it in that State, and that the owner of such fraudulent stock should not be allowed to go into the State, by mail or otherwise, and sell that stock?

Mr. DENISON. Occasionally fraudulent stock may be sold in that way.

Mr. ROACH. Why does the gentleman say if a man has a block of fraudulent stock he is to be permitted to pass it on to some other person in a State where the sale of that stock is fraudulent?

Mr. DENISON. While there might be one individual here and there who will sell some security under this individual exemption, if you leave it out there might be thousands of individuals who would want to sell legitimate securities within the State who would be prevented from doing it.

Mr. ROACH. They are the real harmful cases to the interests of the people of this country, these cases of selling isolated shares of stock. That is the trouble.

Mr. DENISON. Individuals who happen to own a security of that kind can not afford to go and should not be required to go before the State commission of any other State and qualify their security.

Mr. ROACH. If it is a fraudulent stock, the owner ought not to be allowed to sell it at all to anybody. He ought to be obliged to keep it himself.

Mr. DENISON. This exempts only isolated transactions, and I think will not result in any serious public harm.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] a question. What does paragraph (e), on page 10, mean? The section starts off by saying that "the provisions of this act shall not apply in any of the following transactions: "(e) To any bank, savings institution, trust company, insurance company, or to any corporation, or to any broker or dealer."

I can not quite see the connection between the first paragraph of this section and paragraph (e). That is not a transaction. All these other paragraphs relate to some transaction. The subparagraph relates to an instrumentality of business.

Mr. DENISON. I will read the connection. Section 5 reads as follows:

> That the provision of this act shall not apply when such security is transported in connection with, or when such letter, message, postal card, circular, or pamphlet relates exclusively to securities sold or offered for sale, subscription, or delivery in any of the following transactions: * * * (e) To any bank.

"Delivery * * * to any bank."

Mr. WALSH. "Delivery in * * * to any bank"?

Mr. DENISON. "Sale to any bank."

Mr. WALSH. That is not what it says or what it means.

Mr. DENISON. I have read it: "Transported in connection with"——

Mr. WALSH. It says, "Any of the following transactions." Paragraph (e) does not relate to any transaction whatever.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman know of any language that would make it more clear?

Mr. MERRITT. If you will change it to the word "with," you would make it clear.

Mr. WALSH. As the gentleman from Connecticut says, if the first word in subdivision (e) is changed to "with," it would be clear, or it would be clear if you would insert the language there "for sale, subscription, or delivery by or to any bank, savings institution, trust company, insurance company, or to any corporation, or to any broker or dealer." I submit to the gentleman for careful consideration the fact that this language as it is now worded does not make an exception at all, as it seems to me.

Mr. DENISON. The meaning and intention is to exempt, among other transactions, a sale that is made to a bank or savings institution or a trust company or any broker or dealer who is engaged in that business. That is the intention, to exempt transactions of that kind, and I think it would clearly be interpreted as meaning that.

Mr. WALSH. I think it would be interpreted to mean nothing, and it might be one of the most important transactions that you wish to have exempted.

Mr. DENISON. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that if it should be found that that does not carry out the meaning, I shall try and have it corrected later on.

Mr. WALSH. I trust the gentleman will examine this a little more carefully before we complete the bill, and if he finds it needs correcting he will ask leave to return to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may we have it read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 10, line 18, after the word "company," strike out the remaining part of line 18 and all of lines 19 and 20.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph, in the way in which it is worded, if modified as the gentleman from Massachusetts has suggested, and I think even as it is worded now, would authorize any of these sales of any securities, no matter how fraudulent, to be made to any corporation, or to any broker or to any dealer. They could send out their literature or stock to such agencies, without limit and no matter where located. In other words, no matter how fraudulent a transaction might be, if the corporation or its agents were wise enough to find some local dealer, some local corporation, or some local broker to whom they could sell the securities, the transaction would be perfectly legitimate up to that point. Now, it seems to me that would be allowing the fraudulent companies floating these securities to take the first step toward getting them diffused among the people. Why do you want to authorize a company that is trying to float a fraudulent transaction to send out its securities into every State in the Union and put them into the hands of brokers, dealers, and other people?

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. If they send them to a broker, the broker himself can not resell them without complying with the State law, and so the public is protected. We are not trying to protect brokers in this bill. We are trying to protect individuals.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Why permit them to be sent, even to brokers? What is the purpose in that? If it is a fraudulent security, why do you want to send it down to where some local people may have confidence in the local broker and buy it from him? Why not stop it at the fountain source? If it is a fraudulent concern that is trying to put out fraudulent stock, why do you say, "It is all right if you can find some gullible little broker in some little community upon whom you can unload that stock and who, in turn, in accordance with your privilege given in a previous section—that isolated transactions shall be exempt—can at least find some one sucker to whom he may sell a big block of these securities if he happens to have the money." Why extend such courtesies to a fraudulent concern?

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, if the broker should do that he would be violating the State law, and would thereby get himself into trouble.

Mr. JONES of Texas. He might go over into another State and do it.

Mr. DENISON. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES of Texas. He could by sending a post card or by sending information and not going himself.

Mr. DENISON. He could not do it under this act.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Let me give you an illustration where he could. Suppose a New York concern should issue a million dollars' worth of fraudulent securities. They send $100,000 of them out into Iowa and sell them to a broker there. This broker sends out a letter or a post card to some one in Missouri and induces that man to buy one issue of that stock. That is an isolated transaction under the definition of this very paragraph, and he could not be held as a violator of the national law, and he could not be held in Missouri because he is not in Missouri. So why allow this exemption? I do not see any good purpose that can be achieved or accomplished by saying to a man or a set of men who are trying to put over a scheme to defraud people, "It is all right; we will authorize and license you to send your securities to the local dealer and get them out over the country, where they will be more accessible to the people." Why throw the veil of respectability over the first step in a scheme to defraud?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think this is an important proposition, for the reason that there are going to be some violations of this law, as there are of all laws. Now, there is much less likelihood of a violation of the law if the man who is trying to float fraudulent securities is forbidden to move them to any agency of any State that has outlawed them, if he is forbidden to send post cards, messages, or circular letters anywhere, to any broker, to any dealer, or to anyone else whose sole purpose in securing them would be to unload them onto somebody else. So, why permit them to send them there? Surely, if a man is going to violate the law, he can much more easily escape by scattering these securities broadcast in the hands of brokers who may or may not be in collusion with him, or who may or may not be intending to defraud, but who would have the securities in their hands, where they would be next door to the man to whom they would like to sell them. I do not see any purpose that can be accomplished by this provision of the bill, and I do not see why the chairman or any member of the committee should be wedded to a provision that can have no sensible purpose and that will permit at least one step in the carrying out of a fraudulent transaction.

To permit a concern to send securities, known to be fraudulent, to any bank, broker, dealer, or commission man in any or all States of the Union will permit the man who intends to violate this law a measure of protection until he can get all his machinery organized and ready to swoop down on the unsuspecting.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. If my friend from Texas will examine the different State laws, he will find that nearly every one of them has this same provision, and in conference with the various administrative officers of the different States they have all recommended that this provision ought to be in the bill; that we ought to exempt sales to persons of these classes, because we are not trying to protect them. We are trying to protect the men who need protection. The men in this business are never defrauded, and we do not want to apply the law to them if they are not defrauded.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have known them to be defrauded, and I will state to the gentleman that if we can not improve a little on the State laws we are not making much progress in national legislation. Further, there might be some excuse for exempting them within the State where all the transactions will be subject to State laws; but here is a law that is going to permit them to go over into another State, where no State will have charge of them. When they send post cards or communications into another State, the State from which they are sent of course would not have jurisdiction of them, and the State to which they are sent would not have jurisdiction, and, therefore, regardless of any provision of any State law, the transaction would be legitimate in so far as sending to the broker is concerned; whereas in the States they have complete control of the transaction, so that an entirely different principle would apply. I can see no reason why this amendment should not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Texas) there were—ayes 13, noes 35.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 17, before the word "to" insert the words "the sale, transfer, or delivery."

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, this is simply to take care of the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and for any subsequent offense shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the penalty in this bill is in addition to the penalty imposed by the various State laws?

Mr. DENISON. There is no penalty under the State law for violation of this law.

Mr. LONDON. This is intended to supplement the State law, and a person violating the State law is subject to punishment.

Mr. DENISON. A person can be punished by the State for a violation of the State law, but this bill is to punish men for violating the law from outside of the State.

Mr. LONDON. Very well. Now, is the gentleman clear about the question I asked him before, whether mailing a letter within a State constitutes a violation of law?

Mr. DENISON. No; it does not.

Mr. LONDON. Is it not the use of an agency of the mail?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Section 3 of this bill provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to deposit in or cause to be deposited in the mail any letter, postal card, and so forth. Is not the very depositing of the letter in a post-office box a violation of this law?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all, because if the gentleman will read the latter part of the section it says "when in either case such letter, message, postal card," and so forth, "is addressed, sent, directed, or consigned to any person at any place in any other State," and so forth.

Mr. LONDON. It is all one sentence.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; all to be read together. This bill only applies to transactions through the mail when a person in one State sends his communication to a person in another State. It does not apply to transactions within the State—the theory being that that is a transaction the State ought to handle, with which the Federal Government should not concern itself.

Mr. LONDON. What is the usual penalty provided by the State?

Mr. DENISON. They vary. I think the State of Massachusetts has a very high fine for a violation of the law of that State. In some other States the penalty is less. We have placed this penalty at a point that we thought would be severe enough to inspire a sound respect for its provisions.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. As I understand, it would be a crime to sell these securities in Oklahoma, say, if they had a law against it.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; if the securities had not been qualified under that law.

Mr. McPHERSON. In Kansas, if there was no law, there would be no crime?

Mr. DENISON. There would be no crime.

Mr. McPHERSON. Does the committee believe and did you investigate the question as to whether or not Congress may make it a crime in one State when the same act committed in another State would be an innocent act?

Mr. DENISON. We do not do that. This bill is based on the theory that the States have and ought to have a right to protect their own citizens in such a way as they think best against the sale of fraudulent securities, and the Federal Government ought to go this far and not permit the use of its agencies to violate the State laws. Now, if a State does not care to protect its own citizens against that class of fraud, the Federal Government will not take upon itself the duty to protect the citizens of that State.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not think the gentleman quite understood my question. This situation exists: In the transmission of a letter the same stock might be sent in one case, and even though the stock referred to was fraudulent, it would be no offense because there was no local law forbidding it, while in another case if sent in another direction into interstate commerce, the very same letter would be a crime.

Mr. DENISON. Exactly; because in one case it is unlawful and in the other it is not.

Mr. McPHERSON. In other words, the nonexistence or existence of the local law makes it a crime?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; a good instance of such legislation is the Webb-Kenyon law.

Mr. McPHERSON. There was a clear prohibition in that case because of the eighteenth amendment.

